Index to Reviews, Comments, and Stories of the Films

Appended is a list of subjects covered by our reviews and comments and the synopses furnished by the manufacturers released for the three months ending December 31, 1917. This list of releases with dates is as accurate as it is possible to make it with the information that we have received from the companies whose productions are included. Should any of our readers detect errors, we shall be pleased to have our attention called to them so that we may correct our card index. The letter before the folio indicates the page where the review, comment, or synopsis can be found. "R" stands for review; "C" for comment; "S" for synopsis; and "A" for advertising aids. Where reference letter is omitted to either review or comment it signifies that none was published, and the omission of reference letter "S" indicates that synopsis was not furnished by the manufacturer. Of the later releases where any or all reference letters are omitted it may be said that the missing information, or part of it, will probably be published in the next volume.

(N. B.—Synopses, comments, or reviews of episodes of serials or series are indexed in connection with general title of such serial or series and not under title of each episode. Date shown for Pathe and Universal subjects indicates the week during which they were released.

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS INC.

¶ We have purchased from Messrs. Lee Shubert, Arthur Hammerstein and Ralph Ince a remarkable picture—"The Co-Respondent." It is a "production" in the best sense, such as discriminating lovers of photoplays have learned to expect from the direction of Mr. Ince.

¶ Elaine Hammerstein, skilled interpreter of sympathetic roles, carries the honors of the name part, supported by Wilfred Lucas and a typical Ince cast. The settings are on a plane with the somewhat remarkable personnel of the company, and the play abounds in dramatic moments.

¶ As a gently bred small town girl who becomes a successful newspaper woman in the metropolis, and unwittingly the co-respondent in a famous divorce case, Miss Hammerstein adds an unusual beautiful portrait to the growing JEWEL gallery.

¶ JEWEL Productions already released include: "Come Through", George Bronson Howard's greatest melodrama; "Sirens of the Sea", the picture magnificent; "Pay Me", the big drama of the West. These three were produced by the Universal. The fourth is "The Man Without a Country", now playing to capacity at the Broadway Theatre, New York. It was produced by Thannhauser. A fifth soon to be released is "The Price of a Good Time", produced by Lois Weber.

¶ With such offerings progressive managers can achieve and maintain the lead for their theatres. Book through the nearest JEWEL Exchange, or direct from the home office.

A Chip Of the Old Block
That's Charles Ray in his latest Thomas H. Ince production; he makes 'em sit up and take notice at every stage of the game as the "governor" did before him.
The picture's a "chip of the old block," too. A regularly ordained member of the Ince family of hits. Full of the spice and "pep" that distinguishes the extraordinary from the ordinary.
If you put as much punch in your advertising as we've put into the picture, its success in your theatre is a foregone conclusion.

"The Highest Standard In Motion Pictures"

Advanced Motion Photography

¶ Simultaneously with the coming of Perfection Pictures, a new era of advanced motion photography is announced. Not content with attaining PERFECTION in stories, casts, and productions, the makers of Perfection Pictures have set out to establish new high standards of advanced motion photography.

¶ A new method of laboratory procedure has been evolved. A huge machine, weighing fifteen tons and costing $100,000.00, has been invented. It bears the same relation to the motion picture film as the great printing press of the day bears to modern printed literature. It insures to Perfection Pictures unexcelled clearness, brilliancy, and ease of viewing.

¶ This advanced motion photography, exemplified only in Perfection Pictures, is instantly perceptible on the screen. It indicates that in every detail, stories, casts, staging, photography—Perfection Pictures are all that their name suggests—"The Highest Standard in Motion Pictures." Exhibitors may obtain complete details of the Perfection Policy at the Exchanges of the George Kleine System throughout America. A new Perfection Picture in five or six reels is released each week.

Prophecies Fulfilled

The temptation to boast "I told you so" is great, but the critics are so generous in their praise that we realize that the wisest course we can pursue is to merely transmit to you their words of disinterested praise, rather than our own words of exultant acclaim.

Telegraph (New York), September 3.

One of the most elaborate, beautiful and appealing film offerings ever presented. "Little Mary," with her effervescent youth, her genuine comedy and her knowledge of dramatic technique, is the ideal person to immortalize the little girl of the New England village.

Journal (New York), September 5.

Mary Pickford's presentation of "The Poor Little Rich Girl" will live long in the hearts of American picture patrons. However, even greater than "The Poor Little Rich Girl" is "Rebecca" . . . the crowning achievement of her wonderful career.

Tribune (New York), September 3.

Now, along comes "Rebecca," and all must capitulate. Miss Pickford is quite irresistible and never has she had such wonderful opportunities. The story is delightful.

Herald (New York), September 3.

Probably no other actress could even approach her in suitability to this role.

Sun (New York), September 3.

Mary Pickford is big hit at Strand. . . . It gives Miss Pickford another chance to play a small girl who, as she puts it herself, is only "the beginnings of a young lady," and to reveal that her winsome vein of comedy has not suffered arrested development through being subdued in her previous pictures to the more important purposes of making folks shiver and gasp.

It doesn't take much showmanship to put across a Mary Pickford picture, but that doesn't mean that good showmanship and progressive advertising won't make it a still greater success.

THE WARRIOR

The Motion Picture News tells the story in a nutshell-

"The Warrior has one feature which will be difficult to duplicate in any other dramatic picture that the war produces—good comedy. Maciste is a giant, all of seven feet in height, and when he grabs husky soldiers by the heels and tosses them laughingly over precipices—sure enough precipices—the tragedy of high explosives is considerably diluted. Maciste pushes full grown horses and trees over as if they were so much papier mache. He is the 'original and only genuine' strong man of the movies."

PARALTA PLAYS

PICK OF THE PICTURES

PARALTA PLAYS WILL NOT

Be Distributed by Triangle Distributing Corporation!

THE contract between Paralta Plays, Inc., and Triangle Distributing Corporation has been abrogated by mutual consent.

In this agreement it was provided that should Stephen A. Lynch sell his interest in the Triangle Distributing Corporation, the contract with Paralta should terminate.

On September 10, Mr. Lynch notified Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., that he was about to dispose of his interest in the Triangle Distributing Corporation. All contractual relations between the two corporations were then annulled by consent of both parties.

THIS situation in no way affects the activities of the Paralta organization, which has expended over ONE MILLION DOLLARS since it was organized in March last and now has ready to release six big star feature pictures—"A MAN'S MAN," "MADAM WHO," "ROSE O' PARADISE." TURN OF A CARD," "ALIMONY" and "THE GOLDEN THREAD"—with which to demonstrate the value of its original idea. Exhibitors may secure Paralta Plays under the Paralta Plan exactly in the manner previously advertised.

Five companies are now engaged in work on productions at the Paralta studios at Hollywood, Cal., and in sixty days Paralta will have five more big star feature attractions ready for distribution.

EVERY exhibitor owes it to himself to wait and see all these Paralta pictures before booking his time solidly for the season. Do not lock your doors against such obviously big money-drawing propositions as these photo-plays by entirely filling your time.

Paralta's plans are now completed and work is in progress on an output of fifty-two big star feature attractions to be completed before the first anniversary of the organization of its studios, June 4, 1918.

PARALTA PLAYS

PICK OF THE PICTURES

The Following Brains, Talents and Personalities Are Combined In Making PARALTA PLAYS:

Stars

Bessie Barriscale, who has brought the purest delight to the hearts of countless millions the world over.

J. Warren Kerrigan, the first big screen star, and his popularity growing vaster day by day.

Henry B. Walthall, the master genius of poetic romance; whose rank in photoplay is that of Edgar Allan Poe in literature.

Rhea Mitchell, unequalled in portrayal of intense emotions. At her bidding you weep, you hate, you love.

Howard Hickman, a lovable old man to-day, a dashing young blood to-morrow. His art so great, you like him even as a scheming villain.

Clara Williams, always human, sympathetic, and impulsive. The embodiment of all that is sweet and tender.

Lois Wilson, whose fascinating personality and superb skill have earned her the epithet: "The Splendid Girl."

Stories

PARALTA PLAYS, Inc., has made a definite and conclusive arrangement whereby the exclusive optional screen rights of all books and stories, present and future, by the following well-known authors are reserved for PARALTA PLAYS:

Thus the following are a few of the authors from now on working with PARALTA:

MRS. WILSON WOODROW
CHARLES NEVILLE BUCK
LARRY EVANS
ETHEL S. and JAMES F. DORRANCE
FREDERICK ARNOLD KUMMER
"TEX" O'REILLY
RUPERT HUGHES

In addition, the Paralta scenario department is headed by Monte Katterjohn under whose supervision are sixteen writers and dramatists engaged in originating screen plays and adapting material accepted by the board of directors.

Studios

PARALTA PLAYS are directed by

Reginald Barker, whose unforgetable productions such as "Shell 43"—"The Bugle Call"—"Sweetheart of the Doomed"—"The Sign of the Rose"—"The Typhoon"—etc., have made fortunes for exhibitors and distributors.

Oscar Apfel, with an enviable record of super production turned out by him for Metro, Fox, Paramount, and his masterpiece of direction, "A MAN'S MAN," the first PARALTA PLAY starring J. WARREN KERRIGAN.

Raymond B. West, an ardent disciple of Thomas Ince, outgrowing his environs—his genius surely outdistancing even his former master. One of the fourteen really great directors of motion pictures.

These men have produced great photoplays in the past, under difficulties, fighting their way to the top. Now they are arrived, and it is by way of under-statement to say that their past records vouch for the excellence of PARALTA PLAYS.

And there is

ROBERT BRUNTON, in the capacity of Manager of Productions. It was only while HE was general art director in the Culver City studios that Triangle pictures reached their zenith. His achievements in the motion picture field are too well known to warrant recital. Suffice it to say that PARALTA PLAYS, Inc., considers it a stroke of good fortune to have secured the services of this art master.

We are naming only the very mountain tops of the organization in whose hands rests the production of PARALTA PLAYS. These men have gathered around them a most complete executive and working personnel. Admitted by all, our organization is the finest on the Coast.

It was conceived and accomplished by

ROBERT T. KANE,

Attention: Mr. Herbert Brenon.

Gentlemen:-

Your letter of Sept. 3rd, received and noted, and in reply would state that "The Lone Wolf" to the writer's way of thinking was one of the best productions that we have ever shown at our Strand Theatre, and pictures of this kind would certainly make the picture game a better proposition if the producers would feature the titles and eliminate the stars so as to make the production go over without stars.

The patrons of our Strand appreciated your endeavors in this production very much and hope you will continue to keep producting pictures of this class.

Yours very truly,

Dear Mr. Brennon:-

In answer to your letter of recent date, relative to "The Lone Wolf," played at Proctor's Griswold, we wish to say that it was an exceptional feature and apart from the beaten path.

Our patrons enjoyed it because it kept them continually guessing as to what the climax would be and there were also enough thrills in it to hold one's attention for the entire seven reels. Our patrons like stories of this kind and we have found that features like these are our best money-getters.

Mr. Lytell's work was well liked. If his first attempt in pictures can be judged by "The Lone Wolf," he surely ought to have a splendid future.

More features like "The Lone Wolf" would be a God-send to exhibitors.

More power to you.

Replying to your favor of Aug. 23d with reference to your production "The Lone Wolf" we want to express our sincere appreciation of your very unusual picture

From a box office standpoint it proved a great success and apparently pleased everyone who saw it. We liked the picture so much that we intend showing it another week in this theatre next month.

"The Lone Wolf" was a mighty good picture from every angle and hope you will make others of the same variety.

My dear Mr. Brenon:-

Replying to yours of Sept. 2nd, in re-to LONE WOLF am indeed glad to state that the picture gave excellent satisfaction and personally I reviewed it twice myself, my patrons expressed the same delight in my bringing it to Sedalia, the story was intense and one could not tell what the ending was to be until the very last of the picture, stories of this nature are liked at this time as I think the picture, stories of this etc. are on the wane, one reason why the HART pictures are so popular is for the fact that he has something different and done in a finished way, he always has a little simple love story, as well as thrills and lots of human interest interwoven.

Your Lone Wolf, had all that, you also had the Automobile, Aeroplane, and other modern thrillers, the direction as well as acting and photography was good indeed.

Mr. Lytell is sure to be a favorite, is my prediction.

As to what is liked in Sedalia, I think I am safe in saying that plays with what I have outlined above will always make good, as the "old stuff of wronged girl and society" is about done for.

Thanking you for your inquiry and interest, I am

Dear Sir:-

Replying to your letter of August 23rd relative to "The Lone Wolf" which was played at the Circle Theatre the week of August 12th.

I take pleasure in advising that the picture got over in splendid shape and was quite a sensational success, creating much talk. The Circle's clientelle as exclusive and intelligent as the most utopian could desire and it will therefore be of interest to you to know that the picture, even as melodramatic as this is, appeals so widely. Personally, I think it is a splendid production, quite one of the best things you have done and while I would not like to see you devote your entire artistic genius to stories of this type, I believe that at frequent intervals you will find that similar stories will enjoy the success of "The Lone Wolf".

I have been familiar with your productions from the earliest days of the motion picture, always admiring your artistic prospective and dramatic concention and trust that the future will provide even greater opportunity for a fuller expression of your work. Very truly yours.

gigantic picturization of the greatest national drama in the history of the world

THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS

is now ready for immediate delivery to buyers of territorial rights, together with challenging lithographs and all necessary accessories

THIS panoramic production of a nation's dissolution is the history of the day and the moment —bigger than any melodrama ever written.

Its principals are the rulers of the world's great nations lifted bodily out of history in the making and portrayed by famous men and women of the screen.

The story is a picturization of the front pages of every newspaper in the world each day for the past six months and will continue to be for months to come.

Fifty million dollars in cash could not have bought the publicity already obtained for this production.

It is the only picture that will be shown in America with THE REAL ILIODOR as one of its principals, as we have taken legal action under our contract to prevent the imitation of our title or any use whatever of Iliodor's fame and reputation by promoters seeking to market another picture on the strength of Herbert Brenon's remarkable campaign in behalf of his own master-work.

WHEN you figure the power of "THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" in filling theatres because of its gripping appeal to the imagination of people in all lands, remember also that your greatest asset for popularity with the public is HERBERT BRENON'S NAME AND REPUTATION.

He is the genius of the screen who never makes a weak production.

He is the master who appealed to the world's love of beauty with "A Daughter of the Gods."

He is the daring director who challenged the world's conscience with his "War Brides."

He is the director of the most remarkable screen melodrama ever made, "The Lone Wolf."

He is the maker of stars and the creator of publicity and exploitation that is the envy of the trade.

Buyers of territorial rights to "THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" therefore are obtaining as their biggest of all exploitation elements behind this mighty picturization of world history THE POWER OF HERBERT BRENON'S REPUTATION as the director of profit-making productions.

Crowds Smash Doors to See "RASPUTIN" at Park Theatre

(Headline in New York Evening World)

New York Evening World:—

"It is not often that a Broadway playhouse has its front door smashed by a crowd of late comers who cannot get even standing room, but that is what happened last night at the Park Theatre. The occasion for the demonstration was the first showing of 'Rasputin, The Black Monk,' which proved to be one of the most elaborate moving picture productions that has ever been offered."

New York Tribune:—

"No coupon seats were sold, and the management fondly imagined that roping off a portion of the theatre would secure it for their guests and for the newspaper critics the opening night. ABOUT 10,000 PERSONS CLAMORED FOR ADMISSION, however, and a third that number swarmed into the theatre and helped themselves to the best seats without any assistance from the ushers.

"The picture runs for two hours, but at no time does it fail to entertain."

New York Times:—

"The first public exhibition of Rasputin, The Black Monk,' a motion picture dealing with the Russian revolution, drew so huge a crowd to the vicinity of the Park Theatre last night that it finally became necessary to call out the police reserves. The film, which depicts interestingly the rise to power and subsequent downfall of Russia's celebrated monk, is remarkable."

New York Sun:—

"The Park Theatre HAS NOT IN YEARS HAD SUCH A LARGE THRONG FLOCK TO IT AS THAT WHICH BESIEGED ITS DOORS LAST NIGHT TO VIEW 'RASPUTIN, THE BLACK MONK.' The crowd became so unruly THE POLICE RESERVES HAD TO BE CALLED OUT."

New York Herald:—

"'Rasputin,' William A. Brady's mad monk, was projected at the Park Theatre last night as the chief character in a photoplay founded on the Russian revolution. The crowd that surged about the entrance and struggled for admission was as interesting as the picture. The house was filled before half the crowd could get up to the entrance, and it took twenty minutes to clear the lobby and the street of the overflow."

New York Journal:—

"Montagu Love arises to the heights of his splendid career in his portrayal of the greatest imposter the world has ever known—the man who tumbled over the Russian throne. His acting in the title role in 'Rasputin, The Black Monk,' the World-Picture Brady-Made, which is being presented at the Park Theatre, is a masterpiece.

"Unquestionably it is the best so far seen and is sure to create a sensation everywhere as it is doing at the Park Theatre, where the Brady picture was presented for the first time on Wednesday night before an enormous crowd.

"'Rasputin, The Black Monk' was produced under the personal direction of Mr. Brady. The photography is consistently good, many of the scenes being wonderfully beautiful. It is a picture well worth seeing and will undoubtedly enjoy a long run."

Gentlemen:-

I have just closed a most successful EIGHT weeks engagement of "THE WHIP" four Hundred and Four performances at Quinn's Rialto,on Broadway Los Angeles.This being the record of any picture ever shown here considering the number of shows.

Due to previous bookings I was unable to keep it on longer, however I am not through with the film as I intend to run it for some time to come at other down town houses and the suburban theatres as well.The business done on "THE WHIP" would warrant from four to five weeks more at Quinn'S Rialto as can be seen by flash light taken at the last of the Eighth week.

The WHIP is a production for the masses and a most pleasing picture.Patrons of this house have remarked at the Box Office that it was their fourth ,fifth and even sixth time,having seen it..therefore the reason that "THE WHIP" holds the record not only for this theatre but for the entire city.

Very Truly Yours

J. J. Quinn

This picture and letter, added to many similar pictures and letters, proves how big "The Whip" goes wherever it is shown.

Facts and Comments

WHILE it is necessary to keep pointing out the faults and indicating lines of improvement along every possible angle, we would not overlook the wonderful strides that the whole industry has made within the past year or two. Few of us stop long enough to compare the productions of today with those of yesterday, although we are vaguely conscious of marked differences. A few months since or at most a year or two ago, we were raving over the improvement in photography, or settings, or lighting effects, or continuity, or some other forward steps in a new production, most of which would be more or less crude, judged by the standards of today. Most of our producers are spending great care and thought and much money to secure the best brains and the best results possible. We claim they are getting great results too, notwithstanding the croaking of those who have not been able to break into the game for lack of ability.

SPEAKING of improvements reminds us that all of the forward steps have not been taken by the producers or manufacturers only. The finer points of the exhibiting end are by no means being overlooked. Manager Rothapfel of the New York Rialto, for instance, keeps bringing out new ideas and improvements and seems just as dissatisfied with present achievements as he was with those of seven or eight years ago. It is this attitude on the part of all our live managers and exhibitors throughout the country that has resulted in the many improvements and new wrinkles we now find in our theaters and their management and it is this same ingenuity which is going to result in improvements and ideas for comfort, convenience, enlightenment and entertainment not yet dreamed of.

A QUESTION or complaint box or mail receptacle in the theater is an excellent plan and one that might be followed to advantage in every theater, certainly in many more houses than at present. A loss to our picture theater audiences that we particularly deplore, and one that is of greater magnitude than many of our theater managers seem to realize, are the people who have been patrons and friends of the pictures, but whose sensibilities have been outraged by one or more productions they unfortunately have seen, and who, as a consequence, have simply decided to stay away altogether or who only go once in two or three months, when they used to see the pictures at least once or twice every week. How often do we hear remarks about as follows: "Oh, I used to like the pictures at the ——— theater, but the last few times I was there I felt it was a waste of time or I felt insulted by the portrayal on the screen. Consequently, I hardly ever see a picture nowadays." Keep in touch with your audience and in case they do not feel like criticizing openly or in person, get their viewpoint even if from an anonymous note dropped into a convenient receptacle in the theater. Keep your patrons, do not lose them!

WILL the management of the two theaters on Fourteenth street, just west of Broadway, New York City, never pass into the hands of those possessing a modicum of pride in the industry? What an eyesore; what an offense against ordinary intelligence; what a glaring example of "frightfulness" is the advertising on the front of these two theaters and it has been the same for all these years, as far as we can recall. That this outrage called advertising has done more to prejudice thousands of passersby, and especially people in this city who never go to see pictures, against the films and their influence is a fact that cannot be challenged. The writer has spoken with friends on many occasions, whose sole opinion of moving pictures and of moving picture theaters had quite evidently been gleaned from these two horrible examples. Occasional visits to smaller towns and cities hereabout reveals picture theater managers who have the same wrong ideas as to advertising their shows. It must be said, in justice to these smaller cities, however, that such houses are usually in side streets and out of the way locations, and quite evidently cater to a low order of intelligence. While the New York theaters are evidently controlled by and cater to the same order of intelligence, unfortunately they are located on a most prominent thoroughfare and in full view of all Broadway traffic, hence the greater amount of harm to the whole industry.

Fictitious Standards

By Louis Reeves Harrison

MANY of the "Get-Rich-Quick" producers are now ruefully contemplating half-deserted studios, where once were scenes of tremendous activity, where the yards were filled with costumed actors in ghostly makeup, with cynical cameramen and disdainful directors with automobiles scurrying back and forth, a picturesque Vanity Fair. Behind all this life and movement was the Get-Rich-Quick Corporation, a fine commercial organization, with plenty of capital, capable employees, business system, ripened experience and an established name. Why should such a modern concern, with prospects as bright as a peacock's crest, falter and fall down? .

It is is easy enough to account for the wreckage of small concerns by the regular formula, "poor management," a general term to cover a multitude of inanities, but it is contrary to all rules and regulations in the commercial world that good financial methods, care in the conduct of trade and close attention to the principles and purposes of business should fail to produce the desired result, even put a strong concern out of the running. It is more puzzling than the carefully watched fire which refuses to burn.

It can be fairly suspected that men who do not get rich in the wonderful chances afforded by motion picture production, who have all the resources of wealth, experience and good judgment in commercial affairs at their disposal, limit their activities to those mastered in ordinary business training and are blinded by the restraints of sagacious business method to the boundless opportunities freely offered by the most beautiful and comprehensive art of expression the world has ever known. The situation of no concern is hopeless. There is involved a readjustment, greater breadth of view in some directions, and a reduction of extravagance in others.

"By way of illustration," as the after-dinner speakers say when about to tell a story—only this is a true one—there was once a manager who had a magnificent studio at his command, a fine company of actors at his beck and call, and established brand, fine distributive outlet and plenty of money in the background. Like a good business man he started out by digesting and assimilating the judgment and experience of men who had opportunity to observe all the shifting changes in motion picturedom. Among others he called two members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD staff into conference. He welcomed us with open armed cordiality.

By this very sagacious method Mr. Manager obtained a lot of information for nothing. He read the columns of our paper and paid close attention to what was there noted of progress and improvement in production. He succeeded in a large way, but having, as he thought, milked us dry, he began to grow indifferent. We could cool our heels on the outside after that—he knew it all. He read only that part of the paper which directly pertained to himself personally, or to his studio, meanwhile assuming the attitude of an authority on a subject he had really never studied.

Every conceivable advantage was in Mr. Manager's hands to do a volume of profitable business amounting to millions, and he rose as far as his scant information on the subject permitted, but he then stood still, while others passed him by. He is completely out of the game today, though he has made ineffectual attempts to return. His fine company is scattered; his business organization is demolished; there remains simply, so far as he is concerned, a monument to the super-egotism of those men who fail to realize the marvelous opportunities within their reach, who have not got it in them to attain a high standard.

The case of Mr. Manager illustrates that of others. He took himself lightly at first and his work seriously. He reached his limit when he began to take himself seriously and his work lightly. He failed to grasp the proper relation of three branches of artistry in motion picture production and could not readjust himself to those new tendencies which move forward toward a finer standard of production. Motion picture theaters throughout the country can only remain vital when they keep pace with the growth of our times. To do this they must have screen stories which keep pace with that growth. They must have something vital to show.

Men early in the game fattened on its novelty. They made money because the medium itself was new, fresh and original. They placed a fictitious value on the medium on that account and did not respond to the changing character of audience demand. Instead of appealing to public fondness for what was new, fresh and original, they depended on repetition and imitation, even upon perverting the medium to suit diseased taste. Their standards were false.

One reason why so many producing concerns fail is because the men in charge of them start with one idea and attempt some outworn system which no amount of subsequent bolstering can carry on to high success. They become bewildered when they collapse, cannot realize that they have done themselves and others harm in not giving first consideration to the fact that they are dealing with a delicate art, one almost impalpable—they can feel the medium itself, but its purposes and influences are beyond the rough hand of hard commercialism to touch.

Take any theme, that of "misplaced affection," for instance. Picture a cottage dining room. A clean cloth is laid, and a bright little table is set for dinner, a tiny bunch of flowers to give it sweetness and color, the work of willing hands and a fond heart. The clock shows the dinner hour has passed. At the window, holding up the curtain and gazing sadly out is a young wife. On her face is the strained expression of one who has waited in miserable silence and in vain. The greatest heartaches come to those who love and have to endure careless lack of appreciation. Impress her drooping figure on the mind and turn to another picture.

There he is, in the corner of the bar, taking just one more drink. He is a man to the core, yet a man diseased by habit. He smiles in a sickly recognition that he is not doing the right thing by the little wife with an aching heart, but his will is enslaved by mastering habit. Having no longer a dominating will over himself, he is no longer a real man, but a poor weakling in whose hands has been placed the life and happiness of a loving woman. Brutality wins, and there is tragedy in the air.

Just two pictures, and the story is clearly indicated, but it takes the mind of an artist to conceive the effect and the hand of an artist to impress it. All this is beyond the reach of the unimaginative and methodical mind. So are all the undreamed of dramas of human existence on which we must depend in the future for what is fresh, new and original. The standard of motion picture production which we must attain to hold progressive public favor does not depend upon the supporting accessories of good business management, not upon dramatic platitudes, but upon genius, upon the creative artist who is and has been regarded as a mere tributary to the business manager's bank account.

"The Right Dope" By Sam Spedon

DO YOU know that idea set forth by the "Producers Protective Association" is just what is needed to engender confidence in the film industry? We have in mind the compilation of screen statistics and information for the use of banking interests, keeping the banks posted concerning market conditions, cost of production, etc., etc.

It would also give prospective investors some much needed data. Besides it would prove a great boon to those who are seeking for credit ratings. This would do more to clear up the industry and put it on a sound basis than anything else we know of. It would go a long way, too, towards putting an end to the "fly by night" concerns which the association deplores and says infect the independent producing branch.

A Long Felt Want.

We have wondered why the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry hasn't established a department of this kind and the name of a gentleman well qualified to conduct such a bureau occurs to us. It would fill a much needed want. It might lead to the founding of a reference and information bureau where prospective employers could get a line on prospective employees, who would be well recommended and vouched for. We have just learned that the N. A. M. P. I. is about to start some such bureau.

Nothing Like Getting Acquainted.

Judging from the number of film men who are and have been swinging round the moving picture theater circuit they are rapidly introducing themselves to the managers. The question that disturbs our mind is—do they go to see or be seen? To get at real conditions and learn all about them would it not be better to go unadvertised and incognito just like an ordinary patron? The uniformed clergyman never gets next to human nature because when people see him coming they are on their guard and never show themselves as they really are. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. One is apt to exclaim "Cheese it! Here comes the minister!" To impress others with a sense of our own importance and superiority is to suppress the very intimacy we desire.

"They Know Not That They Know Not."

We know that we know that there are a whole lot of people in the industry who don't know that they don't know half as much as they pretend to know. There are just two reasons why some persons in the industry are making a "bull" of it in their several endeavors. One is they know too much and the other is they don't know. Both lead to one and the same thing. "He who knows that he knows he is wise—follow him;" "he who knows and knows not that he knows, he is asleep—wake him." "He who knows not and knows not that he knows not, he is a fool—shun him." "He who knows not and knows that he knows not, he is a child—teach him."

He who knows not that most people are from Missouri, and he has got to show us, is coveted by the squirrels—they are wise to him.

Motion Pictures at War Convention.

Last week we attended the War Convention of American Business at Atlantic City, N. J., held under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America. You know that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was recently admitted to membership in the Chamber of Commerce; this led us to attend the convention. We expected to see a large and impressive representation from the N. A. M. P. I., but ye humble scribe and Executive Secretary Elliott were the only members present. We endeavored to make ourselves as noticeable as possible, by registering our names and wearing the badges of the Chamber, presented to us after inscribing our "John Henries." We were duly recognized and the freedom of the convention hall was given us after being introduced to those in authority. We listened to the many eminent speakers from all parts of the world and came home with much enlightenment on matters of national importance, brought about by the present war crisis. We could not help but think what a golden opportunity was lost by some of our able and silver tongued orators who might have given that vast assemblage of business men some idea of the work the motion picture industry is doing in behalf of the world, in upholding the hands of the President during the mighty struggle now in progress. Do not think for a moment that motion pictures were lost sight of. Everywhere throughout the building the lenses of the news weekly cameras were focused on the speakers or taking a panorama of the crowded hall. Again as the people left the hall they were confronted by the man at the crank and no one escaped him. These pictures will be seen all over the world and speak more eloquently for the industry than the words of tongue or pen. Much credit is due the Secretary of the N. A. M. P. I. for securing the services of these news weeklies and having them at the convention.

Not So Bad

By Sam Spedon.

WE do not pretend to know it all, but in the course of our meditations on business conditions we are led to believe our conclusions are worth printing with the hope they may lead others to think along the same lines, helping get at facts that may bring about a solution of the whys and wherefores of business conditions. From our viewpoint it isn't such a bad business after all. There must be something radically wrong with some of those engaged in it and not with the business. We heard a man declare: "Today the motion picture industry is a stable business." To which someone replied, "Yes. It is full of 'stalls,' but I never saw anything but the rear ends of their occupants."

A Basis.

For the sake of argument let us say there are 16,000 motion picture theaters in America, each one using a service costing on an average $35 a day, which would amount to $174,720,000 a year. If you think this is too much let us reduce the amount expended by each of the 16,000 theaters for service to an average of $25 a day, which would amount to $124,800,000.

Just an Idea.

This gives us some idea of the amount of money in circulation for which the producers of pictures are struggling each year. Figuring on a basis of fifty established producers, each producer would have an income of $3,494,400 a year, computing $35 as the cost of daily service of each of the sixteen hundred theaters. At an average of $25 a day each of the fifty producers would have an income of $2,496,000 a year. Assuming that each of the fifty producers produced 10,000 feet a week at two dollars a foot, aggregating 520,000 feet a year, he would expend $1,400,000 a year, which leaves each of the fifty producers a net profit of $2,434,400 a year, figuring from the thirty-five dollars a day service, and figuring from the twenty-five dollar a day service he would have a net profit of $1,456,000 a year.

What's the Trouble?

Our deductions from this basis of calculation leads us to believe there must be a great amount of waste in production or in excessive expenditures in salaries, mismanagement or something. Or else there must be too many producers of one kind and another who are getting a slice here and there which make it impossible for the standard producers to secure their proportionate and deserved share of the vast amount of money in circulation.

It also leads us to believe there is great need of concentration and standardization of productions and prices for which there seems to be an earnest drive on the part of some producers to establish. We must not forget, however, that this must be done on an equitable and just basis with the exhibitors, according to their circumstances and the conditions under which they have to do business. The trinity of success is the producer, the exhibitor and the public; three in one and one in three.

Only Scratched.

"The surface of the motion picture art and industry has only been scratched." How often have we heard this and how true it is. It has been battered and abused but after all it has only been scratched. It has lived and triumphed over all obstacles and objections. Its future grows brighter and larger every day. From the despised "movies" it has become the educator and emancipator of the masses. It is the exponent of democracy and aid to the Allied Governments in the present struggle for universal peace and happiness. Add to what has been done the educational, industrial and advertising possibilities of the screen and you will be convinced that to the making of moving pictures there is no end.

"Comic Relief" in the Photoplay

By Edward Weitzel.

THE classification of the photoplay has not kept pace with its development in almost all its other phases, but a factor is slowly creeping in that is bound to effect the graduation of the product of the screen. This is the so-called "comic relief" that has had such a long and honorable career in the spoken school and without which aid to success no dramatist of the old school would have attempted to lay out his plots. At its lowest estate this "comic relief" was a direct descendant of the antics of the clown that grinned through a horse collar at the county fairs, when English drama had not advanced beyond the moralities of the church and the fools of Shakespeare were as yet unborn. The humor of the slapstick and the bladder was familiar to the human mobs of the time, and every man Jack was ready to roar with laughter when his neighbor was pounded with the one or beaten with the other.

This method of driving home the point of a joke is still relished by many amusement seekers, and there are other good set rules for exciting the mirth of the spectator—well-tried bits of business that have been handed down from the Middle Ages, in company with a long list of sayings and jokes that never fail to amuse a certain order of intellect.

When the drama came into its own with the works of Shakespeare, that master mind recognized the demands of one element among the audiences at the Globe theater and never failed to write in parts for his clowns. Even Hamlet has the grave-diggers. The long line of playwrights that followed the Bard of Avon have generally respected this rule and have seen to it that their plays contained one or more characters whose sole purpose was to furnish "comic relief." The day is not long passed when David Belasco held the method in high esteem and made his dramas conform to the honorable conventionality.

With the advent of Ibsen the old method of construction was discarded and plays were built without any "comic relief." Whatever humor found its way into a drama was the legitimate outcome of the plot and belonged to the development of the story. The best stage drama of today follows this example.

Within the last year the photo play has shown a tendency to adopt the old device. Pretentious screen dramas have been equipped with a "comic relief" as crude and as extraneous as that of the popular price dramas of the last decade. And many good and worthy persons are vastly entertained by this portion of the pictures.

Another and more discriminating element among screen patrons have found this "comic relief" anything but pleasing. They have strong objections to any suggestion of physical uncleanliness or to witnessing a human being disposing of articles of food and displaying the table manners of a four footed animal. They have also neglected to cultivate a taste for the humors of the slapstick or an adroitly planted kick. The patronage of such persons is an important matter, and their influence will result in a better classification of the photoplay. This is one of the greatest needs of the art.

Ben Grimm in Signal Corps

Moving Picture World Reporter Puts on Khaki—Is Volunteer in the Signal Service Stationed at Camp Alfred Vail, Little Silver, N. J.

BEN H. GRIMM, for some time connected with the editorial staff of the Moving Picture World and one of the most popular of the motion picture trade paper men in New York, has joined Uncle Sam's war forces and has probably earned the distinction of being the first of the New York picture trade paper men to volunteer his services for war. He has been assigned to Depot Company H., S. E. R. C., at Camp Alfred Vail, Little Silver, N. J., and reported for duty on Saturday, September 22.

Ben H. Grimm.

Ben Grimm joined the staff of the Moving Picture World about a year ago. Prior to that time he was connected with the Metro Company on the coast where he was engaged in publicity work. He had an extensive newspaper training with the New York American and Evening Journal, for which publications he covered many important assignments.

While on the Moving Picture World Mr. Grimm qualified as a reviewer of pictures in a most acceptable manner and the State Rights Department was under his direction from its inception, in fact his work was, from every point of view, performed carefully and seriously, so that his resignation leaves a distinct void that will not be readily filled. So distinctly is this appreciated that there will always be a place on the World for Ben when he returns after the war is over. We wish him luck.

New Committees of National Association Chosen —New Members—Joins United States Chamber of Commerce—Service Bureau Almost Ready—Members at Last Meeting

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry perfected its administrative committee for the ensuing year on Thursday, September 20, at the quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors.

Executive Committee.

President William A. Brady presented his appointments for members of the Executive Committee. These were approved by the board and comprise the following: Walter W Irwin, chairman, Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.; J. A. Berst, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Samuel Goldfish, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; P. A. Powers, Universal Film Manufacturing Co.; Richard A. Rowland, Metro Pictures Corporation; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Corporation; Lee A. Ochs, Louis F. Blumenthal and Louis L. Levine, of the Exhibitors' League; and William A. Johnston, representing the General Division.

The members of the association held a special meeting prior to the directors' meeting and voted an amendment to the by-laws, increasing the membership of the Executive Committee from nine to twelve.

Permanent Committee on Expositions.

President Brady announced the appointment of a permanent committee on expositions, as follows: William A. Brady, president, ex officio; J. A. Berst, J. E. Brulatour, Arthur S. Friend, J. H. Hallberg, Gabriel L. Hess, W. W. Irwin, P. A. Powers and William L. Sherrill.

The directors contend that with the two expositions for next year the manufacturers, distributors and supply and equipment companies should not be called upon to participate in any additional expositions, balls or similar propositions where advertising space is solicited, and it was decided to refer all such matters to the joint exposition committee, of which Executive Secretary Frederick H Elliott will act as secretary.

Exposition in New York Next February.

Announcement has previously been made that an exposition will be held in New York next February, followed by one in Boston in July, both of which will be under the joint auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

A Committee to Plan Protection Against Film Thieves.

The directors received reports showing a great increase in film thefts throughout the country, and, acting upon recommendations presented to them, a committee was appointed to formulate plans to be presented at a joint meeting of the producers and distributors during the first week of October. The committee will meet at the association's headquarters on Friday, September 28, at 3 p. m. and is composed of the following: P. A. Powers, Universal Pictures Corporation; Ricord Gradwell, World Film Corporation; R. A. Rowland, Metro Pictures Corporation; J. A. Berst, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Walter W. Irwin, Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.; John R. Freuler, Mutual Film Corporation; and Stephen A. Lynch, Triangle Distribution Corporation.

Help for Special Programs in Sunday Schools.

A communication presented from the Rev. Christian F. Reisner, requesting co-operation on behalf of the National Association, was granted, and Executive Secretary Elliott was given power to arrange for the programs which Dr. Reisner and his associates may require; representing the International Board of Sunday Schools, comprising 5,000.000 children.

New Members Elected.

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation was elected as a member of the association and will be represented in the distributors' branch by President Samuel Goldfish. The following individual members were elected: Ben H. Grimm, John P. Chalmers, James L. Hoff, George F. Blaisdell, Archibald McArthur, Jr., Randall M. White, James A. Milligan and Anthony P. Kelly.

Representation on National Chamber of Commerce.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been elected to active membership in the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America and will be represented in that great body, comprising all of the important industries, railroads and commercial organizations, by President Brady and Secretary Elliott.

Other Committees—Notes.

The organization of the several branches has been perfected, with the exception of the general division, which is to be called together early in October. Adolph Zukor is chairman of the Producers' Committee; Walter W. Irwin, chairman of the Distributors' Branch; and P. E. Brulatour, chairman of the Supply and Equipment Division.

It was reported that the Service Bureau, which is a new and important adjunct of the National Association, will be ready for business just as soon as headquarters can be established.

President Brady will announce his appointments of members on the Transportation, Insurance, Legal and Legislative Committees, and early meetings of these committees will be scheduled for the consideration of many important matters awaiting attention.

The resignation of Arthur James as a vice president and director of the association was accepted. This vacancy will be filled at the forthcoming meeting of the General Division, of which Mr. James was one of the representatives.

The meeting, which was presided over by President William A. Brady, was attended by the following: William L. Sherrill, Samuel Goldfish, J. A. Berst, W. W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, J. E. Brulatour, J. H. Hallberg, N. C. Cotabish, Joseph F. Coufal, Paul Gulick, Thomas G. Wylie, Louis L. Levine, Louis F. Blumenthal and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary.

EDITH STOREY COMPLETES FIRST PRODUCTION FOR METRO.

Edith Storey has completed her first picture under the Metro banner and is preparing to leave for the Western coast next week, where she will commence the second of the series of super-features to be made there under the direction of B. A. Rolfe. The picture completed, "The House in the Mist," is the first starring vehicle for Miss Storey on the Metro program. It was adapted by June Mathis from the novel of Octavus Roy Cohen and J. U. Giesy, and was directed by Tod Browning.

KEYSTONE STUDIO MOVED TO CULVER CITY.

What will be the largest motion-picture stage ever built is now in the course of construction at the Triangle Film Corporation's Culver City studio. It covers a ground space of 400 by 60 feet and will be of re-inforced concrete and glass. It is to be used exclusively for comedy productions. With its completion the Triangle-Keystone studio on Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles, will be moved to Culver City.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

Michigan Exhibitors Strong for A. E. A.

J. R. Dennison, Manager of the Family Theater, Monroe, Expresses the General Opinion of Trade in That State.

GENERAL Manager Pettijohn, of the American Exhibitors' Association, is in receipt of a letter from J. R. Dennison, manager of the Family theater of Monroe, Mich., which, he says, is fairly expressive of the sentiment existing among the exhibitors regarding the new organization of exhibitors of that state. Mr. Dennison was appointed chairman of the committee to draft a new constitution and by-laws for the Michigan branch of the A. E. A., and in his request for data to assist the committee in its work he expresses his faith in the new organization in the following terms:

Our meeting in Detroit was one of the best meetings ever held in the state in point of numbers, and by far the best ever held in point of character and personality represented by the presence of many of Michigan's real exhibitors—men who are doing things in their own individual business. After hearing the principles of the A. E. A. expounded by Mr. Rembusch, I want to go on record as saying that in my judgment any business founded upon such principles is sure to succeed.

I withdrew from the M. P. E. L. of A. two years ago, disgusted with the emptyness and inefficiency displayed in everything they attempted. In the first place the dues were so low that there was never any money to do any thing with. The price card was a dead giveaway of the shoddiness of the article itself. I have, and do yet, stand for an association supplied with ample funds from the inside, and am unalterably opposed to compromising our dignity by accepting donations from film companies or any one else. My only fear is that the dues of the A. E. A. are too low. I should have liked to have seen them twice, yes, four times what they are, and I would have felt that I was more certain of getting my money's worth.

It isn't what you pay—it's what you get for what you pay. While this is a self-evident fact people do not always seem to see it.

I understand that enthusiast members are coming through with liberal donations, but while this is a commendable spirit, and I shall do my share as far as I am financially able, yet this is an unfair and inequitable means of raising funds. However, even if my judgment proves correct, this is a matter that can and will be corrected by placing the dues at whatever amount experience to be necessary. I say this because I believe that the American Exhibitor is willing to pay and pay liberally if he gets his money's worth, and God knows there is plenty that an association can do to make it worth while.

ORGANIZATIONS JOIN ON LEGISLATIVE WORK.

Factional interests were forgotten last week in Washington, when representatives of the American Exhibitors' Association and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America worked together in behalf of the exhibitors against the proposed war tax.

H. B. Varner, chairman of the legislative committee of the A. E. A. and Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the A. E. A., sent a wire to Lee Ochs, president of the M. P. E. L., advising him that the situation was serious for exhibitors. Mr. Ochs was out of the city and in his absence Louis F. Blumenthal sent broadcast a number of telegrams and Grant Anson hurried to Washington to co-operate with Mr. Varner and Mr. Pettijohn.

"Mr. Blumenthal and Mr. Anson are entitled to their share of credit for anything that may have been accomplished in Washington that will prove beneficial to the exhibitor," said Mr. Pettijohn on his return to New York. "Both men co-operated with Mr. Varner and myself and all factional differences were forgotten in our work for the exhibitors of the country."

Brandt Under Summons—Not "Arrest"

Mr. Pettijohn Explains That the Action Is a Civil One, Not Criminal, and the Defendant Was Merely Cited to Answer the Complaint.

IN LAST week's issue of the Moving Picture World an article signed by C. C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, was printed, in which it was made to appear that William Brandt, manager of the Albany theater, Brooklyn, N. Y., had been arrested in connection with a suit brought against that theater for using copyright music contrary to the interests of the composer as defined by the copyright law, the suit being brought by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. As the case was a civil action, the word "summons" should have been used instead of "arrested." The situation is fully explained in Mr. Pettijohn's letter, which follows:

New York, September 20, 1917.

Editor, Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

In your issue of Sept. 29, in connection with an article submitted by our association on the music tax question, there appeared a statement that Mr. Brandt, the executive secretary of the Motion Picure Exhibitors' League, was at present under arrest for an infringement of a copyright.

The action in question was not a proceeding under the criminal statute, but was filed under the civil statute on this subject. The title of the case is Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., Inc., vs. The Holtz Amusement Co., which, I understand, operates the Albany Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y., of which theater Mr. Brandt is the manager. The number of the case is E-386, and is filed in the United States Court, Eastern District of New York. The file marks reveal that this case was filed on August 15, 1917, and that the defendant company answered on August 31, 1917, through Goldsmith and Rosenthal, their attorneys.

The complaint in substance charges that they played "Naughty, Naughty, Naughty" without having procured a license so to do. The above title is the name of a song and not a jest upon my part.

Mr. Brandt or some officer of his corporation was served with a summons to appear in answer to the plaintiff's complaint, and he appeared in answer to same. The proceedings are entirely of a civil nature, and Mr. Brandt was not placed under arrest. I wish you would please make this statement in your next issue in fairness to Mr. William Brandt.

With kindest regards, I am,

Very truly yours,
C. C. PETTIJOHN,
General Manager.

Arbitrating the Music Tax

American Exhibitors' Association Conferring With American Society of Composers on Question.

TWO committees, one representing the American Exhibitors' Association and the other American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, met at the offices of the American Exhibitors' Association in the Times Bldg, Friday morning, Sept. 21st.

The object of the meeting was to see if some peaceful agreement could not be reached on the music tax question. Various propositions were submitted by each side and the question was thoroughly discussed. At the conclusion of the conference, lasting several hours, only one thing remained upon which no agreement had been reached.

Moe Levy, Attorney at Law, of Norfolk, Va., personal counsel for Jake Wells, and Charles C. Pettijohn, General Manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, were insisting that the concession granted the American Exhibitors' Association should not be limited to members of that Association but should likewise apply to all other Exhibitors in the United States and Canada, whether members of the A. E. A. or not.

The various ideas agreed upon by the gentlemen representing both organizations will be submitted to their respective boards of directors at special meetings to be called within the next ten days. The feature upon which the disagreements arose will remain in abeyance until after these meetings have been held, but both sides have agreed to discuss the question at issue and try to reach an agreement in the respective directors' meetings.

Brooklyn League Holds Large Meeting

Discusses in Five Hour Session Proposed Operators' Scale, the Music Tax and Other Questions.

THE largest meeting in the history of the Brooklyn branch of the Exhibitors League was held at the Duffield Theater, Duffield and Fulton streets, at midnight on Saturday, September 22. President William Brandt was in the chair. It was 5 o'clock in the morning before the meeting adjourned. The five hours were devoted to a discussion of the proposed operators' scale, of the music question, of matters dealing with the express or common carriers situation and of municipal politics as it affects motion picture exhibitors.

Present to meet the exhibitors were Albert Mackler, secretary and treasurer, and Harry Mackler, business agent, of the operators union. They were given the privilege of the floor and received and handed back many warm shots bearing on the proposed scale and on matters in dispute between the two organizations.

To a question, for instance, by an exhibitor as to why the operators had established for 300-seat houses a rate identical with that for 2,000-seat theaters the representative of the operators replied that conditions in the former usually were harder than in the latter.

A report was submitted by the Brooklyn members of the committee of New York exhibitors that had been in conference with a similar committee of operators the same week at the projection room of the Paramount exchange in the Godfrey building. For the exhibitors the committee was composed of: For Manhattan, Louis Blumenthal and A. Weinstock; for Brooklyn, William Brandt and John Mannheimer; for the Bronx, John Wittman. The operators' union was represented by Samuel Kaplan, president; Simon Terr, vice president; Albert Mackler, secretary-treasurer; James Easie chairman of the trustees, and Harry Mackler business manager.

Among the matters discussed were suggestions that the two bodies enter into an agreement running for three years, thereby insuring harmony for that length of time. Another was that in case of a shortage of operators the members of the league be given preference in securing the services of the union men. A proposal was also made that an arbitration committee be created, to consist of three members of each of the two bodies and a neutral chairman to be selected by the six, the seven men to hear and determine any issues that may arise from time to time.

One of the most important questions was that of film damage. It had been agreed by the joint committee of ten that the only way to establish the liability of the operator would be for him to report at least a half hour earlier than usual and examine the film to be run that day. In the event the film should prove to be in bad condition the operator would call attention to the fact, the manager would o. k. his report and the operator would be relieved of responsibility. It also was agreed in the discussion that if this system should be decided upon the operator starting his day's show without a preliminary examination naturally would assume liability for the condition of the film.

The Brooklyn organization, after hearing the report of its delegation in the committee of ten, authorized the two men to continue in attendance at the conferences, another one of which was slated to be held on September 24.

The meeting also took steps looking to the settlement of the difficulties at issue between the motion picture men and the authors and composers society. The Brooklyn league is believed to be the first branch formally to recognize the fact that the copyright law has been violated and to initiate measures looking to the making of its members licensees of the society pending the result of steps to enact what is considered by motion picture men a more equitable substitute.

UTICA EXHIBITORS GET TOGETHER.

Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, spent Thursday, September 20, in Utica, N. Y., attending a meeting of the Utica exhibitors. For some time past there has been a split among Utica exhibitors. Three factions have been in the field and it was impossible to get any concerted action by the exhibitors to any movement in their behalf. Recently some of the leading exhibitors in the various groups saw that in order to get anywhere it was necessary to get together. All factional differences were settled so that now the local organization in Utica is a strong body of exhibitors determined and militant for their rights. The meeting was addressed by Mr. Pettijohn and many present joined the A. E. A.

While in Utica, Mr. Pettijohn conferred with William Fait, Jr., treasurer of the A. E. A.

Directors Have New Home

Notice to Attend a Meeting at Clubrooms Comes as a Surprise—Dawley and Kaufman Arrange Details.

WHEN the members of the "New York Studio" of the Motion Picture Directors' Association received word a few days ago that a business meeting was to be held at the new "home" of the organization, 234 West Fifty-eighth Street, there was considerable surprise in the ranks of the local branch of the association which was incorporated under "New York State laws in February of this year as an offshoot of the Los Angeles body of the same name."

J. Searle Dawley.

Previously meetings had been held at the Hotel Astor and there was no little pleasure manifested by the members when they found that two entire floors of the building had been artistically decorated and furnished for their use.

J. Searle Dawley and Joseph Kaufman came in for hearty and enthusiastic appreciation for their work in preparing the clubrooms. For the past ten weeks, without taking any of the members into their confidence, these two gentlemen had a small army of decorators busy transforming the old residence into an up-to-date clubhouse. At the business meeting Dawley and Kaufman were given a rising vote of thanks, to which they were utterly incapable of responding, such was their embarrassment.

The new home of the Association is centrally located in the heart of the film district, one door west of Broadway. The various rooms are appropriately named, as, for instance, The Studio, The Cutting Room, Projecting Room, Developing Room, Property Room, etc. Novel and artistic lighting effects have been provided and the furnishing, draperies, etc., display the same originality and artistry that characterize the highest standards of art in the motion picture industry. The officers of the club are designated as Director, Assistant Director, Technical Director, Scenarioist, Secretary, Inner and O ter guard. Mr. Dawley is secretary and Mr. Kaufman treasurer of the organization.

Joseph Kaufman.

The members are as follows: John G. Adolfi, Edwin Carewe, Edwin August, Albert Capellani, Emile Chautard, Frank H. Crane, J. Searle Dawley, Allan Dwan, Oscar Eagle, J. Gordon Edwards, Geo. Fitzmaurice, William Haddock, John Harvey, William J. Humphrey, Joseph Kaufman, Harley Knowles, Edmund Lawrence, Edward Middleton, Sidney Olcott, Barry O'Neil, Paul Scardon, Joseph Smiley, Robert Thornby, Maurice Tourneur, Robert G. Vignola, James Vincent, Travers Wales, John Ince, Perry J. Vekroff, Lawrence McGill, James Young, C. Jay Williams, John Collins, Frank J. Grandon, S. E. V. Taylor, Ashley Miller, Leone Perret, Dell Henderson, Charles Giblyn, Burton King, Robt. Leonard.

Paralta Quits Triangle

Severance of Relations Said to Have Been Caused by Withdrawal of S. A. Lynch from Triangle Corporation.

LONGACRE Square has been teeming with rumors for several days in reference to the relation existing between Paralta Plays, Inc., and the Triangle Distributing Corporation, a combination of interests as producer and distributor, which has been attracting not a little attention on Broadway since first announced the latter part of last June.

Many of the rumor experts had it that, after all, the Triangle Distributing Corporation would not handle Paralta Plays, and that the contract between Paralta and Triangle had been terminated.

In this instance the rumor man hit the nail on the head. The contract between Paralta and Triangle, entered into June 30 last, under which Triangle became the distributor of Paralta Plays, has been abrogated, and no Paralta production will be released through the Triangle organization.

The contract between Paralta and Triangle was more the result of the personal friendship existing between Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., and Stephen A. Lynch, than anything else. When this agreement was entered into it was with the distinct understanding that should Mr. Lynch sell his interest in the Triangle Distributing Corporation the contract with Paralta should terminate.

Mr. Lynch notified Mr. Anderson September 10 that he was about to dispose of his interest in the Triangle Distributing Corporation. At that time the abrogation of the contract between Paralta and Triangle was taken up, and during the past week the constructural relationship existing between the two corporations was brought to an amicable termination by mutual agreement of the parties interested.

This situation will not have any effect on the activities of the Paralta organization. Plans made weeks ago for a wide extension of its producing interests will be carried forward as rapidly as possible. Paralta now has six big feature photodramas completed and ready for distribution. This list comprises J. Warren Kerrigan in Peter B. Kyne's, "A Man's Man," and Frederick Chapin's, "Turn of a Card"; Bessie Barriscale in Harold MacGrath's, "Madam Who," and Grace Miller White's "Rose o' Paradise," and two state rights productions, "Alimony," by Hayden Talbot, and "The Golden Thread," by Thomas J. Geraghty, based on an original story by William E. Wing. Paralta also now has five companies working on productions at the Paralta studio in Hollywood. In two months five more big feature photoplays will be added to its output.

Work was begun at the Paralta studio on the west coast June 4 last, when J. Warren Kerrigan and Bessie Barriscale started filming "A Man's Man" and "Rose o' Paradise." When the anniversary of its first year as a producer, June 4, 1918, is reached on the calendar Paralta intends to have made the record of fifty-two star feature productions.

Paralta now has one of the most active studios on the west coast, which is being conducted under the general direction of Robert T. Kane, vice-president of Paralta Plays, Inc. Robert Brunton is studio manager, and heads one of the most competent technical organizations existing in this country.

Paralta's art director is R. Holmes Paul, a widely known English authority on dramatic art, scenic construction, costuming, architecture, etc. The casting director is David M. Hartford, an actor of great reputation, who has been identified with the production of many exceptional photodramatic successes. Paralta's scenario bureau is headed by Rex Stoval, Thomas J. Geraghty, H. Sheridan Bickers, Hayden Talbot, Eugene B. Lewis, William Horwitz, Francis Guihan, Edward Hammer, E. W. Babcock, Jesse Booth and Mont M. Katterjohn, who wrote the scenario for Miss Barriscale's "Madam Who," which will be her first Paralta release, to be followed by "Rose o' Paradise."

Arrangements have been made with very noted authors to contribute to Paralta Plays, among which may be mentioned Rupert Hughes, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Frederic Arnold Kummer, "Tex" O'Reilly, Charles Neville Buck and Larry Evans.

Paralta's dramatic directing staff is headed by Reginald Barker, Raymond B. West, Oscar Apfel, Emmit Flynn and Wallace Worsley. Messrs. Barker, West and Apfel stand in the front line of the great American directors who have accomplished remarkable things in the development of the silent drama. The company's directors of photography, Clyde De Vinna and Guy L. Wilky, stand at the head of their profession. Robert Newhart is also a member of the Paralta photographic division.

This conspicuously able producing staff stand behind not only such noted players as Miss Barriscale and Mr. Kerrigan, but also Henry B. Walthall, supported by Miss Mary Charleson, who will present, as a star-actor manager, sterling dramatic features under the executive direction of Paralta Plays. Mr. Walthall is regarded by leading dramatic authorities as the greatest legitimate actor on the screen.

Special productions made and distributed under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, Inc., will present such widely known players as Howard Hickman, Rhea Michell, Clara Williams and Lois Wilson in photodramas by famous authors, especially adapted to their personalities.

In the state rights field exceptionally artistic productions will also be made and distributed under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, well exemplified in the first two efforts made in this direction—"Alimony," founded on an original scenario wrtten by Hayden Talbot, and "The Golden Thread," written by Thomas G. Geraghty, based on an original story by William E. Wing. It is intended that these special state right productions shall prove exceptionally valuable propositions to state rights operators.

Marie Walcamp, Serial Heroine

Proof of Her Drawing Power Shown in the Rapidity with which New Universal Serial, "The Red Ace," is Being Booked.

MARIE WALCAMP, who makes her 1917 bow to Universal patrons in Jacques Jaccard's new outdoor mystery serial, "The Red Ace," has, with one brief intermission, appeared in dramatic thrillers released under Big U auspices throughout the past four years.

Her work last season as the heroine of "Liberty," Jaccard's big patriotic story in sixteen episodes, established her firmly as one of the premier athletic stars of the cinema world. It is confidently predicted by those who are now following her work in the opening episodes of "The Red Ace" that she will add considerably to her prestige with the characterization of Virginia Dixon, the fearless and appealing American girl, who fights her way to victory over a band of alien conspirators seeking to wrest the secret of a lost platinum mine from her family in the wilds of British Columbia.

Marie Walcamp.

Solid and substantial evidence of Miss Walcamp's drawing power may be gathered from the fact that since the release of the first episode of "The Red Ace," on August 27th, more than 240 houses have booked the Universal serial in the vicinity of New York alone.

Born in the town of Denison, Ohio, twenty-three years ago, Marie Walcamp first gained attention in musical comedy, appearing with Weber and Fields, Kolb and Dill, De Wolf Hopper, Anna Held and Frank Daniels, before she entered the films. She is a striking example of the actress who has developed from moderate success on the speaking stage into what might legitimately be termed triumph on the screen. Her proficiency in nearly every branch of outdoor sport in which a woman can excel has had much to do with her establishment as a prime favorite with that vast portion of the population that demands action as well as beauty from its heroines of the silent drama. As a matter of fact, Miss Walcamp meets both requirements. She is a striking blonde, with dark blue eyes and golden hair, standing 5 feet 4½ inches in height and weighing 130 pounds. Although unfortunate in breaking her wrist during the filming of one of the early episodes of "The Red Ace," Miss Walcamp has pluckily continued her daring work before the camera with hardly more than a week's interruption.

First Showing of Technicolor

Exhibition at Aeolian Hall, New York City, Draws Large Number of Well-Pleased Spectators.

THE Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation of Boston, Mass., gave a private showing of its first production, "The Gulf Between," at Aeolian Hall, Friday morning, September 21. The picture was photographed by an entirely new process, showing all the scenes in their natural colors. The process is the work of a Boston firm of engineers and scientists, Kalmus, Comstock & Wescott, Inc., their work extending over a period of five years. The members of the film and many of their co-workers and employees are Massachusetts Institute of Technology graduates. Dr. Daniel F. Comstock is at present a professor in the Department of Physics; Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus was formerly a member of the institute staff and later professor at Queen's University, Canada, and in charge of the technical research department for the Canadian government; while W. Burton Wescott has been engaged in the design of technical apparatus for some years. C. A. Willat, formerly of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and Willat Studios and Laboratories, was the manager of the production.

One of the fundamental difficulties which beset and balked numerous investigators in the field of color photography has been the unsteadiness and inadequacy of the present vertical arc lamps, which are used as a source of light for the projection of all motion pictures.

Kalmus, Comstock & Wescott, Inc., felt at an early stage that it was essential that an improved arc be developed that would give more light than the present arc and, of greater importance, which would give a light that can be relied upon for steadiness.

The result has been the development of the Technicolor horizontal magnetically controlled arc, which gives approximately one-third more light for the same current than standard vertical arcs, which may be relied upon for constancy of position of the source, which insures a uniform illumination of the screen and which has been used by the Technicolor company for the projection of all of its color pictures.

It should be stated at the beginning that the exhibition of the Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, as given at Aeolian Hall, demonstrated the pleasing fact that the new method is vastly superior to any of its predecessors. This was quickly comprehended by a large body of spectators that comprised many of the most prominent men in the moving picture industry, and the outbursts of applause were frequent, as different scenes of uncommon beauty were shown. The new process throws upon the screen a continual succession of pictures in natural colors that copy nature with the fidelity of a finely executed oil painting. Many of the landscapes and water scenes are of remarkable coolness. The interiors and the human element are not so well done, the men and women in particular having a more or less painted or chromo effect. The faces are most successful in the close-ups. When the figures retreat to any distance, it is difficult to distinguish their expression. Another defect is a slight blur of color, as the shift is made from one scene to another.

Briefly, while the process shows great advancement and has much to commend it, perfection has not been reached. Enough has been accomplished to warrant the interest of all lovers of the moving picture, however, and, in its present state, it is evident that the Technicolor method can be utilized to the marked advantage of many phases of the moving picture.

That all forms of screen drama will ever best be shown in color is more than a doubtful question. The black and white animated picture is frankly a photograph and is understood as such by the spectator. The attempt to equal nature in an art whose mission is the truthful display of human passion will undoubtedly prove that the drama is a law unto itself, and its men and women must conform to Othello's description of Desdemona: "Thou cunning'st pattern of excelling nature." Spectacular production should offer a promising field for this color method, and remarkable pictorial effects can thus be introduced. Photonovels of a certain order will also be projected most effectually in colors. As for the drama, that is the product of the playwright. Even the advent of the photoplay has not altered the value of Dumas' recipe for the practice of his art: "All I want is four scenes, four boards, two actors and a passion."

"The Gulf Between."

As a medium for the display of its invention the Technicolor Company made use of a seven-part story by Anthony J. Kelly. It is evident that the work of the scenario writer has been utilized for the sole purpose of best showing the color possibilities of the Technical process. The story is long drawn out, although it contains many examples of the author's unusual ability for character drawing and deft human touches, is almost without suspense and is weak in plot. The work of the cast is of a high order of merit. Grace Darmond and Charles Brandt have the leading parts.

Select Pictures Signs Alice Brady

Former World Film Star to Make Eight Subjects During the Coming Year.

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces that it has signed contracts with Alice Brady by which Miss Brady immediately becomes a Select Pictures star. Miss Brady will be presented during the coming year in eight pictures, which will be released under the Select Star Series system.

On the first of these eight pictures Miss Brady will begin work at once at the Paragon studio in Fort Lee. She will be directed by Edward Jose, whose work is best known to picture fans through his direction of Norma Talmadge in "Poppy" and "The Moth," the latter being a current Select release. Miss Brady's first picture will be an adaptation of Henry J. W. Dam's successful play "The Red Mouse." It is a story of modern life with a French flavor. The screen title of the picture has not yet been determined.

Alice Brady

Alice Brady is the daughter of William A. Brady, the celebrated theatrical manager and Director General of World pictures. Miss Brady began her public career at a very early age, appearing on the stage in theatrical productions in which her father or his friends were interested. At first her talents were lent to the musical comedy stage, and she appeared in roles of ever increasing importance in a number of musical successes, among them being "The Mikado," in which De Wolf Hopper was being starred, and "The Balkan Princess."

Always seeking new heights in her theatrical career, Miss Brady soon forsook the lighter field of musical comedy and appeared in legitimate drama, in which her greatest success was in a production of "Little Women," in which William A. Brady starred his daughter. "Little Women" enjoyed practically a season's run in New York and made friends of thousands of playgoers for Miss Brady.

Her real popularity, however, is the outcome of her work as a star in motion pictures. On the screen Miss Brady has enjoyed a vogue truly remarkable—remarkable for its extent throughout the length and breadth of the country wherever films are shown—but not remarkable when the talents of the little star are considered. For Alice Brady has shown herself to be a remarkably versatile performer on the screen. Although still a very young girl, her range of roles covers many mature parts, as well as joyous impersonations of youth. Her work on the screen has made a place for itself in the motion picture industry, and Alice Brady pictures are a standard commodity of high value in the film mart.

Perhaps the greatest of all of Miss Brady's screen successes is "Paid in Full," the picture made from the tremendous stage success of the same name, written by Eugene Walter. After this must be ranked as almost equal in popularity half a dozen picture-plays embracing this list: "Maternity," "The Hungry Heart," "In Darkest Russia," "The Dancer's Peril," and "The Self-Made Widow."

It will be the policy of Select Pictures to present Miss Brady in the very highest class productions that screen art can produce. Her stories will be selected from the greatest successes in the literary and dramatic field. Her directors will be men who have shown in their productions directing talents of the highest quality. Her company will engage the support of the best players the screen can boast. In short, Miss Brady's features will be of that quality which will mark throughout the releases under the Select Star system.

Film Men to Aid Government

Clair Hague to Serve with Mr. Allen of Famous Players and C. A. Willison, Chief of the Educational Department of the Dominion.

CLAIR HAGUE, general manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, located at Toronto, has received his appointment as a member of Motion Picture Distribution Committee of the Food Controller's office at Ottawa. Mr. Hague's colleagues on the committee will be Messrs. Allen of the Canadian Famous Players, and C. A. Willison, Chief of the Education Department of the Dominion.

Mr. Hague's experience in the film and theatrical world has been varied and dates back some ten years. He made his start with the Allen Brothers Company in Canada, and was connected with that concern for three years. He then became associated with the George Kleine Feature Company, where he filled an important position for two years. The old Canadian Film Company was the next to claim his services, and when this company became the Canadian Universal Film Company, Mr. Hague remained as local manager. In April, 1915, when a reorganization of Universal interests took place, Mr. Hague was appointed general manager for the Universal Film Company in Canada, a position which he held ever since. There are at present seven exchanges under Mr. Hague's control, and the fact that he has been able to show a substantial increase in business speaks highly for his ability.

Clair Hague.

The committee, of which Mr. Hague is a member will have jurisdiction over all films handled by the Canadian Government, it is understood, whether relating to food conservation or not. There is no revenue attached to the office, but the committeemen are clothed with considerable authority. By the appointment of two practical film men of the standing of Messrs. Hague and Allen the Government has given evidence of its desire to conduct the business of the committee in a manner that will win the support of film manufacturers and distributors on broad, patriotic grounds.

At the second annual convention of the Maritime Provinces Exhibitors' League, held last week at St. John, New Brunswick, the delegates unanimously pledged themselves to co-operate with the Motion Picture Distribution Committee in every possible way to make its work of immediate benefit to the public at large.

Both Mr. Hague and Mr. Allen expect to be called to Ottawa during the current week to inspect a number of films that have been submitted to the Government for propaganda purposes, relating to the conservation and economical preparation of foods.

SELZNICK CUTS UP HIS BIG TRIP.

Lewis J. Selznick has been considerably amused by the surprise his presence in his New York office has caused many of his friends, who have found him there when they believed him to be away on the road making a tour of exchanges.

Mr. Selznick did start on his proposed tour and got as far as Ocean View, Virginia, as previously announced. Then various important details arose in connection with the Select Pictures Corporation, of which he is president, calling for his personal attention, and Mr. Selznick was forced to interrupt this trip and return to his office for a time.

The continuance of his visit to exchanges and exhibitors throughout the country is postponed only for a short time. Very shortly Mr. Selznick will start again on another leg of his trip. He will probably make Chicago and the big cities of the middle west his next objective.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of Sept. 23 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Baby Mine" at the Strand.

THE principal photo-dramatic attraction at the Strand for the week of Sept. 23 was "Baby Mine," Margaret Mayo's delightful farce, and the second of the Goldwyn Pictures. Madge Kennedy was the star. Her appearance in "Baby Mine" is her first in motion pictures. It is a farce revolving around a misunderstood young wife who gets tangled up in the meshes of her own guileless deceptions and has no end of trouble extricating herself. In the supporting cast are: Kathryn Adams, Frank Morgan, John Cumberland, Virginia Madigan, Jack Ridgway, Nellie Fillmore and Sonia Marcelle. Another interesting photo attraction was entitled "The Last of the Troubadours," an adaptation of one of O. Henry's famous stories. An educational study, an Animated Bray Cartoon and the Strand Topical Review were also shown.

The soloists were Grace Hoffman, Herbert Watterous, Arthur Depew and Ralph H. Brigham.

"Fools for Luck" at the Rialto.

Taylor Holmes was seen at the Rialto in his latest Essanay comedy, "Fools for Luck." The story of the picture is taken from "Talismans," the amusing yarn by Kennett Harris which appeared in The Saturday Evening Post. Mr. Holmes and his ingratiating smile fit admirably into the character of Philander Jepson, the young man whose life was ruled by rabbits' feet, horseshoes and four leafed clovers. Many of the characters who appeared in "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" were seen in "Fools for Luck."

The Rialto Animated Magazine completed the picture program. The soloists were Marion Rodolfo, Count Torrie Grimaldi and Greels Evans.

"Fall of the Romanoffs" at the Broadway.

The Herbert Brenon production of the Russian revolution picture, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," opened a two weeks' engagement at the Broadway Theater, Sunday night, September 23.

Bill at the Eighty-first Street Theater.

Two attractions were shown at the Eighty-First Street Theater for the entire week. "The Revolution in Russia" and "The Retreat of the Germans" at the Battle of Arras were the pictures.

Ellen Burford

THE King-Bee Films Corporation are congratulating themselves on securing a one-year contract with beautiful Ellen Burford as leading lady for the King-Bee comedies, starring Billy West in two-reelers, released twice monthly.

Miss Burford is a Louisville girl, and has only been in pictures a short time. She is a "graduate" of the "Ziegfeld Follies," known for its ability to discover talent as well as beauty.

Ellen Burford.

"I have received several offers from other companies to appear in dramatic screen productions, but I prefer to remain with the King-Bee. Their brand of comedies is just to my liking, and instead of feeling that I am really working, I experience the same sensation as when I was a kid back home," exclaimed Miss Burford enthusiastically when asked if she was happy in comedies.

Miss Burford is twenty-four years old, and ran away from home to go on the stage when she was seventeen. She was educated in a Louisville convent and her folks are quite prominent socially. She is considered one of Louisville's most famous beauties, and ran away to escape the attentions of too many southern Romeos.

Universal's New Cartoon Plan

Arranges With the Leading Newspapers of the Entire Country to Reproduce on the Screen Their Most Brilliant and Powerful Creations.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company puts forth as an unparalleled achievement the fact that it has just arranged with the greatest newspapers in the United States to re-create on the screen their brightest and ablest cartoons. Thus will the most effective instrument of influence the press of today possesses be multiplied a hundred fold through its reproduction on the screen.

Carl Laemmle.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, confirmed the report and said his company will soon be ready to present this new and important feature to the public.

"In effect, it is the harnessing of press and screen together. The newspaper cartoon of today is a stronger force than the newspaper editorial. It is the creation of the most astute and the most alert minds to be found in American journalism. It reflects the thought, the mind, the soul of the American people. Pick up a paper from the west, look at its cartoon and a glance tells you what the people of that section think of the question it deals with. And so with the papers of all sections. Their cartoons reflect as truthfully as a mirror the opinions of their people on all the important questions of the day.

"Now," continued Mr. Laemmle, "we are going to take the best, the most striking of those cartoons—cartoons not from one section, but from all sections of the country—and put them on the screen. The people will see them spring into life, as it were, from the brain of the artist. Line will follow line until the picture is complete. The effect cannot fail to be stronger, more telling than that produced by the same cartoon on the page of the newpaper. And where the newspaper is seen by thousands, 'Current Events' is seen by hundreds of thousands. I regard the success of our efforts to thus couple press and screen together as an achievement unparalleled in the history of the motion picture. It will enable the people of every part of the country to keep in constant touch with the thought of every other part, and the influence it will have in enlightening and broadening the thought of the whole country practically will be immeasurable.

"In my opinion," said Mr. Laemmle, "the reproduction of the cartoons of the representative newspapers of the country on the screen will take rank as one of the really big accomplishments of Universal. Such co-operation of press and screen must strengthen incalculably the influence of both. It will benefit both, but much more will it benefit the millions of the country, giving greater knowledge and broader understanding of all the really important questions of the day."

Among the many papers participating are: New York Herald, New York Tribune, New York Evening Sun, New York Evening Mail, Brooklyn Eagle, Chicago Daily News, Baltimore Sun, Baltimore American, Philadelphia Ledger, Philadelphia Record, Philadelphia Inquirer, Philadelphia Telegraph, Buffao News, Pittsburgh Dispatch, Pittsburgh Leader, Pittsburgh Press, Boston Post, Boston Herald, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, St. Louis Republic, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Atlanta Constitution, Newark News, Albany Journal, Cleveland Plain Dealer, Philadephia Press, Atanta Journal and Cleveland News.

In fact, nearly every big newspaper in the United States not tied up by syndicate contracts with other newspapers, and therefore not in a position to grant screen rights, was quietly lined up by Universal before public announcement of its purpose was made.

Mayfair Purchases Many Stories

Motion Picture Rights to Popular Books Secured for Dainty Peggy Hyland.

DURING the last few weeks the reader of the Mayfair Film Corporation has been very busy reading a number of the novels now enjoying marked popularity in the bookstores. When this notice was received from the Mayfair offices a number best suited to Miss Hyland's type had already been purchased and others were under the final consideration. In every instance the story is a wholesome, refreshing one and not based in any way on the terrible world conflict now raging.

The stellar role offers dainty Peggy opportunity to demonstrate her charm and personality which has already endeared her to motion picture audiences in other productions, although the stories are not at all similar. In addition to affording Miss Hyland such opportunities, they adapt themselves to screen purposes and promise to afford a pleasing evening's entertainment when they are finally completed.

The authors in many cases possess names familiar to anyone who has read the recent literary offerings.

Hazel Daly

HAZEL DALY, the original "Honey" in the "Skinner" picture plays, has joined the Selig Polyscope Company and will play the feminine lead in "Brown of Harvard," her first feature pictures under the Diamond S trademark.

Miss Daly was born in Chicago and the Windy City has always been her home. She graduated from the Chicago public schools. When Miss Daly joined the Selig Company she returned to her "first love." It was with the Selig Company, several years ago, that she received her first motion picture experience. She was sent to Las Vegas, N. M., to join Tom Mix and was his leading lady in Western dramas for some time. Returning to Chicago she was engaged to play opposite Bryant Washburn in the "Skinner" pictures.

Hazel Daly.

Miss Daly came to the Selig Company with Harry Beaumont, the director who was responsible for the success of the "Skinner" pictureplays and will continue to act under his direction.

"I am glad to be with the Selig Company," stated Miss Daly in an interview. "Mr. Selig, as the entire industry knows, spares no time or expense in the filming of his feature films and I am proud to be with his company. My part in 'Brown of Harvard' is one that I like very much. We are going to Cambridge to film true-to-life Harvard atmosphere. Mr. Beaumont will direct the picture."

Within the past two years Miss Daly has achieved an enviable reputation as a film star and authorities assert that she has a wonderful future in store for her.

FREDERICK WARDE IN "THE HEART OF EZRA GREER."

Frederick Warde, the celebrated Shakespearian actor, is again the star of a Pathe feature. He is announced in the five-part Gold Rooster play, "The Heart of Ezra Greer," which is down for release the week of October 7. This picture was produced by Thanhouser from a scenario by Lloyd Lonergan, and was directed by Emile Chautard. Assisting Mr. Warde in the cast are Leila Frost, George Forth, Lillian Mueller and Baby Gerald Badgley.

"The Heart of Ezra Greer" is a picture full of human interest of the best type. Mr. Warde's characterization of Ezra Greer is one of the best things that he has done. Ezra will get the sympathy of any audience and hold it to the end. There is no let down in the interpretation. The character is intensely human and very lovable.

Chicago Censor Board Gets Another Jolt.

FURTHER developments in the law suit instigated some time ago against the city by the Vitagraph Co. to have Major Funkhouser enjoined from interfering with the exhibition of the company's production, "Within the Law," have brought forth severe criticism of the city censor board by Judge Robert E. Crowe of the Circuit Court. At the last hearing of the case on Monday, Sept. 17, uncontroverted affidavits were furnished by Attorney Lewis F. Jacobson, which assert that Funkhouser has declared publicly that he intended to harass these people (the producers), and have the city back him up.

"These affidavits indicate an absolute outrage," Judge Crowe told city attorneys. "The city, far from backing Major Funkhouser, ought to take steps to remove him from the office. This is a public matter people are interested in. They are interested in seeing that the rights of people are protected in knowing that the city authorities won't back up a despot who sets himself above the law.

"Here is the situation. If Major Funkhouser were taking advice from the office of a private law firm I can see where your office should come in regardless of the merits, or if he was acting conscientiously in the performance of his duties, but if he is acting arbitrarily and acting in the manner that the affidavit states he has been acting, that he is depriving these people of property without any justification whatever, that there are no objectionable features about this picture, I think the city law department, before it acts for Major Funkhouser in this matter, ought to determine whether he is acting justly or unjustly, and if he is not acting justly the law department ought to take a hand in it. If there are no objectionable features in this picture I don't think that the law department ought to impose this fraud upon the citizens of this town.

Says City Law Department Does Not Know Merits of Case.

"As a matter of equity, I don't think the office of the corporation counsel ought to be used to carry on litigation that you don't know whether there is any merit to or not. You don't know whether the picture ought to be shown or not, and here is an affidavit filed on record that states that Major Funkhouser has indicated publicly that regardless of the merits, right or wrong, he is going to have the law department harass and delay citizens here.

"Funkhouser is not part of the administration. If he is acting as this affidavit states he is acting I am satisfied that the Mayor would not want his law department to be used as part of such a scheme. I suggest that you see this picture and if, after seeing it, you find that Major Funkhouser is actuated by other motives, report him to your superior officer and tell him what the facts are. We have a situation here as a general proposition where you have on record an affidavit which shows that Major Funkhouser in this case is not acting through a sense of duty but through some ulterior motive, and that he does not care for the rights of citizens and does not care for the law, that he is merely going to take advantage of the delay which the law gives him to work injustice."

The case was continued until Friday, Sept. 21, when it will be decided whether or not the permit for the picture, which is being held up due to the appeal of the city, will be released.

Fox Case Also On.

While these proceedings were going on in one branch of the judiciary our friend the Major began further action in the case of the Fox film, "The Spy," when notice was served on the Fox Film Corporation that on Monday, Sept. 24, an effort will be made to have the injunction dissolved under which "The Spy" is being shown. This notice was brought to the attention of Winfield I. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Corporation, who reached Chicago Tuesday, Sept. 18, to consult with C. W. Eckhardt, district manager, on the matter.

After listening to the details of the situation Mr. Sheehan gave orders that every cut-out ordered by Major Funkhouser in Fox films be brought in the courts. The Fox films pending before the censor board at the present time are "The Conqueror," which met with no objection elsewhere, and "When a Man Sees Red," based on the serial story by Lary Evans, which has appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Information, valuable to publicity departments, comes from a local film man who returned last week from a three weeks' trip through the state of Indiana. Repeated instances of the same condition prompted him to remark, while talking to a representative of this paper, that some exhibitors in small towns are receiving as many as four duplicates of form circulars and advertising matter mailed from the offices of exchanges and manufacturers. In Plymouth, Ind., an exhibitor who conducts the only house in the town open for business at the present time, is each day receiving a bundle of mail almost large enough to choke the muzzle of a 42-centimeter. The result is that a large portion of it finds a quick route to the waste-basket. We think a good suggestion would be to begin the fall campaign with a thorough overhauling of mailing lists, especially for the state of Indiana.

A. W. Bach, special representative for the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., who has been installing service departments for Universal in its various exchanges, after spending ten days in this city, left for Detroit on Thursday, Sept. 20. During his visit Mr. Bach appointed L. W. Firestone to manage the service department in the Chicago office of Universal. It will be Mr. Firestone's duty to cooperate with exhibitors in so far as making adjustments of any discrepanies on the part of the Chicago exchange.

The formal opening of "The Eyes of the World" (Clune), which was to have taken place at the Auditorium on Friday, Sept. 21, has been postponed a week. The Auditorium is being redecorated at the present time, and Mr. Clune's representative was informed on Wednesday that it would be impossible to remove the scaffolding upon which the men were working, until Thursday, Sept. 27, and the opening is now set for that date. The delay means the loss of several thousand dollars to the Clune organization, as an extensive advertising campaign in local newspapers has been carried out in connection with the opening presentation.

The Advertising Film Produers' Association, which is the official department of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, met in executive session at the studio of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. on Monday, Sept. 17. At that meeting it was decided to change the name of the organization to the Motion Picture Advertising Association of the World, and to hold the next meeting at the Statler Hotel, Detroit, Mich., on Oct. 26.

The Commonwealth Pictures Corporation is offering a prize of $100 for an accepted title suggestion for the company's first film production, in which Charlotte, the famous ice skater, is to be featured. The contest is open to all who wish to participate, and contestants are advised to write the company at 914 Consumers Building, Chicago, for a synopsis in order to become familiar with the story.

The distribution rights for the state of Illinois to the Wm. A. Brady production, "The Whip," has recently been purchased by the Central Film Co. This is the film version of the Drury Lane spectacle which ran at the Auditorium, this city, for an entire winter. "The Whip" will follow "The Moth" (Selznick) at the Colonial theater for the week beginning Monday, Sept. 24, and will be the last film to be shown there before that theater begins the fall season with spoken dramatic attractions.

Announcement comes from Jones, Linick & Schaefer that beginning Oct. 1 the Orpheum theater, which has been maintaining a daily change of program, will inaugurate a policy of twice-a-week changes with large feature film attractions. In arranging the new feature picture policy it has been decided to open with the Fox production, "The Honor System." This, in turn, will be followed by Goldwyn's "Fighting Odds," "The Whip" and such productions as "The Spreading Dawn," "The Conqueror" and "Intolerance" are in line for a run at this theater. In speaking of the new policy, Mr. Jones made the statement that an effort will be made to get away from the star system. The subjects will be booked from the standpoint of entertainment value rather than because a highly advertised star is appearing in them. The programs will be changed Sunday and Thursday of each week. George H. Moore, who has been manager of the Orpheum for the past ten years, will remain in the same capacity.

A trade showing of "The Penny Philanthropist" was given at the Ziegfeld theater on Monday, Sept. 24, at 9:30 a. m. This is the first feature subject to be produced by the Wholesome Films Corporation, this city. The film is based on the story written by Clara E. Laughlin. Peggy O'Neil and Ralph Morgan are featured in the leading roles. Exhibitors and the press were invited to attend.

The Newman Travelogues are scheduled to open the fall season at Orchestra Hall on Oct. 10, where they will remain for five weeks. Mr. Newman's talks, as well as his pictures this year, will be concerned with the national parks of this country, the Pacific Coast, the Indians, Hawaii and our West Indies. The lectures will take place on Wednesday and Friday evenings, as well as Sunday afternoons.

ALLAN DWAN TO DIRECT DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS.

For the purpose of personally directing Douglas Fairbanks, the nation-wide Artcraft star, in new productions, Allan Dwan, formerly general director of Eastern productions for the Triangle Film Corporation, has arranged to leave for California this week to join the Fairbanks organization. By the arrangement Mr. Dwan will direct one picture every ten weeks, alternating on the production of Fairbanks plays with Director John Emerson. Both Mr. Dwan and Mr. Emerson will have under their jurisdiction a complete producing unit, and under the new arrangement the work of staging, cutting, assembling and titling will continue without the usual lay-off between pictures. While one production is being staged the last one is being cut, assembled and titled, and the next one is receiving its initial preparation, thus keeping the star active continuously in order to satisfy the ever growing demand for Fairbanks-Artcraft pictures.

Just Bilkalem's Dog

But "Boy" Has Been "Doing His Bit" for War Relief Work All the Same.

BOY, who lives at Meadowbrook Farm, three miles from Morristown, is a thoroughbred dog in more ways than one. He is owned by William Wright, whose relatives took part with distinction in every war in which America has engaged, and, considering himself an important member of Mr. Wright's household, "Boy" has been doing his bit to make the world safe for civilization.

"Boy."

Those who attended the Belgian Fair, held at the 71st Regiment Armory in New York City, were greeted at the door by "Boy," who, holding a basket, sought their contributions to the worthy cause by an appealing look in his big brown eyes. And when a very particularly opulent person, with attention distracted, passed him by, "Boy" dropped his basket and barked until the donation was forthcoming.

"Boy" proved such a successful solicitor of war relief donations that Mr. Wright permitted him to be taken to Atlantic City, Cape May and other points where similar fairs were held. Altogether "Boy" collected nearly $4,000 for the Belgian Relief.

While "Boy" was doing his bit, his picture appeared in all the metropolitan journals.

Perhaps it was not alone the patriotism of Mr. Wright's family which incited "Boy" to such commendable activities in his country's behalf. "Boy" is of French descent and considers himself allied with the gallant French, whose deeds of valor have thrilled the world. The sire of "Boy" was "Porquoi Pas," the champion French bull, and the dam was "Laurette," also a thoroughbred.

Will Provide Reading Matter for Soldiers

American Library Association, Authorized to Assume Charge, Asks Contributions to Furnish Circulating Field Libraries.

THE call has gone forth for $1,000,000 to buy books for the United States soldiers in the training camps and at the front. It has been estimated that $1 will buy a good book and keep it in circulation while the war lasts. Our boys will have to put in some strenuous hours and days now and then, and these will necessarily be followed by periods of rest and relaxation. The value of good literature in these recuperating periods is beyond the telling. The books will be used, and we can't afford to be niggardly in providing them, the best to be had and all that are needed.

In New York City a special effort to collect the Metropolis' apportionment of the expense, $250,000, will be made by the Greater New York War Council during the week beginning September 24, with Thursday decided upon as the climax day. Morgan J. O'Brien is chairman of this committee. Its headquarters are at the Public Library, 476 Fifth avenue, Room 207. Its telephone call is Vanderbilt 3600. E. H. Anderson is the division director, and Alfred F. Hoffsommer is the field director. Many associations like the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., the Red Cross, etc., will take part in the campaign Local theaters can give good help by putting this notice on their screens by slides. It is a cause no one can afford to neglect. The Library War Council wants money rather than old books. Small contributions will be gladly received.

FRANK REICHER JOINS METRO STAFF.

Metro Pictures Corporation has added to its directing staff de luxe Frank Reicher. Mr. Reicher was already a distinguished figure on the speaking stage of two continents before entering the field of motion pictures, and success has followed him. His first work for Metro will be the direction of the celebrated star, Ethel Barrymore, in a picture version of Sidney McCall's novel, "Red Horse Hill," adapted for the screen by Mary Murillo.

A large open-air plunge, sixty by one hundred feet, has been built at the Triangle Film Corporation's Culver City Studio, for the pleasure and convenience of the employees. When winter comes the tank will be inclosed with glass and heated.

What will be the largest motion picture stage ever built is now in the course of construction at the Triangle Film Corporation's Culver City studio. It covers a ground space of four hundred by sixty feet and will be of reinforced concrete and glass. It is to be used exclusively for comedy productions.

This is the first step in the building campaign outlined for the sixteen-acre addition to the Culver City plant. When all of the buildings are erected the addition will represent an outlay of nearly a million dollars, making the huge Culver City plant the largest in the world.

A crew of more than a hundred men is now at work on the new stage and construction will be rushed. With its completion the Triangle-Keystone studio on Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles, will be moved to Culver City.

Jack Conway, director at the Triangle Film Corporation's Culver City studio, narrowly escaped death when his machine plunged over an embankment on the Malibu road along the Santa Monica Coast, and, turning turtle, pinned him under the wreckage. He was on his way to the Culver City studio, but was picked up by motorists and taken to the Santa Monica Hospital. After first aid treatment, Conway was able to be removed from the hosiptal to his home, but will be unable to work for several days.

Director William Beaudine started this week with the Triangle-Keystone studios in Los Angeles. Mr. Beaudine has an enviable reputation as a comedy director, and has been assigned the following cast for his first Triangle-Keystone comedy: Joseph (Baldy) Belmont, Claire Anderson, Peggy Pearce, Fritz Schade and Paddy McGuire. This makes seven companies now actively engaged in making Triangle-Keystone comedies.

The latest addition to the directing force at Universal City is Edwin Frazee, who will direct two-reel subjects. Frazee directed a number of successful Keystone comedies, including "Crooked to the End," "The Village Vampire," "An Oily Scoundrel," "Bathtub Perils," "Love Will Conquer" and "A Favorite Fool," in which Eddie Foy and the Seven Little Foys were starred. He also produced "Social Pirates" and other comedies for the Fox Company. Mr. Frazee's company will feature Stanley Laurel, Rena Rogers and Neal Burns.

Col. J. E. Brady, manager of the Manuscript Department of the Bluebird studios, has purchased for production by Director Joseph De Grasse "The Scarlet Car," by Richard Harding Davis. It will be made into a comedy-drama for Franklyn Farnum.

"Heart's Blood," a drama which has been written by Miss Elaine Sterne, has been bought as a vehicle for Dorothy Phillips, the popular Bluebird star.

Two stories, "The Old-Fashioned Gentleman" and "Anthony the Absolute," the former by F. Hopkinson Smith, and the latter by Sam Merwin, have become the property of the Manuscript Department and will be adapted for the screen shortly. Director Rupert Julian will produce them, featuring Miss Ruth Clifford and with himself and Monroe Salsbury in the cast. "Donna Perfecta," a Spanish romance, is another story which is scheduled for production by Director Julian in the near future.

William Russell has finished the comedy-drama entitled "Lucky Jim," written by his director, Edward Sloman. Immediately the Russell company returned to Los Angeles for three or four shopping days in preparation for the next Russell feature.

Petrova on First National Circuit

Frederick L. Collins, on Behalf of Superpictures Distributing Corporation, Completes Arrangement with New Combination.

AN ARRANGEMENT has just been concluded between Superpictures Distributing Corporation and the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., whereby the latter organization will distribute the forthcoming Petrova pictures. Madame Petrova is the first man star whose productions have been accepted for release by the Exhibitors Circuit, and the Petrova pictures will be the first series of features distributed by their exchanges. Like the Chaplin pictures, which have recently been acquired by the Exhibitors, the productions in which Madame Petrova appears are to be sold independently of all other productions under an exclusive Petrova contract. This arrangement means that the Petrova pictures will appear in more first run theaters in the United States and Canada than have previously been available for any other feature productions. This fact, together with the countrywide advertising publicity campaign to be conducted by Superpictures Distributing Corporation, guarantees to both large and small exhibitors everywhere attractions of unusual box office values.

This contract was negotiated on behalf of the Exhibitors by S. L. Rothapfel and J. D. Williams of New York and H. O. Schwalbe of Philadelphia, and on behalf of Superpictures Distributing Corporation by its president, Frederick L. Collins.

Williams Expresses Satisfaction.

"Mr. H. O. Schwalbe and Mr. S. L. Rosenthal of our board, who worked hard to consummate the big contract, regard the result as an ideal co-ordination of star, production and distribution," stated Mr. Williams. Continuing, he said: "It is an expression of confidence and an appreciation of the strength of our circuit by a manufacturer who is staking the success of his year's work and an immense amount of money on our ability to properly market 'big pictures for big exhibitors.'

"Our members and board of directors are well satisfied that Mme. Petrova's coming productions will prove popular with the patrons of their theaters, among which are numbered a first release house second to none in every city of importance in the country. Pictures introduced to the public by responsible exhibitors are given the prestige due the guest of any host of acknowledged social standing. We feel that in introducing Mme. Petrova's productions we will not be sponsoring strangers from distant studios but instead debutantes whose careers we have watched over from scenario to screen. Our organization will be in touch with star and manufacturer during the actual production of the films. We are all partners, and upon the success of each depends the success of all. It is upon this co-ordination of effort. this bridging of the gap between manufacturer and public, that we base our certainty of success.

"Our members regard their responsibility to the public as something which must be carefully guarded. The publicity of the exhibitor assumes more the function of promissory notes payable on demand than the general and often irresponsible national advertising announcements of the maufacturer. In a word, our members will have to pay the bills; that's why they are going to be so particular about the type of picture they buy and show."

Clara Williams Joins Paralta

CLARA WILLIAMS made an agreement with Paralta Plays, Inc., during the recent visit of Carl Anderson, president of the Paralta organization to the west coast, under which a company headed by her will produce pictures at the Paralta studios in Hollywood. Her productions will be distributed under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, Inc. Miss Williams and her company will begin work at once.

Clara Williams.

Miss Williams came to the screen from the legitimate dramatic stage, on which she had been a most attractive figure for several years. She is a native of Seattle. Her family moved to Los Angeles when she was seven years of age. Graduating from school, she became a pupil at Dobinson's dramatic academy in Los Angeles, where several Pacific Coast favorites received their early stage training.

Her first appearance was in the role of "Lady Isabel" in "East Lynn" with the Santa Barbara Stock Company. She made a very good impression at her debut, and remained with that organization for the entire season. Leaving the Santa Barbara organization, Miss Williams joined Richard Jose, on tour in "Don't Tell My Wife," and then went into vaudeville with True Boardman in a sketch called "The Way of the West." In Denver G. M. Anderson was attracted by her unusual beauty, and persuaded her to forsake the stage for the screen. So she made her debut in pictures with the Essanay Company, playing leads in one-reelers.

Deciding at the end of a year and a half to go back on the stage, she went to Chicago. Here she accepted an engagement to go on the road in another playlet called "The Awakening." Then she joined Lubin in Philadelphia, where she remained for a year. Going with the Lubin Company to the Pacific Coast, she was approached by the New York Motion Picture Corporation. She accepted the offer. Her first role with this company was in "The Witch of Salem." Miss Williams' most prominent screen successes are "The Bargain," "The Corner," "Hell's Hinges," "The Criminal" and "Three of Many."

W. E. GREENE BACK FROM VACATION.

Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, has returned to his desk at the New York headquarters following a well deserved vacation. Two weeks ago Mr. Greene, after an extremely active year, during which he piloted his organization to its present magnitude, left his affairs in the hands of his associates to take up the life of a gentleman farmer at his rural home at South Weymouth, Mass. The most fertile portion of Mr. Greene's farm was set aside as a war garden last spring by the Artcraft executive and during his two weeks there received his personal attention. The fruits of this stretch of land will be donated to one of the New Army camps and offers delicacies such as are not on the soldier's daily menu.

"A Crooked Romance"

Five-Reel Astra-Pathe Subject Featuring Gladys Hulette in the Role of Girl Raised as Thief.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

STRONG human touches and the sympathetic characterization of a girl thief by Gladys Hulette are the outstanding features of this number. It contains no very dramatic episodes, although it deals with the lives of crooks, but the plot runs along entertainingly, and occasional touches of humor appear.

Scene from "A Crooked Romance" (Pathe).

It is a relief on the whole from the more sordid and depressing development usually accorded such themes.

Miss Hulette has been cast in a part which fits her perfectly. She plays the role of a girl raised from babyhood by a professional thief. She is, in fact, a female Oliver Twist, except that her life is a happy one, and that Sid Flynn, her mentor and foster-father, is very kind to her. She looks upon thieving, from the rich only, as a commendable means of obtaining a livelihood. She does not, in fact, even suspect it of being a wrongful occupation until the young man with whom she subsequently falls in love informs her that such is the case.

Flynn falls into the clutches of the law while they are working on a "job," and the girl flees to New York City carrying his kit of burglar tools. She takes refuge in a packing box in a lumber yard, and shines shoes in the daytime for a living. The old watchman at the yard takes an interest in her. Later she comes into possession of a lost baby, which she adopts as her own. The incidents of the story flow along quite naturally, though certain incidents are none too convincing. It is a story in which things happen about as the observer wishes they would happen, and for this reason gives pleasure even at the expense of more dramatic development.

In the end she is adopted by the relatives of the lost baby and again meets the young man who whom she first fell in love.

William Parke, Jr., appears as the lover; J. H. Gilmour as Mike, the watchman, and Paul Clerget as Sid Flynn. The story was written by Tom Cushing.

Kalem Comedies

"Ham" and "Bud" Appear in a Pair of New Comics Which Unfold Original and Laughable Situations.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

KALEM'S team of comedians, Ham and Bud, portrayed as usual by Lloyd V. Hamilton and A. E. Duncan, are provided in these two one-reel subjects with some new burlesque and nonsensical situations. Their constant lookout for new methods of getting rich quick leads them into enterprises that will bring the desired laugh from observers and increase their popularity with the comic fans.

In "The Onion Magnate's Revenge" they first appear as icemen, selling small samples of ice cut to size after the application of a tape measure. They arrive at the home of a wealthy man who has cornered the onion market. Because the latter refuses to pay his ice bill of $95, the pair steal several barrels of onions from his cellar. Bud even goes so far as to entice away the onion king's daughter, but the latter, knowing their guilt, helps her father obtain an ample revenge. The latter heads a chase after the miscreants, carrying a bomb with lighted fuse.

"The Bathtub Bandit" offers a similar opportunity for amusing nonsense. This leads off with a pictorial description of the activities of a crook known as "Jimmy, the Monkey Wrench," who has a mania for stealing bathtubs from the homes of wealthy people. He induces Ham and Bud to assist him in "lifting" a valuable porcelain tub from a residence, but deserts them when the police appear. Ham and Bud jump into the ocean with the tub and float to a distant village by the sea. Here numerous further adventures befall them.

Others appearing in these comedies are John Steppling, True Boardman, R. E. Bradbury, Juanita Sponsler and Henry Murdoch.

"Their Compact"

Seven-Part Metro Picture with Francis X. Bushman a Long Drawn Out but Interesting Western Romance.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ORIGINALLY a story by Charles A. Logue, the Metro seven-part western romance, "Their Compact," was adapted to the screen by Albert Shelby Le Vino. The picture is peopled with cowboys, miners, gamblers and other free and unconventional souls that are quick on the trigger. An athletic college man from the East, in the person of James Van Dyke Moore, rides in among them one day and shows them a few tricks not taught in books, such as the ability to best any and all of them at their own games of rough and tumble fighting or of drawing a gun. The adventures of this sturdy tenderfoot involves a love affair with his landlord's granddaughter, a fight for a mine, the saving of his best friend from learning the truth about his wife when he is dying, and his final triumph over the enemies that combine to crush him, and are led by a gambler named "Ace High" Horton.

"Their Compact' 'is well produced, in the main, a number of slight slips being in evidence. A praiseworthy effort to give it the right atmosphere is shown in all the scenes. The story is interesting, but too long drawn out. The situation at the finish where the leading citizens of a western town force a woman to attempt a twenty-mile walk across a trackless desert, knowing that she is going to certain death, is foolishness. Men simply do not do such things to women, no matter what their crimes. Only German soldiers in France and Belgium perform acts of equal savagery.

Francis X. Bushman is an excellent representative for the character of James Van Dyke Moore and lends it the touch of ever present "heroics" intended by the author. Beverly Bayne makes a winsome Mollie Anderson, and Henry Mortimer is effective as Robert Forrest. Harry S. Northrup, Mildred Adams, Robert Chandler, John Smiley, and Thomas Delmar, round out a thoroughly competent cast. Edwin Carewe directed the production.

pleasing to older children than to the kiddies. I should say that it had been made for young people in their teens and for older folks whose hearts are still young. Kathleen Townsend is piquant, well-bred and full of grace in the part. Opposite to her is Wallace MacDonald, who doesn't lose humanity or manliness in a difficult role. The supporting cast dances with grace and behaves as though it were happy and that is what was desired.

This is followed by a single reel with two reels of interesting topics, one of which, "The Brook" (400 feet), is a selection of most artistically made photographs of a book; quotations from Tennyson go with it. "The Puzzling Billboard" (850 feet), a comic, is a good break in the program and it will be liked. "In Old England" (250 feet) is just a few scenes perfectly photographed. "Woodcraft for Boys" (400 feet) shows much that will make boys want to go to Culver, where they have such good times. "Shipping Live Fish" (200 feet) is well worth seeing.

"The Blind Fiddler" (Single Reel).

Viola Dana plays as a fairy in this allegory in a twilight of leafy woods. The old fiddler is blind and plays in the forest. The Fairy hears and gives him back his sight, but takes from his violin the haunting strain. The old man sees much in life that is better left unseen and loses his music, so he begs the Fairy to take back the gift, which she does. There is more filling in the story than this bare outline.

"Sands of Sacrifice."

Five-Part Drama of Ordinary Quality on Mutual Program Features William Russell with Francelia Billington.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN "SANDS OF SACRIFICE" William Russell and Francelia Billington have done their best for an unpleasant and badly constructed story. The picture was made at the American studios and numbered in the supporting cast are actors of ability, including Joe King, John Gough and George Periolat.

The story opens in a hunting lodge owned by the hero, where considerable "rough house" and drinking takes place. We are then introduced to an agent who "trims suckers," and a young woman, who has had unpleasant experiences with this man. In a badly presented attempt to force the man to pay back money out of which he has swindled herself and her mother, she arms herself with a revolver and rushes off to his hunting lodge. Here she is discovered by the hero and his friends, who come from his lodge to his neighbor's to borrow liquor in the absence of the proprietor, and is the victim of rough treatment by the drunken men, giving the hero an opportunity for the display of his better nature and muscular strength. Finally after marrying the young woman to save her from a compromising position, he not only finds himself in financial difficulties through the crooked manipulations of the "agent," but loses faith in his wife. Just at that period he decides to go west with a sick friend who, as he dies on the desert, begs him to go back to his wife. This he does and finds that she has cleverly woven a web about the "agent" and has succeeded in having him arrested. The scenes on the desert are well staged and interesting.

"Sunlight's Last Raid."

Five-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, With Mary Anderson Leading a Picturesque Western Romance.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY'S latest contribution to the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature program is called "Sunlight's Last Raid" and in all that pertains to plot and characterization is a glorified dime novel of the brand that used to delight the unregenerate youth of 40 years ago. And it is a rattling good yarn at that, with impossible but delightfully exciting situations, rough riding, plenty of pistol play, a kdnapped heroine, a mysterious hero and a bold outlaw chief. Unfortunately, the director has not constructed the picture skillfully. In order to stretch it out to five parts he has repeated the riding and fighting and the business of falling or climbing down the side of a mountain until the big situation at the end is pretty well anticlimaxed.

The holdup scene on the train could also be improved. It is too long and is not well played. Stories of the nature of "Sunlight's Last Raid" need careful handling on the part of a director. As most of their situations will not stand a logical test, the spectator's attention should be fully occupied in watching the rapid and adroit unfolding of the plot. The locations are often picturesque, a number of well-trained horses and bold riders taking part in the action.

Mary Anderson as Janet Warned, the eastern girl whose first visit to the cattle country is full of surprises, meets all the requirements of the role, even to risking her neck some half a dozen times. Alfred Whitman is a hero who would win any maiden's heart, and V. Howard, Fred Burns and A. Garcia are capable as Captain Sunlight, Bill Warned and Pedro, respectively.

"The Edge of the Law."

Ruth Stonehouse Featured in Five-Reel Offering Which Deals With the Adventures of a Girl Thief.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

RUTH STONEHOUSE is the second in the week's offering of features to appear as a feminine Oliver Twist. She is cast as "The Spider" in this Butterfly number, adapted for the screen by Harvey Gates from a story by Maude Pettus. The direction was in charge of Louis Chaudet.

The story opens with the girl, attired in boy's clothes, operating in lower New York as a pickpocket. She turns in her gains to an individual known as Pop Hogland, who conducts a school of crooks. Because she is unsuccessful as a pickpocket Pop and another of his pupils, known as Pliny Drew, decide to attire her in girl's clothes and put her out on a big job of some sort. She is to be paired off with Pliny for this work.

The girl rebels against the proposed connection with Pliny, and as the story moves along suffers an injury from an automobile which throws her into the home of wealthy young Ralph Harding and his mother. A love affair ensues, in spite of the fact that the girl pretends to have lost her memory. An attempt is made by Pliny Drew to involve young Harding in a mining swindle, and the girl exposes this plan and saves her lover and benefactor.

The plot seems rather conventional in character, following in the wake of so many crook plays of one kind and another. The characterizations are not sufficiently individual to stand out with any special strength, though the story itself is not uninteresting. It is nicely photographed and there are no breaks in construction, but has no particularly big moments. It makes on the whole an offering of about average strength.

Others in the cast are Lloyd Whitlock, Lydia Yeamans Titus, M. W. Testa, J. Webster Dill, Betty Schade and Harry Dunkinson.

"The Countess Charming"

Bright and Entertaining Paramount Comedy with Julian Eltinge in the Title Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE COUNTESS CHARMING" is bound to charm, and in that respect it stands unique among the class of production known as a "vehicle," principally because it rises out of the vehicle class at times, and because of the remarkable personality of Julian Eltinge. It was a happy thought to utilize this accomplished actor on the screen. He is an artist outside of his specialty. In that specialty he is a high comedian to the finger tips, one of the most interesting characters shown on the screen recently, though that is hardly a compliment. He has an individuality all his own in the guise of his sex, and he is highly refined in his sex-transformation, very much such an interesting human creature as woman would be if she grew up the way she ought to her normal status, physically speaking, mentally perhaps, and morally maybe.

Not because he is a clever impersonator, but through those innate qualities, both obvious and subtle, which combine to make the true artist, Eltinge completely dominates "The Countess Charming," but there is a happy union of other essentials to success. The story is original and told with high constructive skill. The settings are admirably chosen and photographed; the types are all good; the handling that of fine craftsmanship, and the subtitles fairly sparkle at times—"laughter and applause" went to the lines in the presentation before a large audience. The story relates to a social snub given to a bright young man not in an exclusive set and his amusing method of turning the tables on snobbery, but it is screamingly funny at times, particularly when he is compelled to die in his assumed identity. The story, direction and acting form one of those nice blends which interest all classes of people and constitute a decided contribution of merit to the motion picture art.

"The Yankee Way"

George Walsh in Farce That Makes Many Laughs Wins Balkan Princess Played by Enid Markey—Mixture of Humor and Rough, Speedy Action.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE early part of "The Yankee Way," a Fox five reel farce, with George Walsh in the leading role, has character and several bits of fresh humor. It opens with a bit of rough and tumble, and rough and tumble fill the bigger part of the last reel. The humor made the discriminating laugh, and the house roared at the closing fracas, with its rough running and comic scrimmages. It will take with audiences as a whole, as it is a typical Walsh farce, mixing sentimental pathos with the broadest kind of fun. The discriminating will be amused and interested, for the picture has a good touch of wholesome American heartiness, or if the hero had been Dick McGuire instead of Dick Mason it would have been Irish heartiness. Those who don't expect much substance in a play will be delighted with it the more, as Enid Markey makes a first class princess with her round black eyes and crown of curley midnight.

Joe Dowling as "Dad," an American millionaire, is quite convincing, as is Coyote Jones by Charles Elder. The time will probably come when picture dramas with these characters will play up the viewpoints of Dad or of Coyote to a greater extent, and this will add a good deal to their substantial value and interest to young and old alike; but it won't happen while the public demands stars, and the more of any one of them the better. James O'Shea plays a tough character; Ed. Sedgwick, the American counsul; Deward Cecil, a Lithunian prime minister, and Tom Wilson, a big, hulking American coon who has been left in Lithunia by a circus. The story begins in a Chicago jail, and ends in a Lithunian royal palace after the hero has nobly rescued the princess from her scheming prime minister.

DOUBLE-CROSSED" is a product of violently contrasted good and bad qualities, of superb and thoroughly artistic settings and handling, of exceptionally fine types, with Pauline Frederick using all the force of her attractive personality to win success, and yet it does not seem to make a favorable impression on the whole. The director and his assistants deserve very high commendation for the skilled visualization, presenting as it does some exquisite picture effects, nice composition, and wonderful contrasts of light and shade. Pauline Scene from "Double Crossed" (Paramount).

Frederick dominates through fine artistry of interpretation, and she is admirably supported by Riley Hatch and other members of the company, but the material has been used too often for modern employment. Those outworn devices, long discarded by the theater, and threadbare even in the new art, bob up continually, the stolen "papers" of ancient melodrama, of crime; the wife who visits the villain in his rooms at a late hour, the constantly overheard conversations, all that and more of the same kind are resurrected again when we thought them buried forever.

The hero is a self-confessed thief; the heroine becomes one of the meanest kind, stealing from her host to save the husband.

and the final restoration of the "papers" does not lift the stigma from them. They are simply lacking in principle when put to such trials, as many pass through with clean hands. Among two thousand people there was not a single handclap when I saw the presentation, though the visualization was of an exceptionally high character, such as would grace almost any composition. It can only be summed up as a highly artistic presentation of some very stale material in the way of a story.

Scene from "Broadway, Arizona" (Triangle).

nappers, it is impossible to resist the temptation to paraphrase Scott's familiar lines and thus place it on record that a new Lochinvar has come out of the West and, of all the kidnappers, his nerve is the best. To fully appreciate this statement, it is only necessary to outline the story of the play:

A millionaire cattle owner, from "Broadway, Arizona," comes to New York, falls in love with a musical comedy star, proposes to her, and the affair is used by the lady's press agent to gain newspaper publicity. The westerner is then enlightened as to why he was invited to meet the star. When he learns, some months later, that she has had a physical breakdown and must have rest and quiet, he hurries to New York, kidnaps the girl, places her on board of a private car and takes her all the way to Arizona, clad only in a "robe de nuit." When sought by a detective and a sheriff's posse, this modern Lochinvar hurries the actress lady up into the mountains and exchanges real bullets with his pursuers, until out-generalled. Whereupon, the lady comes to his rescue and prevents his being carried back to Broadway, N. Y., in irons, by explaining that it was all another strategic move in the interest of publicity, and that she really loves her abductor and intends to be married to him without further delay.

However severe a jolt this tale may give to the law of probability, there is no denying that it is an entertaining bit of fiction, which is much enhanced by the manner of its playing and the care with which it has been produced. A humorous perception, in keeping with the theme, has helped Lynn F. Reynolds, both in writing and in producing his story, and Olive Thomas is, naturally, at home in the role of Fritzi Carlyle, the musical-comedy star. George Chesebro is a fine figure of a man, as the cattle owner, and George Hernandez is a facetious Uncle Isaac Horn. Jack Curtis, Dana Ong, Thomas S. Guise, Leola Mae and Robert N. Dunbar complete the excellent cast.

"The Tar Heel Warrior."

A southern colonel of the old school, caught in the meshes of stock speculation, while on a visit to New York, and yielding to the temptation of risking money not his own, is the principal incident of "The Tar Heel Warrior," a five-part Triangle production by J. G. Hawkes, directed by Mason E. Hopper. The story has a good supply of the local color that is always to be found in fiction of the South, and Col. Dabney Mills has the love for his family honor and also for mint juleps, that are the distinguishing qualities of gentlemen of his line. The final scene, where the Colonel tries to put an end to his life as the only means of clearing the stain from his name, is impressive, and there are a number of human touches throughout the action.

The scenes down South are much more convincing than those that represent the city on the Island of Manhattan and the surrounding burgs. Walt Whitman, the Col. Dabney Mills of the cast, looks the part to the life but by no means exhausts its possibilities. A greater variety of facial expression would add considerably to his work. Well-played parts should be credited to Ann Kroman, William Shaw, James W. McLaughlin, Dorcas Matthews, Thomas S. Guise, John P. Lockney and Wilber Higby. A Southern mammy and uncle, played in natural color by Clara Knight and George Eest, is a decided improvement on the artificial brand. Mason E. Hopper directed the picture.

AN ETERNAL triangle of more or less familiar dimensions forms the aix on which the plot of "Exile," a five-reel Lasky-Paramount picture, revolves. But into the construction of the triangle has gone enough new and interest-holding plot material to make it a substantial point on which to move. Also the story has been given a production, with Mme. Petrova in the stellar role, that makes it all the more acceptable as entertainment. "Exile" is more a photoplay of character study than one of action. The love interest is rather played down in the early reels and later accelerated, with resultant opportunities for emotional work that are taken advantage of to the full by Mme. Petrova.

The story of "Exile" is laid in a Portuguese possession in Arabia. Mme. Petrova is seen as the wife of a despotic and despicable chief justice of the colony. She abhors him, but her sense of duty keeps her at his side. He sends an incriminating letter to a young American engineer. Later he instructs his wife to get the letter and pay "anything" for it. The wife is ready to pay the biggest price. In the engineer's bungalow she confesses her love for him. He, in love with her, refuses to take the price of the letter. He gives it to her. Following a stormy scene, the wife flees from her husband. The Arabs rise against him, and his wife endeavors to stay their wrath. He is caught by the mob. She is rescued by the young engineer. The chief justice is killed by the mob, leaving clear the way to love.

Wyndham Standing is seen as the chief justice. His part—not a pleasant one—is handled capably. Mahlon Hamilton, as the young engineer, gives a creditable performance, as also do Warren Cook, Charles Martin and Violet Reed.

Maurice Tourneur has given the picture fitting production.

Some of the interior lightings are particularly fine. Many of the sets are quite beautiful, and the composition of many of the exteriors shows an artist's touch.

"The Corner Grocer"

Lew Fields and Madge Evans in Five-Part Peerless Screen Version of Stage Play Written by Adolph Phillips—Released by World.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE are many simple souls that will find both humor and pathos to their liking in the Peerless screen version of "The Corner Grocer," a stage play written by Adolph Phillips and highly esteemed in its day. The plot tells of a kindly old German storekeeper who becomes wealthy by strict attention to business and who is then ruined by a wayward son. The boy has the right material down inside and, when he realizes his error, turns to and makes good. Although this story has been told over and over again, it never seems to lose its hold, some writers claiming that "The Prodigal Son" motif is the most popular one in fiction. At any rate, like the poor, we have it always with us.

Adolph Phillips, who created the character of the grocer, knew all the tricks for building up a fat part, and Lawrence McCloskey's scenario pays strict attention to the same important matter. Lew Fields is the Charles Wendel of the picture and acts as if he thoroughly enjoyed the role. The mingling of smiles and tears that runs through the part gives him an opportunity to show his best powers, and he is finely human at all times. His former training leads him to occasionally overplay a scene, but his sincerity is never in doubt. Little Madge Evans is the heroine of the story during childhood, and is natural and winning. The other members of the satisfactory cast are Lillian Cook, William Sherwood, Justine Cutting George Cowl, Pinna Nesbit, Nick Long, Jr., Viva Ogden, and Stanhope Wheatcroft. George Cowl directed the production.

"Flirting With Death"

Herbert Rawlinson and Brownie Vernon in Five-Part Bluebird Photoplay That Introduces Incidents of Circus Life.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A JUMP from a flying machine by the aid of a contrivance called an aerochute is the big sensation in "Flirting Wth Death," a five-part Bluebird photoplay in which Herbert Rawlinson and Brownie Vernon are the principal actors. Scenes from circus life are contrasted with existence in a small village, and a number of rural characters of amusing peculiarities furnish most of the comedy. The heroine's father is the inventor of a new device for descending from a flying machine and a stock company is formed to place the invention on the market. Reports are circulated that the machine is worthless and the villagers, who have invested in the stock, are eager to mob the inventor. A successful exhibition of the invention is the only thing that will satisfy them. When the professional airmen refuse to make the trial the hero steps forward and offers to attempt it. He descends to safety and wins the eternal gratitude of his future father-in-law and the wild applause of the delighted investors.

The story is not as dramatic as its title would indicate, and the action is generally deliberate, but it is often amusing and its character drawing is cleverly handled. The acting is commendable. Herbert Rawlinson is easy and physically attractive as the hero, and Brownie Vernon makes an excellent foil as the heroine.

Conquest Program No. 9

Robert Louis Stevenson's "Kipnapped" Forms the Splendid Adventure Number of the Program.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE ninth Edison Conquest program contains interesting and well-presented subjects, the feature number being an unusually fine presentation of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Kidnapped." Featured in the cast are Robert Cain, Ray McKee and Joe Burke. This feature was reviewed in these pages some time ago, and it will therefore not be necessary to cover the same ground a second time. We will, however, draw attention to the splendid portrayal of the Laird of Shaw by Robert Cain. It is a piece of work well worth the seeing.

Other numbers on the program are "Quaint Provincetown, Cap Cod, Mass.," a delightful silhouette of the fairy tale, "Little Red Riding Hood," and a scientific subject entitled "Microscopic Pond Life," in which are remarkably well-photographed closeups of minute forms of life found in still water much magnified. The program is about the average quality of Conquest programs.

"The Storm Woman" Heads U List

Diversified Bill of Drama, Comedy and News Features for Week of October 1—Gives Variety to Strong Combination of Productions.

UNIVERSAL'S schedule for the week of October 1 is headed by a Gold Seal drama of unusual cleverness, of the title, "The Storm Woman," featuring Claire McDowell. E. Magnus Ingleton is the author, and Ruth Ann Baldwin prepared the scenario and directed the production. The major part of the production consists of a fanciful tale of the tragic life of an Italian woman who is seen every day sitting at a conspicuous post in a big city with a cage of fortune-telling parrakeets before her. The mysterious figure, shrouded in a black shawl, has aroused the curiosity of a cub reporter, who wishes he knew her life story. For a plate of beans and a cup of coffee a broken-down writer agrees to tell him the tale. It proves to be a recital of gripping interest, rehearsing the wrongs suffered by the young Italian girl at the hands of an adventurous tourist, her pursuit of him to America and her final infliction of vengeance. The denouement, when the cub seeks further particulars from the parrakeet woman, is highly amusing and a complete surprise. A Nestor comedy, "Pete the Prowler," is another release for the same day. Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts are the featured players in this rib tickler, which Eddie and Lee wrote themselves and which was produced by Louis W. Chaudet.

For Wednesday, October 3, an L-Ko two-reel comedy, "Counting Out the Count," featuring Billy Bevan and Lucille Hutton, is provided. It's all about a count who wanted to marry Lucille but whom Lucille didn't want to marry. After much clothes changing, which entails many ludicrous machinations on the part of Lucille and her true lover, the count is undone, and Lucille marries the man of her choice. On the same date Universal Animated Weekly No. 92 is released.

A two-reel Star Featurette, "A Prairie Romeo," with George Hernandez, is scheduled for release Thursday, October 4. This is a Western comedy drama, which was both written and produced by Lynn F. Reynolds. Hernandez takes the part of a banjo-playing Romeo. His serenade meets with a reception decidedly unpleasant at the hands of the boss of the ranch where his Juliet is employed, so he proceeds to drown his sorrows in the time-honored fashion. There's nothing but fun all the way through. Another comedy, this one a Joker, featuring Gale Henry and William Franey, and entitled "Her Naughty Choice," is released the same day.

Universal Screen Magazine No. 39, with its picturization of timely educational topics, is scheduled for Friday, October 5, and in addition the popular trio, Max Asher, Dave Morris and Gladys Tennyson will be seen in "Kicked in the Kitchen," a Victor comedy by C. B. Hoadley, and produced under the direction of Craig Hutchinson.

"The Lion's Lair," a Bison two-reel animal drama, featuring Eileen Sedgwick and Fred Church, is listed for Saturday, October 6. There are many thrilling situations, in which elephants and lions figure. On the same date Universal Current Events No. 21 is scheduled for release, as is also "The Masked Marvels," a Joker comedy, with Gale Henry and Milton Sims.

Progress of Art Dramas.

Recent activities in the executive offices of Art Dramas, such as conferences with the exchange and franchise holders, trips to Chicago and Cleveland by General Manager A. F. Beck, and big offers to several motion picture stars at present in New York has been arousing the interest of the trade. News has been difficult to obtain, but from sources considered to be authoritative it has been learned that commencing the first week in November an augmented and greater Art Dramas program will be released and handled by the same distributing channels throughout the country. Some of the biggest stars of filmdom have been approached and it is believed that at least four series of star features will be announced as ready for release commencing Nov. 1.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

THE BATHTUB BANDIT (Kalem).—"Ham" and "Bud" are lured into the employ of a man whose specialty is stealing bathtubs from wealthy homes. The comedians float to a distant seaport in one of the bathtubs, and numerous adventures befall them. This is a good piece of burlesque, and will amuse the average audience very well.

THE ONION MAGNATE'S REVENGE (Kalem).—A typical "Ham" and "Bud" comedy, in which the comedians first appear as icemen. Later they rob a man who has cornered the world's onion supply, and receive appropriate punishment. An amusing subject.

THE LAW NORTH OF '65 (Selig).—A two-part drama, which, belonging to the old school of pictures, has its story outlined clearly. The locality where the story is staged is very attractive, showing an abundance of snow and charming river scenes. The picture follows the story of a young girl who fell in love with a stranger, marrying him in secret and jilting her own lover. He mistreats her, and is finally drowned in a struggle with a friend of the girl's former lover.

VENGEANCE VERSUS MERCY (Selig).—A one-reel drama of the West, which is rather hard to decipher as regards the story. The picture is old and has evidently been cut down from a multiple reel number. The plot seems to involve the career of a man who has been unjustly accused, imprisoned, who, when about to take vengeance on the man who caused his trouble, is guided by the instinct of mercy.

TRAINING OUR KHAKI-CLAD HEROES (Selig).—A two-reel number, showing in an interesting manner how our American soldiers of various departments are trained. The picture is well gotten together and instructive of its kind.

HIS WATERY WATERLOO (Three C Comedy).—Slow moving, rough-house farce, poorly acted.

THE LAST OF THE TROUBADORS (Vitagraph).—This picturization of an "O. Henry" story makes an excellent two-part play. The plot has humor and pathos, and the acting of Nolan Leary, S. E. Jennings and J. Abraham in the leading parts leaves nothing to be desired.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

FLIRTING WITH DEATH (Sept. 24).—Circus life has a prominent part in this five-reel photoplay, Herbert Rawlinson and Brownie Vernon featured. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Butterfly Pictures.

THE EDGE OF THE LAW (Sept. 24).—A five-reel number, based on a story by Maude Pettus, which features Ruth Stonehouse as a girl crook. She has grown up on the streets, but in the course of the story manages to break away from the old life, and saves a young man who is about to be victimized by one of her former pals. The usual love affair follows. The story is rather obvious in character, and has no great dramatic strength, though well photographed and pleasing in its general presentation. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation.

"THE YANKEE WAY" (Sept. 16).—A lively farce, with a romantic idea and lots of the usual George Walsh rush and scramble. A good audience at the Fox Academy of Music in New York seemed to take to it, and it will probably serve well in almost any theater, for it has many popular things in it. A longer review will be found in another part of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph.

SUNLIGHT'S LAST ROAD (Sept. 24).—Cyrus Townsend Brady is the author of this five-part photoplay of the West, in which Mary Anderson has the star part. The locations are picturesque, and the story, although poorly constructed, has considerable interesting action.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay.

SOLDIERS OF THE SEA (Edison).—A well photographed series of views taken with the United States Marines, showing them at work and at play. We learn from the picture that our marines are capable of fighting on land or sea. They can handle artillery or fight in the trenches; and, in fact, they are all-around good fighters. This is one of the numbers on Program No. 5 of the Conquest Pictures.

CONQUEST PROGRAM No. 8.—A number that the reviewer found pleasure in watching for its variety and high-class interest. For longer notice see elsewhere in this issue.

CONQUEST PROGRAM No. 9 (Edison).—This program has an excellent four-part feature in "Kidnapped," an adaptation of the Robert Louis Stevenson story. This picture, which was reviewed some time ago, is unusually well produced and will be enjoyed. Other numbers of the program are "Quaint Provincetown, Cape Cod," an interesting scenic; "Little Red Riding Hood," a delightful silhouette of the fairy tale; "Microscopic Pond Life," and a comedy number entitled "Friends, Romans and Leo."

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THEIR COMPACT (Sept. 17).—Eight-part melodrama from a story by Charles A. Logue, with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne starred. This picture is well acted and has a fairly good story. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY No. 140 (Gaumont, Sept. 5).—The most interesting scenes in this number of the Weekly are some splendid views of the soldiers marching down Fifth Avenue; a fire-fighting scene, where a wool storage is burned; a train wreck, and scenes at one of the training camps on one of their visiting days, are also interesting.

SANDS OF SACRIFICE (American, Sept. 24).—A five-reel feature, in which William Russell plays the leading masculine role, with Francella Billington playing opposite him. The story is not a pleasant one and is badly constructed. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

MAKING STEEL RAILS FOR THE ALLIES (Pathe, Sept. 23).—A strong half-reel industrial subject, showing the treatment of iron ore, its subsequent conversion into Bessemer steel, and then the rolling and cutting process in making rails. This is taken at a large mine and plant, and gives an illuminating insight into the entire process.

OUTWITTING HIS RIVAL (Pathe, Sept. 23).—On same reel with above. These animated cartoons by Hershfield contain some amusing characters. The action is not as clear as it might be, but the drawings are entertaining.

A CROOKED ROMANCE (Pathe-Astra, Sept. 30).—A five-reel subject by Tom Cushing, featuring Gladys Hulette, William Parke, Jr., and others. The story concerns a girl who was raised from babyhood by a thief. The latter is caught on a "job," and the girl escapes to New York City, where she meets innumerable adventures. This has no very dramatic situations, but holds the interest because of its pleasing, human touches. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

A DASH FOR ARABIA (Pathe, Sept. 30).—Episode No. 13 of "The Fatal Ring." The number contains a number of pleasing thrills. Pearl, believing Carslake is about to escape to Arabia with the violet diamond, boards the vessel at the dock. On board she is made captive by the crew, but escapes after a hand-to-hand struggle. She jumps from the side of the vessel, and Tom and the Spider pick her up in a motor boat. The reel closes with the motor boat plunging into a ferry-boat, and Pearl becomes entangled in the wheel. A characteristic instalment.

AMID THE CLOUDS (Pathe, Oct. 7).—Episode No. 4 of "The Seven Pearls." Suspense, both literal and figurative, is the main feature of this thrilling number. Through the whole instalment Ilma remains hanging from the gas balloon. Both a dirigible and a hydro-aeroplane go to her rescue. Harry Drake climbs down a rope ladder from the dirigible with a parachute slung over his shoulder, and they drop together into the lake. The number is one long thrill from start to finish.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

EXILE (Sept. 17).—Mme. Petrova is featured in this five-reel picture. It was directed by Maurice Tourneur. The story tells of a woman's willingness to sacrifice her most sacred possession. The picture presents a study in character. It will be most enjoyed by adults. The story is laid in an Arabian colony. The leading characters are the Portuguese Chief Justice, his wife and a young engineer. Reviewed at greater length in the review columns.

DOUBLE-CROSSED (Sept. 17).—A story of stolen papers restored, with Pauline Frederick in the leading role; well visualized, but presenting little that is new or vital.

THE COUNTESS CHARMING (Sept. 24).—A delightful comedy of high quality in all departments, suited to any and all kinds of audiences, with Julian Eltinge in a dual role of a bright and entertaining character. A success.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE TAR HEEL WARRIOR (Sept. 30).—The action in this five-part picture switches from a southern plantation to New York City, and tells a good story, with a colonel of the old school as the central figure. It was written by J. G. Hawks, and is well produced. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

BROADWAY, ARIZONA (Sept. 30).—Olive Thomas has a part that just suits her in this five-reel comedy, written by Lynn F. Reynolds. The picture is entertaining. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY No. 89 (Universal, Sept. 12).—Football at University of California, racing at Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; girl scouts acting as farm-hands, dancing on a municipal pier in Chicago, and many scenes connected with the war are shown in this number.

CURRENT EVENTS No. 19 (Universal, Sept. 22).—Contains scenes from military camp at Yaphank, Long Island; Camp Bartlett, Mass.; Camp Wadsworth, South Carolina, and various other war sidelights in this country and abroad; also various other instructive news features.

SOAPSUDS AND SIRENS (L-KO, Sept. 26).—A two-reel comic, featuring Bert Roach, Gladys Varden, Walter Stephens and Harry Lorraine. The settings are good, particularly the print shop and dancing school, but several of the attempts at humor are unfortunately suggestive. Cutting out certain scenes would leave this a fairly good subject.

STORM WOMAN (Gold Seal). Released week of October 1.—A three-reel subject of a tragical life, featuring Claire McDowell. This is unusual in theme, and presented artistically. The Italian scenes are picturesque and attractive, and the manner of unfolding the story is novel and pleasing. The tragedy is mitigated by an unexpected humorous ending. Others in the cast are J. Morris Foster and Joseph Girard. The story is by E. Magnus Ingleton.

THE MASKED MARVELS (Joker). Released week of October 1.—A comic number by C. J. Wilson, Jr., featuring Gale Henry and Milton Sims. The principals appear as a maid and a butler with "detective" aspirations. They are sent out on the same job, and some amusing situations occur. This is not exceptional, but will get several laughs.

PETE, THE PROWLER (Nestor). Released week of October 1.—A comedy number, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Edith Roberts, Fred Gamble and Harry Nolan. This is the ordinary elopement story, with a new and amusing twist in it. A thief, caught in the house from which the girl is about to elope, locks her in a closet. He then wears her cloak and hat and rides away with the lover. An entertaining comedy number.

KICKED IN THE KITCHEN (Victor). Released week of October 1.—A comedy by C. B. Hoadley, featuring Max Asher, Dave Morris and Gladys Tennison. The first two play Sir George Gravy and Sir Henry Spoon, two cooks masquerading as the nobility. This contains considerable funny business of a burlesque sort, and makes a pleasing number of the type.

THE LION'S LAIR (Bison). Released week of October 1.—A two-reel number by W. B. Pearson, featuring Eileen Sedgwick, Fred Church, F. D. Crittenden and Albert MacQuarrie. This is a story of the African jungle, and abounds in real thrills. Lions and snakes in the open are featured. The story is an interesting, though not particularly original, one of the melodramatic type.

A PRAIRIE ROMEO (Star Featurette). Released week of October 1.—A two-reel western number, featuring George Hernandes, George Chesebro, Jack Curtis and Martha Mattox. The former plays the part of a banjo-strumming, lovable old drunkard, whom the boys dub "grandpa." He has bad luck with a love affair, but later rounds up some bandits and then makes good with his adored one. This contains some good human touches and carries interest very well.

HER NAUGHTY CHOICE (Joker). Released week of October 1.—A comedy number by Tom Gibson, featuring Gale Henry, William Franey and Milburne Moranti. This concerns a lady clerk in a department store, and two rivals for her hand. There is considerable knockabout comedy, and some of the incidents are funny. It makes, on the whole, an offering of fair strength.

HIGH-CLASS NONSENSE (L-KO). Released week of October 1.—This number, which features Lucille Hutton and Billy Bevan, combines some of the elements of straight comedy and slap-stick humor. The scenes on the country estate are attractively pictured, and the house settings are also good. The story tells the way in which the girl's country cousin outwits a count in winning her hand. The subject is quite pleasing in certain respects; the humor is moderately strong.

World Pictures.

THE CORNER GROCER (Peerless, Oct. 1).—A five-part screen version of an old stage success, this comedy-drama, starring Lew Fields and Madge Evans, is full of homely pathos and humor. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

EMILY STEVENS IN "A SLEEPING MEMORY."

Emily Stevens, Metro star, has long been acknowledged one of the cleverest actresses on the American stage, but it has remained for a screen drama to put her dramatic powers to the severest test she has ever experienced. In Metro's forthcoming special production de luxe, "A Sleeping Memory," adapted from E. Phillips Oppenheim's popular novel of the same name, Miss Stevens is obliged to run the gamut of human emotions, to depict women of both good and evil tendencies, not only of the present day, but in different periods of time throughout the world's history. Such a demand upon the abilities of a player is unprecedented, and only a star of supreme gifts could emerge from such an ordeal triumphant. In accomplishing this feat Miss Stevens establishes forever her right to the appelation, "wonderful" Emily Stevens.

Triangle Features on Program

Special Seven-Reel Productions Will Be Released Once a Month at Regular Program Price.

COMMENCING December 1, Triangle will release a multiple reel feature once a month at the regular program price to all Triangle exhibitors who have contracts or run the program regularly. This is offered as a sort of bonus to the Triangle exhibitors, enabling them to give their patrons a monthly special feature which will net extra profits to the theater.

Some time ago it was announced that Triangle would release one big state-rights feature a month, which could be booked either by the Triangle exhibitors or by others. This would have been offered at a price considerably in advance of the regular program number. It has been decided, however, that everything will be placed on the program at the standard program rental.

Big Stories Purchased.

During the past month H. O. Davis, vice president and general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation, has quietly purchased several big and widely advertised novels and plays for these special productions. The first to be produced is "The Alley of Flashing Spears," a story by Donn Byrne, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. This is considered one of the most popular stories of the year and will take rank with the greatest special features of the past year.

Entirely aside from these multiple reel features, the other program releases of five reels each will be of a higher artistic and box-office standard than ever before, according to a positive statement issued by Mr. Davis.

"We are paying particular attention to the selection of our stories and will furnish the exhibitor with a diversified program of society dramas, comedy dramas with a punch, heavy dramas with comedy relief, strong heart-interest plays, and dramas of the outdoors. Emphasis is being placed upon the importance of titles—titles which will excite interest and a desire to buy on the part of those who see them in advertisements or posters.

Many Productions Ready.

"All October releases are now finished, and the November production will be completed within ten days, so we are now ready to guarantee not only prompt deliveries but will have prints in exchanges at least two weeks ahead of the November release dates.

"October and November releases are as follows: 'Ashes of Hope,' 'A Phantom Husband,' 'One Shot Ross,' 'Wild Sumac,' 'Firefly of Tough Luck,' 'The Stainless Barrier,' 'Doing Her Bit,' 'Up or Down?' 'Indiscreet Corinne,' 'Fighting Back,' 'The Fuel of Life,' 'Easy Money' and 'Blue Blood.'

"We are willing to stake the future of Triangle on the quality of these October and November productions from every standpoint—story, cast, lavishness of production and box-office value. They are the kind that will bring people back. We also have both Triangle and Keystone comedies for November completed and are now working on December releases. No money has been spared to make these genuine laugh producers.

Seven-Reel Specials.

"We invite the opinions of representative exhibitors as to the length of special features. The consensus of opinion of those already consulted is that the actual length should not exceed 6,000 feet, to be released in seven short reels."

Working on this basis, the special monthly releases for the program will be seven-reelers of the quality of "The Flame of the Yukon," which holds the record for being one of the best specials of the year, although it was released on the program at a price much lower than any of the state-rights features.

"RASPUTIN" RUN EXTENDED.

The New York run of "Rasputin," the World-Picture Brady-Made, at the Park theater, has been extended for the present, due to the insistent demand for tickets of admission. The only unoccupied time on the books of the Park when it was decided to place "Rasputin" before the public immediately, covered twelve days beginning September 12. Another attraction had already arranged for a fortnight following the limited "open time" available for the World Picture, which, in consequence, was announced for twelve days only.

On the opening night there was very nearly a riot in Columbus Circle, caused by the great crowd that smashed down the doors of the theater in its eargerness to get in, and it required the help of the police reserves to reopen street traffic. From that beginning the pressure upon the seating space of the Park theater has been in excess of the capacity, and efforts to secure an extension of time have been constant. The management holding the key to this situation had figured upon securing a New York showing for its own use, and did not take kindly to suggestions of an indefinite postponement, so that it was not until four days before the termination of the World's first lease that monetary and other inducements proved sufficiently alluring to open the way for a renewal.

This gives "Rasputin" an extra fortnight in its present quarters and provides the producing company with a chance to look about for another theater thereafter.

Richardson Visits Maritime Provinces

Talks to Exhibitors in Halifax and St. Johns—Eats More Banquets and Looks Over the Canadian Picture Theaters

WHEN I, together with my daughter, visited the Maritime Provinces last summer the men of Halifax, Nova Scotia, demanded that their northland city be included in the itinerary. This, however, was not a practical thing to do, but I was excused only when they had exacted solemn promise that I would visit Halifax the very next time duty called me to that portion of the "footstool." It therefore transpired that when the matter of the Maritime Province Exhibitors' League Convention came up, and it was decided that I attend the same, it was up to me to make good on my promise, and I did that same, notwithstanding the pretty awful roads (in spots) between Bridgeton and Halifax. The good wife went along, and poor old Nancy Hanks, the Go Devil, groaned and shrieked her protest as she plowed through sand 'steen inches deep, or bumpety-bumped over the rocky sections. But all things have ending, and the whole-hearted hospitality of Halifax more than repaid us for all the journey's hardship.

Some twelve miles out of Halifax an automobile containing H. E. Wall, chairman of the Board of Censors for the Province of Nova Scotia, and clusters of Halifax exhibitors and operators bumped into view around a curve, and after greetings we added to their troubles our perfectly good cloud of dust from Nancy Hank's rubber-tired heels.

Nova Scotia has seventy licensed theaters, ninety licensed operators and thirty-seven licensed operators' apprentices. Across the harbor from Halifax lies Dartmouth, with two theaters, the Royal and Gem, both owned and managed by H. R. Walker. I was sorry indeed that time limitation prevented my paying Dartmouth at least a call. But there was some consolation in the fact that I met manager Walker and Arthur Cowell, operator at the Royal, both of whom attended the banquet.

The Maritime Province exhibitors have a reputation which may be fairly considered as enviable. It is a generally recognized fact that the exhibitors of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are of the vintage known as "sound business men"; also I will vouch for the fact that they are jolly good fellows, and men whom it is a very genuine pleasure to know and enroll upon the list of one's friends. It is also a very noticeable fact, particularly in Halifax, that the exhibitors, theater managers and operators work together. There is none of that foolish "I am better than thou" super-silliness on the part of the exhibitor. He meets his operator as man to man, and not as a boss talking to a menial. And let me tell you that this is the way things ought to be. The theater manager or exhibitor and the operator are the two fundamentally important men in any motion picture theater. In order to secure perfect results it is absolutely necessary that both of these men not only be thoroughly competent, but that they work together, each aiding the other in every possible way to the end that a perfect result be placed on the screen. I desire to heartily compliment Halifax exhibitors upon their attitude in this matter.

While in Halifax it was my pleasure to again meet A. E. Wall, chairman of the Board of Censors in Nova Scotia, whom I last met in St. John one year ago. Mr. Wall (and this is not a jolly, merely a statement of bald-headed fact) not only is a thoroughly good fellow personally, but also is an example of public official, altogether too few in number. While he gets results, fulfills his duty thoroughly, and as completely as any official I know of, he has the absolute good-will and hearty co-operation of every exhibitor and operator in the Province of Nova Scotia. Mr. Wall not only censors films, but is inspector of, and has general supervision over all, theaters in the Province; also he examines and passes upon the ability of, and issues licenses to, operators. I have yet to hear one single criticism of either Mr. Wall or his methods, and that, let me tell you, is going some, particularly in view of the fact that his jurisdiction takes in the whole Province of Nova Scotia. In closing this item let me very plainly state forth the fact that Mr. Wall's popularity is not by reason of the fact that he is over-lenient in the discharge of his duties. In fact, so far as I can see, Mr. Wall has taken a very advanced stand in some matters, and I want to particularly lay stress upon one item which ought to have the vigorous support of all exhibitors and the enthusiastic support of the operators, viz.: He is officially questioning the right of film exchanges to send films to theaters in any other than first-class physical condition. Mr. Wall has taken this matter up with a number of the producers and film exchanges, and is contemplating the refusal of permit to show films which reach the theater in any other than first-class shape. I think very likely there will be a law passed in Nova Scotia forbidding any exhibitor or operator to receive from the exchange any film which is not in perfect mechanical condition. At least I know such a law is in contemplation, and that law will have the enthusiastic support of the Projection Department of this paper and its editor.

In this connection Mr. Wall proposes to protect the film exchanges by suspending or revoking the license of any operator who works unnecessary injury to the films, or who does not return the films to the exchange in practically the same condition he receives them. And that proposition, too, will receive the support of this paper just as strongly as the other, with the notation that it carries with it one other thing, viz.: the operator must be provided by exhibitor with proper repair parts for the machine, and must have a geared-down rewinder. In other words, the operator must not be held responsible for damage caused by projection machines in poor state of repair—the gearing down of the rewinder is something he can take care of himself if he is provided the proper pulley wheels by friend manager.

Halifax is a city of 65,000 people—or at least there are 65,000 in normal times. Like Duluth, Minnesota, it sets on a hillside, or at least its business section does. You climb up and then, if you are not careful, you slide down. The city has a really beautiful harbor. I am told it is one of the best four in the world. There are eight theaters, five of them straight moving pictures, two combination vaudeville and pictures, and one legitimate theater, now playing stock.

And right here let me mention one or two things which have been overlooked. The complaint of theater managers as to the utterly wretched physical condition of the films received is unanimous, which is all the more reason for the putting into effect of Mr. Wall's plan of prohibiting the showing of films reaching the theaters in bad condition. I am told by theater managers that business is good, and it seems to be the fact, because at 9 p. m. the sidewalk in front of at least one or two of the theaters was literally blocked with crowds waiting to get in.

Operating room conditions in Halifax are, taken as a whole, not at all bad. In fact, they are above the average. The rooms are mostly all of good size, and in one, the Empire, the operating room is spacious enough to almost serve as a haymow. Projection equipment, however, in some instances, stands in need of attention. Two or three of the theaters only have one projector, and at least two of them are using alternating current through Hallberg Economizers, though I understand one of these theaters is soon to include a motor generator set in its equipment. The machines are all Power's except in the Orpheus, which has three Motiographs, and in the Casino, which has two Simplex. The operating rooms are, for the most part, dark. Many of the boys have cut down their lens ports so as to allow only the passage of the actual picture light ray, and in one instance the ports are closed with glass. Ventilation in most of the operating rooms is not what it should be, and in one case it is very bad indeed, there being a pocket of hot air at the ceiling, which should by all means be exhausted by means of a sixteen-inch fan and properly arranged vent pipe.

Everything considered the screen results were, at least at the time of my visit, good. There is, however, a tendency on the part of some theater managers to excess in size of picture. This is particularly true in the King Edward, where the picture is altogether out of proportion to the size of the house. I am told the King Edward picture is only sixteen feet, although it looks much larger. If this is true there would be a distinct gain from every point of view in reducing it to fourteen, and I believe to even as small as twelve feet, though of the latter I would not be sure until I had seen it.

At the Academy of Music, the legitimate house, I found J. F. O'Connell, manager, wearing a smile at least four and three-eights inches wide as he watched the stream of money pouring in at the box office. I also met R. G. Edwards, director of the stock company. Friend O'Connell made a hit with me when he said, in referring to my bump-the-bump trip into the city: "Yes, Richardson, California may boast of her climate and scenic beauty, but Nova Scotia roads are in a class by themselves." To which I quickly and enthusiastically remarked: "Amen." The Academy has a company of eighteen. It seats twelve hundred, has a very large and thoroughly equipped stage. It runs pictures occasionally.

At the Imperial, W. M. Herschorn, proprietor; D. M. McRae, manager, I found a very complete projection plant, including a motor generator set; good-sized operating room, with dark walls, lens ports cut down, and a good screen result, with a 15½-foot picture at seventy feet; two Power's 6B motor-driven projectors and a spare Power's machine. Bryant Fox is chief operator, with W. B. Bezanson assistant.

At the Strand, J. M. Franklin, manager, there is vaudeville and pictures. The Strand seats eight hundred, and puts on a good show. John Brown is operator. Power's machines are used. At the Strand there occurred a very illustrative incident. It seems that an intelligent (?) porter had laid two perfectly good shirts on an electrical heater somewhere on or under the stage. Naturally, from that particular combination, a smudge of smoke soon resulted, whereupon a portion of the audience made a combined bolt for the exits. Fortunately incipient panic was quickly allayed by the announcement of the real state of affairs from the stage, but the amusing part of it was that in one of the boxes sat two or three army officers, together with their lady friends, and they were among the first to lead the rush to the doors. It is to laugh! The question naturally arise in one's mind as to what would happen if these officers were in the trenches and a lighted cigarette butt was tossed in by a "friendly" German.

Acker's Theater is undergoing remodeling. I therefore just dropped in on Mr. Acker and his operator, James A. Flinn. The house runs vaudeville, with a three-reel feature picture.

The Orpheus seats elevn hundred. W. V. Gastonguay is manager, assisted by R. Shepherd, who also is an operator. The operating room of the Orpheus is not as large as it should be, but, in the language of our Canadian friends, it is "not so bad." It has good ventilation and automatic sprinkler system, a curiosity in the poerating room, and three Motiograph projectors. A. E. DeLong is chief operator, H. Bishop, assistant.

At the King Edward, George X. Couture, manager, there is an excellent operating room. Power's machines are used and the motor-driven rewinder is geared down by an adjustable rheostat. Operator H. J. Ward impresses one as an excellent man. He has several inventions of his own, one of which is particularly clever. It consists of an ordinary sprocket carried on a spindle set into a handle so that it revolves freely on the spindle. There is a notch opposite every fourth tooth in the rim of the sprocket, and by setting one of these notches opposite the dividing line at the end of a dark film and running it along the film there will be a dividing line opposite any notch where the sprocket stops. The ports of this room are large. It has an excellent port shutter system, very similar to the one recently illustrated from Tucson, Arizona. In this room is a locker containing a complete set of spare parts, etc., all neatly arranged and labeled. The picture in the King Edward is entirely too large for the house. Screen result good.

At the Empire, George J. B. Metzler, manager, I found an operating room almost large enough to act the part of the haymow in a farmer's barn. It was also very thoroughly fireproof, because the ceiling and floor are of solid concrete, and the surrounding brick walls are about eighteen inches thick. Fred B. Metzler, president Local Union, I. A. T. S. E., is chief operator, with Mont Lanigan, assistant. Two Power's machines are used, and they are putting on an excellent picture, with alernating current through Hallberg Economizers.

At the Casino, R. J. MacAdam, manager; D. Sullivan, assistant, I found a large operating room and an excellent sixteen-foot picture being projected 107 feet; two Simplex machines and alternating current from Hallberg Economizers. The Casino seats 1,160. T. S. Daley is chief operator, Robert Hooper, assistant.

The auditorium lighting in Halifax is not bad, though in all instances it might be materially improved.

At midnight Thursday, September 6, the men of Halifax placed their combined knees under tables, upon which was served a banquet, which gave no suggestion of food shortage in Nova Scotia. The managers, Mr. Wall, and the editor were, upon this occasion, guests of Local Union 497, I. A. T. S. E., F. B. Metzler, president, acting as toastmaster. In addition to the Censor and every exhibitor and operator of Halifax, the following were present: Jack Farr, operator, member Local Union 590, Lowell, Mass. now working in the Premium Theater, Sydney Mines, N. S., who had traveled almost 200 miles to meet the editor and hear his address on projection. Sydney Mines has 8,000 population. The Premium, its only theater, is managed by W. H. Cuzner. The Premium runs vaudeville and pictures; picture 14 feet wide at 97 feet on a tightly stretched albastian-coated screen, with wide border of black; two 6-A projectors; A. C. through Power's inductors. Seats 550.

Across the harbor from Sydney Mines lies Sydney, population 20,000 which city contains huge steel mills and other important industries. It has two theaters—the Casino, owned by same parties who own the Halifax Casino, and Acker's Theater, owned by the same men who own the Acker's Theater of Halifax. Mr. Gates manages the Ackers, which uses both vaudeville and pictures. The Casino runs straight pictures, with A. C. at the arc. It has a very large picture, which is an error, if I rightly understand the condition. Near Sydney lies North Sydney, 6,000 population, which is served amusement by and through the Family theater. It projects a 16-foot picture at 95 feet, using A. C. at the arc.

But to get back to our subject. P. R. Fielding, operator, Princess theater, and A. D. Irving, operator, Strand theater, both of Truro, N. S., and A. W. Ferguson, manager Grand theater, Moncton, N. B., attended the banquet and were honored guests of the Halifax Union. All had, so they told me, made the trip especially to hear and meet your humble servant, which I take as a very genuine compliment.

That the banquest was enjoyed by all, goes without saying, and I believe what I said at its close fell as seed to a fertile soil.

The men of Halifax are the right sort. May they and their tribe increase and multiply.

Both going and coming we stopped for a call on our old friend A. J. Mason, formerly operator, Imperial theater, St. John, N. B., now manager of the Opera House at Wolfville, N. S. The opera house is a really nice little theater and Mason has succeeded in increasing its business by 100 per cent. It has a good operating room, but just at present, only one machine—a Power's. This condition is, however, only temporary.

A call was also made at the Bijou Dream, Digby, N. S., owned and managed by our old friend James Cripps, a live wire, who has long supplied Digby with its theatrical amusements.

From Digby we crossed the Bay of Fundy on the steamer Empress, a three-hour sail. On board, convention bound, were the following, who had motored down to Digby from Halifax: J. M. Franklin, N. V. Gastonguay (going to his doom—he is the new League president), R. J. MacAdam, Don McRae, M. Hershorn, G. J. B. Metzler. Also there were A. E. Wall, censor; A. J. Mason, Wolfville; James Cripps, Digby, and the editor and wife.

As the steamer Empress docked at St. John wharf a flock of operators grabbed our baggage and soon the choo choo wagon landed us in comfortable quarters at the Duffem hotel, already filled or reserved from cellar to garret by theater people. At midnight the operators of St. John, gave a banquet in honor of Ye Editor, after which we talked to "the boys" on the old, familiar topic, for an hour and a half, finding in them a receptive and appreciative audience. St. John operators are a well-appearing, intelligent lot of men, who are a credit to the profession.

It is not our purpose to report the convention. That has already been ably done by our correspondent, Alice Fairweather. The gathering was large; also it was thoroughly representative. The convention was remarkable in two things, viz., first, there were absolutely no politics visible to the eye, which is enough to give the weak man heart failure; second, it got right down to business and transacted the same without fuss and feathers usually so much in evidence at the sessions of conventions.

Rose Tapley and Belle Bruce covered their charming selves with yet more glory and made friends on every hand; C. C. Pettijohn, general manager American Exhibitors' Association, made a splendid impression, as did also those others who were there to aid in making the second annual convention a success.

The boat trip up the charming St. John river to Beulah camp ground was just one rip roaring, jolly good time, from landing to landing. There was plenty to eat, and plenty to drink too—if you knew where to find it. There was speaking, but when Sam Speedon started to sing we drew the line, coaxing Rose Tapley to recite a poem instead.

The convention wound up in a blaze of oratory at the Imperial theater Sunday night. An invited audience was present and listened with wrapt attention to the speakers, interrupting with frequent and generous applause.

As to the visitors' view of the men of the Maritime Provinces why?

For they are jolly good fellows,
For they are jolly good fellows,
For they are jolly good fellows,
Which nobody can deny.

Monday evening the writer was one of a party invited to dinner at the home of Manager Smith of the Empress theater, west St. John. Besides the Editor there were Rose Tapley, Belle Bruce and C. C. Pettijohn. Mrs. Smith is a thoroughly charming hostess and the visit will long be remembered by us all. F. H. RICHARDSON.

Monroe Salisbury Joins Bluebird

BLUEBIRD'S arrangements for the coming season include a series of Rupert Julian productions, in which Ruth Clifford will be starred with Monroe Salisbury, her leading man. The first picture featuring this combination will be "The Desire of the Moth," to be released October 22. The announcement that Mr. Salisbury will be permanently associated with the Rupert Julian productions will lend attractiveness to the series because of his fine attainments as an interpreter of dramatic expression.

He appeared in the first Lasky picture, "The Squaw Man," playing with Dustin Farnum, and also was the lead in "The Goose Girl," one of the first of Marguerite Clark's vehicles. One of Salisbury's most recent notable characterizations was that of "Alessandro," leading role in the screen production of Helen Hunt Jackson's beautiful story, "Ramona." He also made a distinct success as "Conrad La Grange" in "The Eyes of the World," and subsequently played with George Beban.

Monroe Salisbury.

The father of Bluebird's new leading man was the late Monroe Salisbury, who was famous in his day as owner and driver of fast horses. His stable of trotters and pacers were familiar to the followers of harness racing at a time when the sulky shared favor with the public in competition with running horses. Young Salisbury followed the stable during his vacations and whenever he could induce his father to let him remain away from school.

It was his association with racing men that finally led him to adopt the stage as a career. His father was widely popular with theatrical people, and through an acquaintance gained with many prominent actors young Salisbury eventually obtained an opportunity to go upon the stage. When the screen gained its tremendous vogue Salisbury left the stage and has become prominently identified as an actor of responsibility and talent.

LOUISE GLAUM RETURNS TO COAST.

Louise Glaum, Triangle star, returned this week to Los Angeles after a ten-day vacation in New York City and will commence work at once on a production, the story of which is awaiting her perusal. This will be one of several pretentious features in which she will be starred by Triangle.

Miss Glaum set at rest all rumors concerning her departure from the Triangle company by stating emphatically that she was under contract with Triangle for more than a year and that she was glad to remain with the organization of which she has been a member since its inception.

Her purpose in visiting New York was not only to enjoy a much needed rest, but also to meet personally the officials of the Triangle Film and Distributing Corporations.

BRONX MOVIE BALL NOVEMBER 5.

The Cinema Exhibitors Association of Bronx County, New York, Bronx Local No. 2, M. P. E. L. of A., will hold its fifth Annual Movie Entertainment and Ball on Monday, November 5, at Hunt's Point Palace, One Hundred and Sixty-third street and South Boulevard, Bronx.

There will be a movie entertainment and an all-star photoplayers' grand march for the many photoplay stars who will attend.

Marcus Loew, a Real Showman

The Personality Behind a Great Enterprise—Rapid Growth from Small Beginnings—Policies That Have Made Loew Quality a Standard.

By Hanford C. Judson.

NO MORTAL ever made something out of nothing. Behind every special human success there is a special human quality, and the work that a man does is the truest picture that it is possible to make of him. An interviewer from the Moving Picture World was waiting in Marcus Loew's outer office. He had never had a talk with Mr. Loew. He knew something of the extent and financial value of the Loew enterprises and he knew the quality of the Loew entertainments. Out of the corner of his eye he was sizing up the atmosphere of the place. Many people were passing in and out along the hall, players, house managers, writers, young men and women of the office force and men of affairs, some of them with that about them which indicated a measure of substantial worth. But he noticed none belonging to the office who didn't seem successful enough to be happy. It looks like a pleasant office to work in and for. And if one has real business with him, one of the pleasantest persons to meet is Marcus Loew himself.

Marcus Loew.

The Man at the Head of Loew Enterprises.

The printed pictures of Marcus Loew don't tell you much about him. They show the roundness of his head and features and they show a kindly face. His eyes are a pleasant but unusual green and show sensibility and imagination. Talking with him the writer became conscious of a greater capacity in him than he expected. Nowadays there is so much high-class talent in every great organization that there is a tendency to regard it as a machine and the man at the head of it being more lucky than necessarily able. It it probably never so wholly, and in this case it grows on one that the Loew enterprises are an excelent likeness of Marcus Loew. He is an unspoiled man and he makes a very good impression on one as a man. He shows a bigness by his simplicity and his conversation confirms it.

Aimed at Many Seats to Lessen Admission Price.

Marcus Loew is a very rich man, and his wealth comes from service and benefit. He was one of the first men to open a picture show in New York and the first man to combine vaudeville with pictures. The thing that he seems to have aimed at was to provide a high-class entertainment to a great number of people at the same time at a nominal price. He wanted to divide the expenses of the best shows possible among the great number of patrons so that the price for a seat would be small. He now controls thirty theaters in New York alone. He has seven in Brooklyn, one in Hoboken, four in Boston, three in Fall River, one in Toronto, in Baltimore, Atlanta, Birmingham, Ga.; Anniston, Ala.; New Orleans, Shreveport, La.; Chattanooga and Memphis, Little Rock, Ark.; St. Louis, Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, and in other cities. This is a tremendous business.

He was born in New York forty-six years ago, and at the age of six was selling newspapers on the street. At twelve he was a partner in a printing establishment and later helped to edit a paper, which shows that he had not let the road to success keep him from getting a substantial education. Then he went into business for himself, and failed three times before he was twenty-one. He learned how to stumble and recover early. At twenty-three he had paid off all his obligations and at that time started on the path that has led to his present success.

Bought Penny Arcade with Warfield.

Penny Arcades were coming in, and he and David Warfield scraped together $40,000 and invested in one in Cincinnati. It was a success from the first. Some one told him about a motion-picture show across the Ohio River, at Covington, and he went over to see it. The proprietor was ticket seller, gateman and operator. He would sell tickets till he got his lobby filled, then he would open the gate and let them into the theater, close the gate again and repeat the process till the theater was full, and then he would begin projecting the pictures. The man made $75 a week, and Loew thought he could do as well. So he opened a like show in Cincinnati, and the first day just seven less than 5,000 persons saw his pictures. With this encouragement he came to New York and opened a theater for motion pictures at Twenty-third street and Seventh avenue.

About this time he went over to Brooklyn with his brother-in-law, Mr. Sichel, and looked at the Royal, a burlesque house that had been empty for a year. There were friends who tried to keep him from losing good money, but he spent considerable in brightening it up. For six months he lost steadily on an opera company, and closed the house for a while, then reopened with pictures and vaudeville. At first big acts were not engaged, but today the quality of vaudeville in the Loew houses has risen to such a standard that his theaters are known rather as vaudeville than as picture shows. But Mr. Loew says that the tendency is to pictures rather than to vaudeville. The majority, he finds, want pictures alone; a good many want them mixed with vaudeville, and some want no pictures at all, but straight vaudeville.

Expects Price of Seats to Go Up.

I asked Mr. Loew what he thought of the chance of the man with a straight picture house near one of the big, brightly lighted palace-like theaters. He said that the picture man's chance is good. I quote Mr. Loew in another connection: "The successful man of the future in this business will be the man with the seating capacity, for he will be the only one able to give a high-class show at a low rate of admission." He said to me: "We don't go into any place just because there is money to be made there. We go where there is need of one of our shows." I asked him about prices, and he said that there would probably be a rise in admissions to vaudeville houses. The Loew enterprises is charging ten, fifteen and twenty-five, and these may be increased to be fifteen, twenty-five and thirty-five. The increased expenses demand it. He said that the expense of running one of his houses was now $3,000 a week, whereas it has cost, when he began, only $250 a week. The Loew people are putting up a theater in Brooklyn, near Borough Hall that is costing $1,500,000, and will seat 4,150, and a new house at Seventh avenue and 135th street, Manhatan, at a cost of $1,250,000, with seats for 2,800. The Loew enterprises never goes into a community with less than 100,000 people to draw from.

Nothing But Real Entertainment.

The Loew policy is entertainment. No picture or act is taken for any of their houses on any other account. Though the attraction would fill the theater over and over again, unless it will entertain the people when they get there it is never booked. Attractions are chosen after careful consideration, and are tried out in what may be termed a high-priced, a medium-priced and low-priced community and the result noticed. The corporation has a department that it calls its secret service. It has a large number of employees who never come near the head offices, who do not know each other and who are unknown to Mr. Loew himself. These men and women make reports by number only to the head office in writing. They note the condition of the house as to its cleanliness, decorum, etc., and the drawing power of the attractions. These reports are checked up by second reports made by some one else.

"Four Minute Men" Idea Unfortunate.

Mr. Loew believes that nothing should be included in the show except what the patrons expected to find when they paid the admission. I asked him what he thought of the "Four Minute Men," and he said emphatically that the idea is wrong. The people come for entertainment and the lectures on economics break the continuity of the show enough to spoil it for most people. The fact that most of the speakers are not magnetic is a factor, but even under the best conditions he thinks that the Government could find a much more effective means of getting publicity. Special instructive films made to show the same things would be better from the Government's point of view, for they would do the work with less temporary irritation, which the speakers have to contend with. The fact is that these speakers provide a personal point for irritation that the Government could get along without to its advantage. Good Americans may respect a man for his patriotism without wanting to listen to him for even two minutes.

The Men Behind the Chief.

The Loew Theatrical Enterprises is a tremendous business, and it is furnishing a life work to an army. There are many big jobs and many men of first-class calibre under Mr. Loew's leading. The four men who are closest to the "chief" are Nicholas M. Schenck, his general manager; Joseph M. Schenck, his brother, manager of the Loew booking offices; David Bernstein, treasurer, a man with a genius for figures, and Samuel H. Meinhold, who handles all the employees in Loew's theaters and books feature pictures. These men have been with him since the start. Mr. Loew is a good judge of men, and the men whom he has about him prove it.

Around the World for Goldwyn

Harold Bolster Beginning Tour to Introduce New Company and Its Productions to Australia and the Orient.

HAROLD BOLSTER, who recently resigned the vice-presidency and general management of the General Film Company to join the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation as general manager, leaves next week for a trip around the world to begin the extension of Goldwyn activities into the far parts of the globe.

Sailing from San Francisco on October 4 Mr. Bolster goes first to Sydney, Australia, where he will establish headquarters in that commonwealth. On his arrival at Sydney Mr. Bolster will find that Goldwyn already has paved the way for him by sending on ahead experienced organizers and salesmen who carried the first Goldwyn productions with them several weeks ago. Trade showings will be held at Melbourne, Sydney, Brisbane, in Christchurch, New Zealand, and arrangements completed for a regularly maintained distribution in the Antipodes. As soon as the Australasian business is disposed of Mr. Bolster will move on and arrange for deliveries in Melazes in India, Java, the Dutch East Indies, China, Japan, the Philippines and Hawaii, by which time it is expected that he can visit Europe for the organization of a Goldwyn selling organization in the principal countries on that continent.

Entering the Goldwyn organization two months ago quietly and unannounced Mr. Bolster has devoted all of his time in recent weeks to the organization of Goldwyn's export department. By making his world tour he is carrying out the fixed Goldwyn policy f having all important work of organization both in America and abroad performed by home office executives, which guarantees that the Goldwyn sales methods and system of exploitation will not be deviated from in any respect except to conform, where necessary, to national requirements in other lands.

Mr. Bolster goes abroad equipped with a letter of introduction from Secretary of State Robert Lansing to all of the United States consular and diplomatic agencies in every part of the world, which will greatly facilitate his work for the Goldwyn organizations.

GLADYS HULETTE IN "A CROOKED ROMANCE."

Gladys Hulette, who excels in playing those roles where subtle humor and pathos intermingle, finds in the Pathe Gold Rooster play, "A Crooked Romance," a fitting vehicle for her art. This picture, which will be released September 30, was directed by William Parke, of Astra, and in the cast are such well known players as Paul Clerget, J. H. Gilmour, William Parke, Jr., and James E. Sullivan. In particular does Mr. Clerget deserve particular mention, for he is celebrated as one of the most famous actors France has ever produced and is a star in his own right. Winthrop Ames brought him to this country to play in "Pierrot the Prodigal," which was one of the hits of the last theatrical season.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

Pathe Gets Russian Art Films

N. S. Kaplan Turns Over His Productions to Big Distributing Company for Release.

THE FIRST big deal of the new season in the motion-picture industry has just been completed, the contracting organizations being the Russian Art Film Corporation and Pathe. By the terms of the agreement signed by Pathe and N. S. Kaplan, president of the Russian Art Film Corporation and representative of the famous Moscow Art Theater in America, all the screen productions of this country will be distributed in America and Canada by Pathe and its comprehensive organization. Negotiations for the sale of the rights in other countries are well under way.

With the success of his plans assured so far as America and Canada are concerned, Mr. Kaplan has engaged passage for Russia, and will sail from Vancouver on October 25 to continue in Moscow the production of film features for Pathe. Unless Government obstacles intervene he will have in his party an American cameraman and laboratory manager, thereby assuring the continuation of the Russian repertory under the best possible auspices. The launching of the repertory in America has been a tremendous task because of the handicap of cutting and titling the pictures in New York, thousands of miles from the base of production. This handicap will be eliminated under the new program, and the features will arrive in this country practically ready for release.

Mr. Kaplan, in discussing the details of the agreement with Pathe, said: "I have obtained the co-operation of one of the most important distributing organizations in the United States to market my productions. In fact, I am convinced that so far as Russian Art Films are concerned Pathe is the most important distributing organization in this country. The long experience of this corporation in handling foreign films is a guarantee that Russian Art Films will be introduced to American audiences under the best possble auspices. Before I return to Russia I shall deliver to Pathe twenty-six completed five and six reel features. Long before these features are all released I shall be sending other and better pictures to America to continue the repertory. In addition to this program there will be a series of special features."

It is announced that these special features will be produced under the sole direction of Mme. Sophie Kaplan. Mme. Kaplan was directing a chain of superior motion-picture theaters in Russia when Mr. Kaplan began to market there the productions of the Moscow Art Theater. Their marriage followed, and soon afterward, when the government had accepted her offer to use her theaters as barracks for soldiers, they came to America. During the months that they have been here Mme. Kaplan has spent the greater part of her time in study of the American film industry, from production to distribution and presentation. She has read dozens of scenarios, but of one thing she is convinced—she will stick to Russian stories.

"After reading many, many stories written by American authors," said Mme. Kaplan, "I am positive that the best results will be obtained by adhering to our previous policy of Russian stories for Russian stars. After all the fundamental emotions are international, and I believe that American play-goers will welcome the tense, dramatic plots and the quiet but effective methods of our stars. But I am also convinced that the best results can be obtained by a combination of our resources and yours. To achieve this superlative result Mr. Kaplan and I have decided to install American laboratory methods in our studios. An American cameraman and laboratory manager to superintend the photography and the cutting and titling of our features should result in 100 per cent efficiency.

"While Mr. Kaplan devotes his attention to the production of five and six reel features, I intend to produce one extraordinary feature a month. Both series will be released in America by Pathe. Whenever this dreadful war is over and the situation at home is more clear I shall reopen my theaters with bigger and better productions than ever, to quote your American phrase."

To this Mr. Kaplan adds that he expects to do for his American associates in Russia what they are going to do for him here. There will be an exchange of features, and the first-hand knowledge that each individual has will be utilized to produce and distribute such features as will have a consistent appeal in both the newest and the oldest republics. Mr. Kaplan has maintained all along that great opportunities were at hand for the mutual marketing of films. He is enthusiastic over his allance wth Pathe.

British Notes

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

MAY I draw the attention of American film manufacturers to the fact that there is now an increasing number of American troops, fighting side by side with those of the Allies, in the western war theater, whose only mental recreation is derived from the improvised moving picture exhibitions behind the lines? Some of these are controlled by the Y. M. C. A., and the remainder by the military authorities (Army Service Corps), and films were never needed so much as now. The Goldwyn Corporation has set a patriotic example in agreeing to provide one copy of each future release to the military for use in France.

We may shortly expect to see in London a novel departure in "red light" drama. The theatrical success of the season has been achieved by two plays of Brieux, "Damaged Goods" and "The Three Daughters of M. Dupont," produced at the St. Martin's and the Ambassador's theaters, respectively. Both are in the nature of propaganda plays, written around the hidden scourge which abnormal war conditions and a new Parliamentary bill for combating venereal disease have given topicality. Film versions are promised in the near future, provided of course they pass the censor a little quicker than the manuscript plays.

The Trans-Atlantic Film Co., Ltd. (Universal), was given a judgment in its favor in an action in the High Court, restraining two film exporting firms from shipping copies of "Peg o' the Ring" to the colonies.

Five years ago, less two months, I wrote in the Moving Picture World of the inevitable alliance between the new art of the New World and the ever green romance of the Old. One eminent American manufacturer, I remember, remarked at the time that motion picture photography under the English climate was a hopeless proposition. Now listen to what D. W. Griffith says after touring the southern counties: "The belief held by some American producers, and also until recently by British film makers, that production in this country is handicapped by the climate and inferior lighting is a myth. Some of the pictures we have already taken here are the most beautiful we have made anywhere. The light is as good as in the States, and what is more, lasts longer. In the States we have to stop work at six o'clock, but over here we have been taking pictures as late as nine in the evening. We can get much more artistic effects here, too, because of the long twilight. In the States when the sun goes down it becomes dark immediately and it is impossible to get the same effects. It is the most beautiful twilight imaginable."

"D. W. G." has also been deeply impressed with the architectural variety of the country villages. He visited one, only a few miles east of London, and wondered how the houses with their red tiled roofs and fantastic gables could all have been invented. In the new country the houses are all exactly like each other, he said. Mr. Griffith has just completed a film which, when shown in America, he says, will be worth 100,000 men to the cause of the Allies. "Let the people in the States see moving pictures of English country life, the kindly people who live there, the exquisite pastoral simplicity of the villages, and any lingering doubts that England is out for conquest, has any other motive for fighting than the freedom of the world, would be removed."

The exclusive rights for Great Britain of the "King Bee" Billy West comedies have been acquired by the Sol Exclusive Co. of Birmingham. This company, which last year operated the first Frohman Equitable exclusives in this country, has obtained certain specific booking rights of "The Birth of a Nation," and both this famous feature and its successor, "Intolerance," are now being booked to motion picture theaters.

The war has been directly responsible for many innovations in connection with moving picture development and adoption, but none is of more interest to the industry than the publication of the first military animated news reel. It is entitled "The Aldershot Command Gazette," and is edited by Capt. Cecil Shaw. A recent series of topical pictures from the "Command Gazette" have been re-edited and augmented into a single reel topical entitled "A Week With the King." This single reeler is quite historic. For the first time in history is shown a British King reviewing American troops.

Export Items

By E. T. McGovern.

JACOBO GLUCKSMANN has decided to permanently remain in New York and has recently closed a deal by which the firm of Max Glucksmann becomes the sole distributors of Speer Carbons for Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile. Mr. Glucksmann invites offers from producers for distribution in this territory.

Nat. I. Brown, general manager of Paralta, is handling the foreign markets for these films.

Felix Malitz, of the Piedmont Pictures Corporation, states that the demand for Ivan films is very strong throughout South America, and the intensive sales methods employed by Mr. Malitz and his associates are doing much toward supplying Latin-America with the films made in this country.

J. Frank Brockliss has sailed for England, leaving his New York office in charge of Sydney Garritt. Mr. Garritt has recently closed a deal by which "The Barrier" was sold for Peru to Eduardo Telting.

F. H. Knocke has been appointed purchasing agent for one of the largest film importing concerns in Brazil. Mr. Knocke's long association with Pathe makes him an ideal man in this capacity.

Leroy Garfinkle, of the Sociedad General Cinematografica, is forming an Associated Buyers' Co-operative plan, by which the entire foreign rights may be bought as a unit and distributed according to value of territory.

Reginald Warde reports a strong demand for the Christie comedies in the Spanish speaking countries, and has a number of propositions pending in these markets.

The Goldwyn Pictures should have vast foreign distribution if "Polly of the Circus" may be taken as an example of their production. The appeal of this picture is universal in scope.

The Universal have two corking films for the Latin-American trade in "The Grey Ghost" and "The Red Ace." The demand for serials in these countries is constantly on the increase and the Universal deserves credit for the wide distribution they receive.

The Medal Film Corporation of New York and Porto Rico is planning upon broadening its scope. This concern handles all the Pathe serials for Porto Rico and expects to operate in Cuba and Venezuela.

The Pan-American Trading Co. has purchased the Brazilian rights on the new states right picture, "For the Liberty of the World," with E. K. Lincoln.

A demand for better Spanish titles in American film is coming from South America. Exporters should be careful to allow plenty of footage and best translation of Spanish in the titles for this market.

Myron Selznick has obtained the foreign rights on the California Motion Picture Company's pictures and expects to dispose of them shortly.

Interesting Educationals

One Military, Three Industrial, One Travel, Three Zoological, One Athletic and Two Topical Subjects.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"In the Wake of the Huns" (Pathe).

AN interesting release of the present week, and one which adds considerably to our knowledge of the ravages of the war consists of three reels of French official war pictures, which are now in the hands of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., for distribution. These pictures were taken in the battle region on the western front after Von Hindenburg's retreat. The ruin and desolation in the region of the Somme, the Oise and the Aisne are pictured here in all their appalling tragedy. Shattered villages, blown-up bridges, devastated orchards and every imaginable form of vandalism that may be inflicted upon mere property are shown. Occasional peasants are seen among the ruins, and this gives a human touch to the views. Armies on the march and big guns in action are also shown. The subject is a strong one of its kind.

"Making Butter on the Farm" (Universal).

In Screen Magazine No. 36 will be found a comprehensive series of pictures showing the modern methods followed in making butter on the farm. The process, we are told, is shown by courtesy of the New York State College of Agriculture, Cornell University, and the opening scenes of the picture shows the pouring of the milk into the separator which separates the cream from the milk. The cream is then cooled to a temperature of about 50 degrees and held until ready to ripen or sour. Frequently buttermilk is added to hasten the souring process. When sour, the cream is placed in a churn and color added, and after about 35 minutes of churning the buttermilk is drawn off, and the butter is salted, worked and then molded into one-pound prints.

"Harvesting Lima Beans in California (Selig).

In No. 18 of the World Library will be found an interesting series of views of the lima bean region of California. Here we see more lima beans being harvested at one time than we can easily imagine. They are gathered, threshed, and bagged for shipping on the fields. An instructive subject.

"Turning Out Silver Bullets" (Conquest).

This picture was photographed at the Mint in Philadelphia by permission of the United States Treasury Department. It forms an interesting part of the Edison Conquest Program No. 7, and gives all details in the manufacture of silver coin from the melting of old heirlooms to the bagging of it for transportation. The pouring of the heated metal into receptacles from which it is taken when cooled in the shape of ingots is shown; also the beveling of the ingots by workmen whose clothing is periodically put through a process by which the gold dust gathered in them can be retracted. The rolling of the metal, the cutting and stamping of the coins, and the wonderfully rapid method of counting the coins is all of interest.

"The Rim o' the World" (Educational).

This is a series of delightful views in one of the chains of western mountains reaching down through California. From these mountains we can look off over other mountains on a country of varied charm. The picture contains the usual amount of scenic grandeur that one would expect in this class of film.

"Submarine Life" (Educational).

In "Submarine Life" we are shown a variety of fish as well as organisms that inhabit still waters, from the stickleback to the crab and on down the line to magnified views of the organisms referred to. One of the most interesting features of this picture shows a close-up of a crab eating a worm. The subject is not a pleasant one, but the picture is most unusual.

"Famous Zoo at Sidney, Australia" (Selig).

A number of the rare specimens of animal life to be found at the zoo at Sidney, Australia, have posed for the picture which is included in No. 18 of the Selig World Library. Among these are the kangaroo, the Australian emu, the crane, the cassowary, wild kowies of New Zealand, and New Zealand wild geese.

"Inland Sea Birds" (Universal).

Some attractive pictures have been made of bird life on Bird Island in the center of the Great Salt Lake, and have been included in the Universal Screen Magazine No. 36. In the picture we see a launch laden with nature students leaving some port for Bird Island. Views are then given of what they see, including a flock of California sea gulls, a group of baby gulls, thousands of pelicans taking an afternoon siesta on the surface of the lake, a belligerent young pelican, a group of sand-hill cranes, young blue heron, and finally the summit of Bird Island, with gulls and more gulls.

"Young Salts" (Conquest).

An unusually attractive picture in which we learn the routine followed by the students of the Culver Military Academy. The picture is well photographed and gives a fine account of boat races as well as students under instruction in athletics and oarsmancraft, swimming, diving, etc. This picture will be found in the seventh program of Conquest pictures.

"In a Sculptor's Studio" (Paramount-Bray).

The scenes of this picture were photographed at the studio of Edward Sanford, in Greenwich Village, the Latin Quartier of New York. The picture shows us that from a sketch the artist first molds a miniature statue in clay, after which, the clay statue finished, a plaster of paris cast is then taken, from which the sculptor works, the clay statue being too soft to admit of the necessary handling which it would encounter in being used as a model in the final chiseling of the marble. An unusual subject, and contained in the eighty-fifth release of the Pictograph.

"De-Indianizing the Red Man" (Paramount-Bray).

In the eighty-fifth release of the Pictograph will be found some interesting views photographed at the Sherman Institute, Riverside, Cal. This is one of the largest and best of the Government schools for Indians, where by careful processes the Government is striving to eliminate the Indian nature of its charges. Seven hundred students are in attendance at the school, male and female. The girls are taught sewing, cooking and other household duties; and the boys are taught useful trades. Various kinds of recreation such as football and baseball are indulged in at the proper times. The subject is a well illustrated one and gives us a good idea of how the redman is looked after in an educational way.

New Policy in Loew Theaters

Loew's Neighborhood Theaters to Run Saturday Morning Children's Performances—New Rochelle Theater Has Initial Program.

ON Saturday, September 15, Marcus Loew inaugurated a series of special entertainments for children in his New Rochelle theater. At the opening performance the theater was packed with eager-faced children and their attendants, who upon the appearance on the screen of the first number burst into a storm of delighted applause.

The entertainment was opened by Dr. Leonard, who explained the reason for the inauguration of the children's performance, stating what we have heard many times before on such occasions, that the ordinary moving picture program does not always consist of what we would have the children see. He made plain the fact that as long as Mr. Loew continued to build his Saturday morning programs for children, of the class of material approved by those interested in children's welfare in New Rochelle, his efforts would be supported.

The program was composed of one feature picture, several educational subjects, and one comedy. The feature was "Cinderella," in which Mary Pickford starred. This seemed to please the children, who were also well entertained by the heavier numbers on the first part of the program. These consisted of "A Trip Through Glacier National Park," "Antics of Metals" and a cooking lesson. Following the feature which was presented in the middle of the program another educational picture entitled, "The Making of Print Paper," and a comedy entitled "Kid Comedy" was shown.

The same policy will govern the children's programs in the Loew neighborhood theaters in and around New York, where the children's Saturday morinng performance may be looked upon as an assured improvement for the near future.

For the benefit of others contemplating following Mr. Loew's example, we would suggest that special care be taken in arranging the program. It was noticed at the New Rochelle performance that at the close of the feature picture, which consisted of four reels, the children were under the impression that the program was at an end, thereby causing considerable confusion for a few minutes.

At the close of the performance the audience was addressed by Dr. Johnson, representing the clergy, and ex-Mayor George Raymond, now of the Board of Education. Mrs. Margaret Magnin, local censor of New Rochelle, has also shown deep interest in the work. Three prizes for the best essay on the program were offered to the children; and on Monday morning following the first performance Mr. Abrams, of the publicity department of the theater, stated that over one hundred essays had been sent in at that early date, bearing evidence of the interest aroused in youthful New Rochelle.

A Poem in Film

"The Brook," Alfred Tennyson's Charming Poem, Visualized at Rialto Theater.

"THE BROOK," a visualization of the Tennyson poem of the same name, formed a delightful part of a recent Rialto program when it was presented with a dainty musical setting, such as the management of the Rialto theater is capable of providing. The picture, as would be supposed, consists of a series of scenes in which the brook is the chief mover. And just as per Tennyson, it comes from haunts of coot and hern, and makes a sudden sally, and sparkles out among the fern to bicker down the valley. By thirty hills it hurries down or slips between the ridges, by twenty thorps, a little town, and half a hundred bridges:

"Till at last by Philip's farm I flow
To join the brimming river,
For men may come and men may go,
But I go on forever."

Thus sang the brook to the maiden of Tennyson's idyl.

It is interesting to note that this picture forms a part of the Conquest Program No. 8. And it may be of further interest to readers to know that the Conquest pictures are now being rented through the K-E-S-E exchanges as programs of seven reels, or as single subjects.

Ohio in Better Film Movement

Organizations Formed in Cincinnati and Cleveland Include Representatives of the Motion Picture Industry as Well as Women's Clubs.

THE object of legalized censorship is supposed to be that of making films better. Ohio is one of the states which has adopted censorship with this object in view. It is of interest to note, therefore, that men and women of the two leading cities of the state, Cincinnati and Cleveland, interested in better films, have thought it advisable to form special organizations for the promotion of better film entertainments. In Cincinnati, through the Chamber of Commerce, the Cincinnati Screen League has been formed. It is composed of representatives of the motion picture industry, exchange managers, motion picture exhibitors, and representatives of the leading women's civic organizations, for the purpose of creating appreciation of better films. The plan of the league is that of working with the exhibitors and film exchange men to popularize better films. It is expected that this will automatically drive the other type of picture from the market. It is evident that the exhibitors of Cincinnati are nearly a unit in their desire to make better pictures popular.

The Cleveland Cinema Club, one of the clubs affiliated with the Affiliated Committees for Better Films of New York City, which is an outgrowth of the work done last year by Miss Bertelle M. Lyttle, has as objects the study of the art of motion pictures and the encouragement of its development and use of finer films. The club plans to issue a weekly bulletin containing lists of recommended pictures and to hold eight monthly evening program meetings. In the bulletin it will give synopses of stories and reviews of pictures as they are booked. It is also intended to inform the public regarding matters of general interest related to the business and art sides of projection of motion pictures.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

In Cleveland a magazine for women, of women, and by women was started in May last, called "Cleveland Women." This magazine is about to open a department on moving pictures, which will be managed by the Cinema Club of Cleveland. The issue of September 29 will contain its first effort in motion picture journalism. This issue will contain a number of articles from a number of people prominent in the better film movement. The movement is self-evident of a greater interest in intelligent circles in the "fifth greatest industry."

Katherine F. Carter has been the prime mover in the making of an educational film entitled "The High Cost of Injury." This picture has been adopted by the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey and was given a public showing in the Assembly Room, Terminal Building, Newark, on the evening of September 17.

FAREWELL TO ALLEN ADAMS.

The home office of General Film at 440 Fourth avenue, New York, gave a formal farewell to Allen Adams, its representative in the great draft army, and at the same time ratified the ideal of patriotic duty.

After the office force had assembled Treasurer W. M. Gulick announced Mr. Adams' departure. President Fred Dennett, in behalf of the young soldier's colleagues, presented him with an army comfort kit.

President Dennett also offered a warm testimonial of admiration and faith in the Americanism of young men like Mr. Adams in the country's present ordeal. As further earnest of the sentiments of himself and the home office force, he ordered that a new flag be procured for the headquarters, designating Mr. Adams as the one to raise it.

Furthermore the order has gone forth that whenever the company moves its headquarters, Mr. Adams (as the one most worthy of the task) shall conduct the removal of the flag, or in his absence, some member of his family.

Mr. Adams has been with General Film since 1913, occupying a responsible position in the auditor's office. He left last Friday to report at Camp Mills, Yaphank, L. I., with the second contingent of the New York draft.

ASHLEY TO CONTINUE WITH WORLD.

Arthur Ashley, who recently added acting for the legitimate stage to his acting and directorial capacities for the World Film Corporation, has decided to continue in pictures for another year, rather than leave the screen for the stage.

William A. Brady signed Mr. Ashley for his Playhouse production, "The Man Who Came Back," and was so pleased with the performance of his film actor and director that he signed him up for the Chicago run of this stellar stage play. In the meantime, Mr. Ashley was assigned to the direction of Mr. Brady's spectacular melodrama of the incidents leading up to the Russian revolution, "Rasputin, The Black Monk," which is now running at the Park theater. So energetically did Mr. Ashley tackle this work that immediately following its completion he suffered a nervous breakdown, necessitating a rest of several weeks.

Schooling Sheets.

THE publicity department of the Triangle Distributing Co. is whooping things up to the Service Departments of its various exchanges. It is not only going to make money renting films, but it seems to plan to help the renter get more than he turns over to the exchange. To this end it has been issuing a series of tips to the special service men. A recent sheet, running four pages of legal cap, deals with a seat sale promotion, and we wish we had the space to give it in detail, but even in brief form it will help, and it will not hurt to repeat the stuff which has already been dealt with in the department. To start off it offers this proposition: It is a waste of energy to devote more time to a sale than the sale will represent.

It is not worth while spending ten dollars in time to make five dollars in money, always provided, of course, that the ten-dollar investment will yield no further return, but it is well to remember that sometimes ten dollars' worth of time spent in drawing a five-dollar crowd will bring in hundreds of dollars' worth of business in the long run.

One scheme has to do with the forming of personality clubs. Get your patrons to express their preference for the stars, then play up to these preferences whenever that star appears on your program. This is best done singly in larger towns, but in the smaller places you can form Henry Smith clubs and Jane Jones clubs, perhaps giving passes to the energetic secretary who rounds up the members. The Triangle gives a form for a card that works well for a single name, but most patrons have second and third favorites, and we think it would pay to allow for three names of players on each card. In any case the names are indexed by players, and if two or more are mentioned a card should be made out for each name, and all Smith enthusiasts be recorded a second time if they add that Miss Jones is also perfectly lovely. The card suggestion reads: NOTICE: If you will fill out the blank spaces below with the name of your favorite player of those who pictures are showing regularly at this theater, we shall be glad to notify you in advance when his or her next picture will appear.

My Favorite Player Is.....
My Name Is.....
My Address Is .....

For an amplification of this scheme the Triangle suggests:

> Some of the theaters in large cities employ men and women to do nothing else but get theater parties together, working for the managers on commission basis.
> These special representatives are usually persons of some social acquaintance, being able to reach people of means who are likely to give parties of the kind; and in some cases they are vested with authority to sell seats en bloc at something below the usual box office scale. This plan of reduced rates, however, is not one to be encouraged. There are enough advantages in having an entire section of the theater reserved to make the proposition at regular rates entirely attractive.
> This arrangement is subject to wide variations, and is never particularly dependable. Still, if the representative works far enough ahead on the schedule so as not to interfere with the regular business by tying up blocks of seats, it may be resorted to with profit, and certainly no loss if it does not work because the agent is doing his or her part on a commission basis.
> There is still another way of handling this business that is rather more dependable because it is governed less by whims and caprices. It is going after the conventions that come to town, the regular resident clubs, the hotels, the chamber of commerce, and the board of trade.
> In mentioning the two last-named institutions one has in mind the fact that a theater is always an adjunct to be mentioned with more or less pride by civic associations. If a town has a theater, however poor it may be, the implication exists that the town is thriving. But it is up to the theater manager, in many cases, to call the attention of the boards to this fact, for, in press of other work, promoting the town canning factory or the knitting mill, they are apt to overlook it.
> The secretaries of chamber of commerce and the board of trade are usually in receipt of frequent communications asking about the desirability of locating in town, and often, too, have to act as hosts for investigating committees from other places. These committees should be directed to the theater, and there entertained. The secretaries might not think of it, so the manager should never fail to be on hand with his reminder.
> Much transient trade may be drummed up through hotels. It may be that the hotel will permit the theater to place neat program cards in each room, to encourage the patronage of transients; and it may be that the hotel clerks, night and day, may be enlisted as consistent boosters.

Practically every location has its little cousins of the rich, people of good birth who move in the best circles and yet who lack the means to hold their end up socially. They may possibly be interested in acting as agents, as suggested by Triangle, and assuredly many of them would be glad to break the ice by giving a theater party that cost them nothing, and for their own sakes they would have to boom then and later. Triangle makes one more suggestion; the selling of the entire house to clubs and societies for benefits. We do not like this idea so well because we think that it is always a bad plan to keep the regular patron from his favorite house even for a night. Make it difficult for him to get in because of the crowd, if you will, but make it possible for him to get in. Most distributing corporations now show some desire to work in with the exhibitor and sell service as well as film, but the Triangle seems to go at it with a systematic preparation that is used for results.

Who Ruff Is.

Ralph Ruffner writes, in his peculiar all capital style—

> AN OLD COLORED LADY, MOTHER OF THIRTEEN CHILDREN, CAME UP TO MY OFFICE SOME TIME AGO SEEKING A JOB FOR HER BOY GEORGE. INTENDING THAT I SHOULD BE THOROUGGHLY IMPRESSED WITH HER STANDING WITH THE GENTLEMAN WHO OWNS THE THEATRE PROPERTY, SHE TOLD ME HE HAD SENT HER, AND SHE WOUND UP WITH THIS: "I'M TELLIN' YO ALL THIS JESS SO YOU'LL KNOW WHO I IS. THAT'S WHY I THOUGHT OF YOU WHEN I FOUND MY WRITE-UP IN YESTERDAY'S MAGAZINE SECTION.

The write-up is a nice third of a page in the Spokesman-Review, Spokane, for the manager of the Liberty. Just so you will know our star performer, we are going to clip the opening of the article. Here goes:

> Messenger boy for the Western Union, office boy in the master mechanic's office, call boy, operator of a steam hammer in a railroad blacksmith shop, telegraph operator, stenographer, city ticket agent, baseball player, typewriting speed champion, near-aviator, moving picture pianist, pipe organist, musical composer, publicity man, moving picture manager, picture operator, advertising specialist! All those titles and more have fitted Ralph Ruffner at one time or another. Right now Mr. Ruffner has concentrated his efforts on a few of them in his capacity as manager of the Liberty theater.
> "A modern moving picture theater manager simply has to know all ends of his business," said Mr. Ruffner the other day, "just as a successful grocer must know all departments of his store."
> His activities demonstrate the practicability of such a business policy. He knows the front, back and middle of the moving picture business in general and the Liberty theater, where he has been presiding genius more than two years, in particular. He can work expertly in any department from the organ pit to the projecting room and he frequently does.
> Should the regular operator be unable to work and no substitute immediately available, Mr. Ruffner peels off his coat and goes into the booth and runs off the program on schedule. Should the organist sprain a finger and the relief be not within reach, Mr. Ruffner will don his jacket, adjust his tie, comb his scattered locks and preside over the big Hope-Jones organ to everybody's satisfaction. Playing pictures is second nature to him, for he began his moving picture career at the piano of an early-day nickleodeon.

That's not too much praise for a man who has done what Ruff has done, but we confess we don't see where a man who claims to be a typewriting speed champion gets off on the all-cap stuff. He is a man who really has done things and who is still doing things instead of resting on his past reputation. He has a style of his own that is hard to copy, for he advertises as he writes, and he bubbles with ideas. Lately he telegraphed to Maine from Spokane for a letter of introduction to a man in Los Angeles, and a country telegraph operator is still giggling over the way the message was worded.

Hogging It.

The Pathe exchange, Denver, seems to be hustling. Building on the Cheyenne Round Up, they show a cut of a cowman chasing a steer and modestly allude to their private roundup of the Curtis street theaters. It is something to talk about, for they have a look in at the six leading houses of the over-crowded street with one of its serials in two houses; first and second run, the News in three houses and practically all of its current offerings showing on this Street of the Screen. They run off their own advertising on private mailing cards with a multigraph or similar machine. It is not pretty to look at, but it has breeziness, and with a cut to start you off they get you reading down and keep you reading. When this can be done red and blue ink is not necessary.

Denver Has One.

Denver has a general-house program known as the Curtis Street Screen Program. It is a rather large sheet, with pages 10½ by 14, laid out, as the cut shows, with one house to each page, surrounded by outside advertising. Each house box is eight inches deep across two columns. The display in the house boxes is very poor, due to the use of a single face of type not intended for display. As the program is an outside venture, perhaps the scheme of all one face is adopted that no house may claim that another is unduly favored, but the result, no matter what the reason, is distinctly poor and the use of cuts does not help materially, since the cuts are not proportioned to the space and are placed badly. The program defeats its own ends in several ways. In all the eight pages there is not a line or chat of any sort, just the programs and the advertisements, and there is too much advertising for the programs. There should be at least one column of picture talk to each page, not necessarily on each page, but in that proportion. Only the enthusiasts will retain such a blanket issue that offers so little, and so both the theatres and the general advertisers fail to get full results from their space. Much can be done with a general organ if it is run right, but there must be some text to carry the advertising or the venture will not prove successful in the long run. A little money spent for editorial work would yield a large profit. And it is not sufficiently merely to give some type talk. The material must be well edited to be interesting. The sheet must have a personality and a pleasing one if it is to make friends.

Shows a Profit.

George B. Hendrickson, of the Idle Hour, Marion, S. C., sends in an eight-page program in two colors and writes:

> Inclosed you will find two weekly programs which I have used in my territory. The little card proved to be a business builder. The eight-page weekly is what I am using at present. This, you will see, nets me about $20 per week. It costs me $7.50 per week to get printed. On the front page I always run a cut of a star and picture which I am running during the current week; on the back page I do likewise, only under this cut I run a brief story in order to keep the little book interesting from start to finish. This gives me practically the best location in the weekly for my own benefit—that is, with the two inside pages for my weekly program. I have been in this state for about three months. My home is in New Jersey. I was for some time connected with the Rosenburg's Savoy theater, on Thirty-fourth street, New York City, and the same firm's enterprises at Asbury Park, New Jersey.
> When I came here they were running a four-reel program, of "Universal-regulars," for ten cents, and doing absolutely no business. Since I have been here I have changed the house to strictly a 15-cent feature house, and am doing a wonderful business.

The little card referred to is a card program about 3 by 6 inches, printed on one side with the program for a week. It would be better to use a vest-pocket size for this. The program proper is a 5 by 8, with the front and back printed in red and black. Evidently the sheet is not printed in four-page forms; since he does not print the program in the double middle page in red, but as four twos. The red helps to make a better looking front, and since it pays a profit the double printing is to be commended, but most printers would not turn out a two-color job at that price. Pages two, three, six and seven are all advertising. We think it would pay to drop a column or two of ads and put a half column of chat on each of the advertising pages, selecting snappy, readable stuff that will insure its being followed. It makes a good talking point with the outside advertiser after the novelty of program advertising is gone and the advertiser gets little more new business and does not realize that he is now advertising still to maintain what the program has brought in. The program form calls for little suggestion, but we think it would be better not to set the dated days in the same display type used for the names of stars and titles. An italic in a ten or twelve-point would do as well and materially aid the display by removing the competition of these extra lines of bold type. It would be well to italicize the dates and pull them over to the left-hand margin of the space instead of centering them, as at present. This will give sufficient distribution and yet keep them from blanketing the play titles. It is essential that the day and date should appear in each box, but if the day and date is legibly displayed, it is not necessary to use the same point and line as that used for the titles. The side line will give the same result with less intrusion.

Got It Wrong.

Paramount Progress is running a series of articles on how to get out a house program. The series contains much good stuff, but we are surprised to note that

> The left-hand pages of the book should be reserved for the announcements of the theater. That is the page that the eye strikes first, in turning over the pages, and it is the more desirable of the two pages. Inasmuch as the publication is gotten out for the primary benefit of the theater, the desirable positions should be retained for its use.

This is precisely the reverse of correct. The right-hand pages—the odd numbered pages—are the ones that are first seen, either in running over the pages or in turning the leaves slowly. The right-hand page comes into view while the left-nand page is still being turned over. Possibly this is a slip of the pen, for surely no authority would make such a glaring error. Take up any magazine and you will note that most of the full-page cuts run on the odd-numbered pages, and we used to work on a magazine that required all stories to begin on the right-hand pages to make the book look more attractive. It is the right-hand page that is the most conspicuous and therefore the right-hand pages that should be reserved for house use.

From another page of the same issue we clip this greeting paragraph of a form letter used by the Goodwin theater, Newark, N. J.:

> Dear Madam.—This neighborhood, into which you have just moved, possesses rather a unique institution in the Goodwin theater and we are taking the liberty of addressing a letter to you, personally, acquainting you with its many unusual features, etc.

This apparently reaches all the persons who move into the house territory. The scheme is excellent. It would be better still did a pair of tickets accompany the letter. The form given in Progress is a little long. A short, snappy letter would be better, but the idea is a capital one. Names of newcomers into the territory can be obtained from the various tradespeople, grocers, icemen and others who give daily service, or perhaps the real estate men can be approached in a small town. In the cities the tradespeople are more apt to get the names first.

He Said It.

In the course of a reply to an exhibitor, the carbon of which came to us, the Big Boss wrote:

> Your experience is simply another proof of what we have often stated editorially, namely, that the same amount of energy, brains and common sense put into the exhibiting end of the moving picture business will produce as satisfactory returns from a business point of view as can be secured from any other line of endeavor.

And he might have put in a "still" to make it read "still will produce." It's there if you know how to get it and more than there used to be, but you have to go after it now.

Closing Up.

Long ago we showed the front of the Stillman program, Cleveland, but the back page is worth looking at. The reproduction gives only the top half of the page, the lower being sold to a cigar dealer. The point is that the cut does not fit the space, but instead of permitting

STILLMAN THEATRE
There will be a daily luncheon matinee—Sundays excepted—from 11 A. M. until 1 P. M., with a general admission charge of Fifteen cents.
To those who have only this period of the day at their disposal, our Luncheon Matinees should afford a welcome entertainment, particularly for the business men, who can enjoy their after-luncheon cigar in the convenient and comfortable smoking below.

This picture shows Fannie Ward as she appears in her newest play, "The Crystal Gazer," to be shown at The Stillman for one week only, beginning Sunday, August 5th.

it to flop around in the space like a small boy in his father's castoff trousers, they run a house note on the side, filling the space, while getting unusual prominence for the announcement. The reproduction does not show well, for the original cut is rather dark, but in the program it is well printed on plate paper and comes out properly. It is little touches such as this that give class to a program—the knowing of what to do and how to do it to get a good result. Many would leave the space blank and a country printer would spoil it by running a thing wrongly called an "ornament" on either side. This works far better because it is right.

Correcting Bill.

William Lord Wright, in Selig's Paste Pot and Shears, makes the following crack at an old time custom:

> All the potatoes used as coal oil can stoppers in the three reel special, "Down on the Old Home Farm," were gathered up and sold because of the h. c. of l.

Time was when Bill was City Editor, Dramatic Editor, Telegraph Editor and a few other editors of a small town newspaper, and perhaps, in those days, they still plugged the spouts of oil cans with potatoes, but we are in a position to inform William that it is no longer done in the best country circles. With oil selling at thirteen cents a gallon and potatoes for whatever the grocer has the nerve to charge, there would be danger of the oil supply being exhausted by people trying to get the potatoes. Nowadays the oil cans are plugged with small wooden plugs. We've got ours plugged with a "longnecker'" cork, but we had to import the cork from New York. The grocer uses a wood plug that invariably gets lost between the store and the house. Bill is more accurate when he says that a vampire picture is a set of rich, rare and racy one, three and six sheets, some classy lobby display photographs and a lot of closeups and wine party sets. He forgot the lady who dances on the table in reel three after dancing over the stepping stones in the babbling brook in reel one.

An Auspicious Start.

The Silver Strand theatre, Coronado, California, opened under the management of the Bush Amusement Co., with a special performance for the benefit of the Red Cross and with Mme. Schumann-Heink as soloist. The opening was Friday with the regular opening the following day, but through the charity performance the house got off to a running start. Here is a hint to other managements for openings or re-openings. Working with a charity, you can not only command publicity the newspapers would never give a theatre on its own merits, but you can also attract the most desirable class of patronage. It's up to you to hold the crowd; you, at least, get your start.

We Protest.

We are willing to admit that Fatty Arbukle is as large as two or three average men, but when his press agent speaks carelessly of the way Fatty sings the sextette from Lucia we are moved to make grieved protest. It takes even more than the Paramount comedian to sing six voices at the same time. Even a dog story should have a license tag.

Has An Artist.

The Rialto theater, Butte, Montana, sends in three samples of full page advertisements and asks for a comment in this letter:

> We have been watching your most excellent department, for some time (enjoying it thoroughly), and your frank criticism of advertising has prompted us to forward, under separate cover, a few samples of our stuff which we will be very much pleased to have you dissect, tear to pieces and criticise generally. As you will notice, we are generous users of space. Also, we are, as far as we know, the only motion picture house in this part of the world that carries a regularly employed artist on the advertising staff.

The letter is merely initialed R., and as the cuts carry the same signature, we gather that the press man is the artist or the artist also the press man. We reproduce one of the pages here, since the three are along the same general lines; which is not to be understood as meaning that the designs lack variety. To the contrary, the designs are individual, but the general layout of a display cut, with a brief argument and the house name is followed. In the example shown it will be noted how the black shadow on the man's shoulder serves to throw into high relief the strong lines of the face. It is well to note, too, that the tree trunk at the right serves to supply the color sparingly used in the main drawing. The tree trunk seems to be but a part of the design, but it is put there because the artist knows that without some such mass the top portion of the cut will be too white. This nice sense of proportion is also evident in the other designs. One of these is for Joan the Woman. Here Joan, mounted, is thrown into relief against a black banner and the edges of the cut are left white, since the necessary color goes into the design itself. Incidentally it gives greater prominence to the figure than could be had from a white ground and the black of the banner is balanced, in the lower portion of the cut, by the housings of the charger. Hell Morgan's Girl is advertised by a figure of the girl, standing out against a flaming ray, with the name diagonally set across the bottom and cards and poker chips filling in the corner that would otherwise be left bare by the slanting title. All of this is covered in any elementary book on composition and is sensed by most persons, and yet we constantly get cuts out of balance simply because the artists, doing a rush job, do not take the pains to get their work done properly. The snow capped letters are an evident bid for summer business, the regular house design being the same form, but with different text within the loop. We think that R. does not anticipate much criticism, for he must know he is doing good work. He has learned the first great lesson of not trying to say a bookful in a page. That is something that the inept never learn. They fail to realize that a page advertisement is no more than a two column cut expanded but not added to.

Here's a Hint.

Jay Emanuel sends in a "railroad ticket" issued by the William Fox attractions. It is in fac-simile of the coupon tickets issued by railroads for extended travel, printed on safety paper, with a contract and stubs for the different attractions, all contained in a stiff paper cover the way they put up tickets intended for a long trip. The contract wording follows the general run of railroad contracts, but is adapted to the films; the time limit being the season of 1917-18, the validating point the nearest Fox Exchange and the baggage requirements "plenty of paper." It would seem that something of this sort could be used by exhibitors to launch some special serial, each of the coupons being good for one admission, the title of the chapter being printed on the coupon. It would cost more than a straight punch ticket, but it would pay if it was desired to get a special return. The Fox company no doubt can send a sample ticket if you have not received one. If you book the Fox series doubtless they would help you to get the ticket up, and it works so well for Fox attractions that not much change should be needed. The strip ticket idea is by no means new. We printed the first specimen six or seven years ago when it was used by William Barie, Jr., then of Wichita, Kan.

For Bluebirds.

W. W. Drum, of the Bluebird exchange at Detroit, sends in a decidedly clever idea used by A. A. Hudson, of the Elite, Napoleon, O. He mounted two Bluebird stock sheets and put a birdcall in between, the call being operated from the projection room. Now when he has a Bluebird the sign is put out with "It's Bluebird day today," and everyone knows that it is Bluebird day without looking at the sign. Even the small house can use this effective device, and can use a youngster for motive power, if necessary. The stunt is inexpensive, does not take much room and you cannot realize how effective it is until you have tried it.

George Did It.

George Manager Carpenter, of the Empress, Salt Lake City, pulled a good stunt the other day when he got the railroads to advertise his show for him. He had some Paramount travel pictures of Lake Tahoe and Yellowstone and he got the Southern Pacific to run a big advertisement to the effect that the pictures were at the theater, incidentally advertising the fact that the S. P. reaches the spots mentioned. The general passenger agent of any road can be approached when you are about to show scenics of places along the line of the road.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Lindsay on Hieroglyphs.

VACHEL LINDSAY, in his book on the Art of the Photoplay, had much in his chapter on Hieroglyphs. It was puzzling to many readers; just as most of that work was puzzling to those who read lightly—and it was not altogether clear to those who read more intently. But there is a big message in the book for those who read deeply, and in the New Republic and other magazines Mr. Lindsay has more recently thrown many side lights upon his book ideas. In a recent criticism of Mary Pickford in "A Romance of the Redlands," he touches more directly upon the hieroglyph.

He seems to find in pictures what Wagner found in music, the motive typical of the idea. For example, he mentions the derringer hidden in the girl's shoe. This, he declares to be the hieroglyphic symbol of the spirit of the girl. Later—> the lady finds the handkerchief mask, with eyeholes complete. This mask is as much the headline hieroglyphic of Brown as the derringer is of Jennie.

Just before that comes a still more illuminating phrase that runs:

> Now note the hieroglpyhics. The arrow hole in the uncle's bloody papers, a black-snake whip, Jennie's little derringer, Brown's six-shooter, the gambling paraphernalia, the silk hat of the boss gambler, the dancing shadows on the doorways—all enable these episodes to be vividly given with few printed words on the screen.

Mr. Lindsay seems to agree with us that the symbol as a substitute—conscious or otherwise—for the leader is one of the real factors of photoplay; indeed it is our belief that the symbol will figure far more importantly in the coming productions. Authors will seek, through type action and type objects, to give full meaning to the scene. Stage pantomime has its set language of gesture, rigid, unconvincing and unbeautiful. Old time writers will recall the old French Pathe films with their pantomimic gesture, and will not regret their supplanting by more natural movement. Even some of the earlier American Pathe productions employed the same language until the imported directors found that the set gesture was not always understood, and always resented.

It is to be hoped that the language of symbols, the hieroglyph, will not degenerate into a rigid form. It should be through symbolism and not through set symbols that the thought should be conveyed. We have had too much of the set symbol already. Time was when there were but two methods of recording death. In the house the sheet was drawn over the victim's face. Outdoors all characters removed their hats. That was perhaps the most common and persistent symbol, though the side whiskered lawyer and the full bearded physician ran them a close second.

It is not the crude symbol, but the delicate and thoughtful symbolism to which we must turn, and having turned, we must be careful to avoid abuse, though it is to be expected that for a time the symbols will be overworked wih the enthusiasm that attends all new discoveries that are accepted. But, as Mr. Lindsay points out in his scholarly critique, the true symbols are not intrusive. They are not arbitrarily employed, but are a part of the action. Indeed the director may not even have been thinking of hieroglyphics, but merely seeking to get a picture true to type, for a play true to type abounds in symbols.

But while true-to-type plays abound in symbols, only the true artist writer can give to these symbols their fullest and most explanatory development without making it appear that he is merely exploiting symbols. This will be, perhaps, the true art of the photoplay of the future, the expert handling of symbolism as a means of the fullest expression. Meanwhile we must look to Mr. Lindsay and his kind for the true revelations. Most of those who are at present making pictures are concerned more with scenery than with symbols; more with stars than stories.

The first example takes a different slant at leaders. To many it would seem that the difference between "you're" and "you've" is clear and unmistakable, but as a matter of fact this is not true. Many persons read slowly and without keen appreciation, and these, above others, are those most apt to be attracted to the pictures for entertainment, finding little in magazine reading. Again many persons have had their attention distracted at a moment when an obscure leader flashes and have lost the thread of the story because they turned back to the screen too late to clearly comprehend the leader.

It follows that leaders should clearly and unmistakably give the full sense of the idea to be conveyed. Even in spoken leaders clips and elisions should be avoided. Leaders should be written with the utmost exactness. In general the best rule for this exactness is to make the major statement first and follow with the governing statement. In this case it would have been plain had the leader run:

You win. The market rallies.

Now the late reader or the slow reader gets the essential fact at any rate, and the reason for the winning is less important.

Leader writing is generally regarded as an art, and there are many specialists in this work, but any author can and should make a study of leader that his own contributions may be clear and to the point.

If He Knows.

Here is a little note from a woman who really sells stuff. She writes:

> "Don't ask an editor what he wants. Find out." Makes me think of an experience I had once with a certain company. I sent in a five-reeler; it came back with a friendly letter from the editor saying "Sorry, cannot use this, but our staff do the big stuff. We want from the outside, something full of suspense, melodrama, and the 'different twist,' in two and three reels. No ones—we are overstocked." I had in my mind just such a story, so I sent it in at once. They accetped it and released it in about three weeks, left out the suspense, melodrama, and made it into a ONE reel! Since then I have felt that it's a wise editor who knows WHAT HIS COMPANY WANTS!

That's different. He was not an editor, but a bluff.

New Style Leaders.

The pictorial leader has at last come into its own with the employment of real artists to design the titles for the new Williamson production. This illustrated leader has done more to lift the curse from intrusive title than anything else. It makes leaders excusable. Emmett Campbell Hall probably should be credited with the first step in this direction when he sought to superimpose the leader in white letters upon the running scene, but the continuation of that action seemed to detract from the attention. People sought to see through the leaders to watch the action, but at least Mr. Hall was the first to get away from the old style white or tint letters on a dark ground, though we remember that once the Kalem company sought to enliven the title of its film with slight sketches.

Binding.

Marc Edmund Jones confesses that he was rather surprised to find that a simple binding consisting of McGill fasteners and a couple of sheets of cover paper was appreciated by a company lately when he turned in a five-part story. There was no time to dig up a leather loose-leaf cover and this was an emergency binding, but it met with approval. There is a lot of money wasted in fussy stuff that means nothing. Be simple and put the value into your story. That pays better.

Paper.

Better lay in a couple of boxes of paper before the rise comes. Just as a sample of the way things are going, one huge pulp mill is no longer making paper pulp, but is turning its material into cartridge paper, under contract. This is one of the mills formerly supplying the writing paper trade, and doubtless there are other sources of supply similarly closing down on material for paper making, so that presently the prices will still further jump. Buy a few reams now and you'll be glad you did. Presently we'll be doing our practice work on slates.

Funny.

One of the really funny bits of correspondence turned up lately. After stating his belief that a certain company had stolen one of his story ideas, the writer added a request for information as to how much of a copyrighted story he might take "without danger." It does make a difference whose ox is gored, doesn't it?

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Sub Condenser.

Charles A. Young, Chicago, Illinois, contributes the following very interesting article on aperture lenses, which he proposes calling sub condensers. The article is lenghty, but is excellently written, and has its arguments well presented. It is recommended to the very careful consideration of operators in general, and especially to brothers Griffith, Martin, and those others who have so ably helped in the study of the projector optical system. We take opportunity to cordially thank brother Young for the preparation and submission of the article.

I have noticed, with interest, the frequent references to the so-called "aperture lens," which have appeared during the past few months in the Department, and since no one has yet told us just what its action will really be, I would like to submit my ideas on the subject, to which I have devoted considerable time and study.

The aim in projection is to transmit all the light leaving the transparency (slide or film) to the screen, and to do this the light must be concentrated at the objective in a ray small enough to pass through it. In the stereopticon, this is done through the formation of an image of the light source at the diaphragm of the lens. In motion picture projection the film is placed at the plane of greatest concentration, and the light is not condensed into the objective, the illumination depending upon the ability of the lens to pick up a large amount of light because of its large relative aperture (the word is here used in the optical sense, often met with in photographic work), and the comparatively narrow angle of divergence of the rays leaving the film. If we can converge the light leaving the film, so that the beam at the objective is small enough to pass through it, we shall have a condition analogous to the stereopticon, and perhaps gain materially in efficiency over the present arrangement.

Let us place a converging lens at the machine aperture so that its axis coincides with the axis of the optical system of the projector, and observe what it will do. If its focal length is not too long, it will form an image of the front condenser, just as the objective does, at the dissolving point for the shutter. See Figure 1, which represents a lens so placed, the objective being omitted. We see at once that there is a reduction in the size of the light beam after leaving the aperture, compared with the path of the rays without the aperture lens (represented by the dotted lines); that the smallest part of the beam is at the image; and that the light source for the film is practically the front condenser, as each point on it illuminates the entire field. I shall name the distances in accordance with your practice in the Handbook: X, the distance from arc to condenser; Y, the distance from condenser to film; and Z, the distance from the aperture lens to the image of the condensers, which it forms. Y and Z constitute a pair or conjugate foci for the aperture lens, Y being a conjugate for both the lamphouse condenser system and for the aperture lens.

Now the image of the condensers, being the smallest part of the beam leaving the aperture, should be located within the objective, at its diaphragm, and therefore we shall need to control its formation, with regard to its position and size, for it will obviously have to be no larger than the objective. We shall find one thing, viz.: that it is not enough merely to place any converging lens at the aperture and expect a gain in light. As the diaphragm of a compound lens like the ordinary objectives in use should be at the optical center of the lens, we can find the position of the image at a distance from the film equal to the e. f. of the objective. Suppose that we have a six-inch e. f. objective, 1½ inches diameter, and wish to fit an aperture condenser to it. We shall require, then, an image of the condenser six inches from the aperture and 1½ inches in diameter. As stated above, the image and condensers form a pair of conjugate foci for the aperture lens, and the law of conjugate foci is the key to our problem. The ratio of the linear size of the image to that of the object is the same as the ratio of the corresponding focal distances. Let us assume the condensers to be their full diameter, 4½ inches; then their ratio to the image we desire is 3 to 1. Therefore the distance from lamphouse condenser to aperture lens will be three times the e. f. of the objective, or 18 inches, since distance Z is equal to the e. f. of the objective, and Y is three times as great as Z. (Note: For the sake of simplicity I am committing several inaccuracies: I am using the full diameter of the condensers, 4½ inches, although the usual condenser mount or slide carrier reduces this size more or less. I also represent the aperture as its diagonal of 1¼ inches, instead of its width, since the corners of the film must be covered. In indicating the path of the light rays through the objective, I make no effort to show the action of the factors of the objective on them; all I aim to do is to show the action of the aperture condenser. In calculating, also, I assume that the film and the optional center of the aperture lens coincide, though of course they do not. My diagrams, although drawn to scale, are not quite accurate in several respects, and I trust no one will criticize their fault in this respect.

As we are using a conjugate focus of the aperture lens, instead of its principal focus, we must apply the formula for conjugate foci in order to find what its e. f. must be. 1/f plus 1/F equals 1/P, f and F being the minor and major conjugates respectively, and P the principal, or equivalent focus. In this case 1/Y plus 1/Z equals 1J/P, and substituting the figures 1/18 plus 1/6 equals 4/18, which is the reciprocal of the principal focus, and by inversion we obtain 18/4, or 4½, which is the e. f. of the aperture lens.

We can reduce this proceeding to a formula: Y equals C/O x e. f. of the objective. Then, 1/P equals 1/Y plus 1/Z. Invert 1/P to find the e. f. of the aperture lens. C and O represent respectively the diameters of the front condenser and the objective, and P the e. f. of the aperture lens.

Now, the question of the form and mounting of the aperture condenser presents itself. We obviously cannot place a lens of 4½ inches focus between the film and the objective without interfering with the latter, and it is just as easy (and better) to project the light through the film as to collect the light after leaving it. Therefore we shall follow the precedent we have in the stereopticon, and place the aperture condenser between the light and the film, using a plano-convex lens, with the flat side next the film, somewhat greater in diameter than the diagonal of the aperture, so as to cover the corners with a little to spare. A lens 1½ inches in diameter would be about right, and I would suggest that as a standard. There would, of course, be some separation, say ¼-inch, between aperture condenser and film. A meniscus lens might give better results than a plano-convex, but I cannot say what it would do in that respect. One advantage of a plano-convex lens would be its cheapness.

I have found some authority for thus locating the aperture condenser, in a book in the Crerar Library, entitled "Optical Projection," written by an Englishman named Lewis Wright, and published in 1890 by Longmans, Green & Co. Wright states, in his preface, that his first lantern was given him in 1851, so he might be considered a real veteran. In describing condenser action, he shows a slide illuminated by a light behind it, with no condenser, and shows that the area projected to the screen is about as large as the objective lens. Then he says: "Suppose we place, immediately after the slide, a large convex lens which more than covers it. If this lens is of suitable focus, the outer part of the luminous cone which before diverged uselessly . . . is bent in . . . so that it passes through the objective lens. This is not the best position for the condenser, because it both impairs the sharpness of the image (which has in a manner to be focused through it) and it leaves the slide so near and exposed to the heat of the lens. But it is mentioned first, because it actually was the position first given the condenser and is still used in those 'toy' lanterns which are copied from generation to generation; and still more because it shows us that the common view of the function of the condenser is a mistake. It is usually stated in books upon this subject that this function is to 'condense' the greatest number of luminous rays upon the slide. That is not so at all; this object could be obtained . . . by placing the slide itself near enough to the source of light. It is not to condense rays upon the slide, but to condense them so that they shall pass through the focussing lens; and to undertsand this is most necessary to any successful projection which may be the least out of the beaten track.

"This understood, however, it is obvious that a much better arrangement in several respects must be to interpose the condensing lens between the slide or object and the light. The otherwise wasted rays are still bent in so as to pass through the focussing lens, but a large part of the heat is borne by the (condenser) lens, and the slide thus far shielded; also the focussing lens has no distorting medium between it and the object. This, therefore, is the arrangement now always used in instruments of a serious kind."

These words, though written more than twenty-five years ago, seem curiously apt in our present study of the aperture condenser in a moving picture system, as almost everything he says applies to the aperture lens as placed between the film and the objective.

As we have gotten the aperture lens out of the aperture, let us coin a different name for it, and call it a "sub-condenser," which fits pretty well, and will serve to designate it as distinguished from the lamphouse condensers. (This name is suggested to me by the "sub-stage condenser" used on a microscope, which has, however, an entirely different function and construction.)

We shall gain at least one thing by locating the sub-condenser on the lamphouse side of the film, that is, accessibility. As the lens is so near to the focal plane of the objective, any dirt or crack in it would show on the screen, and it would be desirable to get at it easily to clean or replace it if needed. It wouldn't necessarily break with the heat very readily; the rear combination of the stereopticon lens often stands a good deal of heat without cracking, though it is tightly clamped in its mount. I would suggest mounting the sub-condenser in a clip similar to the Power's condenser mount, or a ring like that in the Model S Simplex lamphouse, and so arranged as to be easily handled while hot. However, these practical problems may be met and solved after the sub-condenser proves its value, if it has any. Other gains are, that it would not interfere with any system of condensers in the lamphouse, so long as distance Y were kept great enough; that it might be removed entirely and still leave the optical system in the machine just what it is today; that it would not interfere with the action of the objective, and a costly form of a corrected aperture lens would be unnecessary.

Upon studying the path of the light rays in Figure 2, in which the image of the condensers is at the diaphragm of the objective, I became convinced that this arrangement is not of the highest possible efficiency. See Figure 3, which represents a "close-up" of the light between aperture and objective. Note that rays "m" and "n," although they are contained in the image, enter the objective at such an angle that they are stopped by the wall of the lens tube and lost. Now, what we need to do is not so much to project the light to the objective as through it, and if the image is formed farther forward in the lens tube, there will be less or no loss. See Figure 4, which represents the condenser image as just outside the front combination. Here all the light can be transmitted by the objective, as the beam is held down to a size not larger than the objective until it emerges from the front combination. In effect, we have rendered the beam parallel to that point. "Eureka!"

However, if we adopt the arrangement in Figure 4, we may run into some difficulties because of the change in the relative position of the condenser-image. We cannot calculate for a lens of given e. f., the focal length of the sub-condenser, using the e. f. of the objective as the basis, since the front combination is some distance from the optical center, and this distance varies in lenses of different manufacture or construction. In other words, distance Z is no longer equal to the e. f. of the objective, and it must be measured from the aperture to the front combination. Otherwise, calculation would be the same. The effect of placing the condenser-image at the front combination would be about the same as that of using a longer focus objective, as there would be made necessary a greater distance Y and a longer focus sub-condenser. Using a half-size or No. 2 objective with an aperture of two inches or more would help, as with an objective of two inches diameter distance Y would be but twice distance Z. With short focus objectives of four inches or less e. f., there should be no trouble, as distance Y may be several times the e. f. of the lens, and the condenser-image will be smaller than 1½ inches in diameter—for instance, take a lens of three inches e. f., distance Y 18 inches, a sub-condenser of the same focus as the objective. The image will be 3 3/5 inches from the sub-condenser, and one-fifth the size of the condensers, or about 4/5-inch in diameter. A light concentrated in this space would permit the use of a 75 millimeter or 3-inch camera objective, which would be otherwise too small for projection, though its optical qualities would be beyond question.

But it is with the long-focus objectives (and the long throw that goes with them) that we encounter the most troubles. The sub-condenser should prove valuable with these, but as with the ordinary method of projection, objectives of larger diameter than quarter-size will be almost a necessity. If we have to get along with objectives of small aperture, the sub-condenser will deliver all the light that reaches it to the lens, but it will necessitate a very long distance Y, perhaps inconveniently long. Take an extreme case: If we were to have a twelve-inch objective of 1½ inches diameter, Y must be something like 36 inches, and that is rather excessive. If, however, the objective were of two inches or more diameter, Y could be decreased to about twice its e. f., and 24 inches would not be quite impossible.

Now for a few supplementary remarks, and I shall bring this lengthy letter (it should be called a monograph) to a close.

Evenness of illumination would be secured in the ordinary way when a sub-condenser is used, by projecting an image of the crater upon the film (rather, upon the sub-condenser), using the suitable condenser combination for the ordinary factors, size of spot and crater, and distance Y. The optical alignment of the machine and lamphouse would have to be very good, otherwise ghosts might make their appearance, although the field at the film were clear, owing to part of the light not passing through the objective. If the lamphouse were out of line to one side, say, the image of the condensers would be partly caught on the wall of the lens tube, and such part of the light lost.

The absorption by the sub-condenser might offset the light gained by its use. If a plano-convex lens were used, of 1½ inches diameter, the thickness would be about as follows: Focal length, 3 inches, thickness 3/16-inch; focus, 4 inches, thickness, 5/32-inch; focus, 5 inches, about ⅛-inch thick, and for a lens of 6 inches focus, the thickness would be still smaller. If made of a limpid, very transparent grade of glass, there should be little loss from absorption. A test could be readily made by cutting a sub-condenser lens in half, and laying one half across the lower half of the machine aperture, and projecting a blank screen. If the sub-condenser did any real good, the half covered by it ought to be appreciably brighter than the other.

Of course, interposing a lens between the objective and the condensers will destroy the image of the latter formed at the dissolving point for the shutter. If the image formed by the sub-condenser is just outside the front combination of the objective, then the dissolving effect will be had by placing the shutter as close as possible to the lens; and I think this should be the position of the shutter in any case when using a sub-condenser.

Although we cannot render the rays leaving the film really parallel, we can approximate that effect, since we can obtain a beam whose diameter at the objective is equal to the diagonal of the aperture. (Figures 3 and 4.)

As the polished surface of the sub-condenser would reflect light very brilliantly, it would be necessary to screen it thoroughly. If the operator happened to look at it with no protection for his eyes, he would likely find it uncomfortable, as it would show an image of the condensers or of the arc, just as a mirror would.

There is one more thing I wish to bring up, and I hope to be able to explain it to your satisfaction. On page 119 of the Handbook, you mention that "Any objective lens may work at any one of several different distances from the film." Now, this is true, but in such a way that it need not be considered in projection. It is another recurrence of our old friend, the law of conjugate foci. If we have a lens of, say 8 inches focus, and using it in a camera, focus it on a distant object, 100 or more feet away, note the position of the lens (or the lens standard carrying it), and then, without moving the camera, focus the lens on an object only 25 feet away, we shall find that it is necessary to move the lens forward, in this case just ⅜ of an inch. There you are, a "different distance" between lens and image, the difference being due to the law of conjugate foci. If we put the same lens in a machine, and focus the picture at a throw of 100 feet, and then again at 25 feet, we find exactly the same change in the position of the lens. Do you see what it is? If a lens is focused on a near object, it practically increases in focal length, and the amount of increase varies as the square of the focal length of the lens. This is of very great importance in photographic work, but in moving picture projection, I believe that the possible variations from the principal or equivalent focus of the objective are so slight as to be negligible. A change of any magnitude in the position of a lens will occur only when a long focus lens is used on a very short throw. (As above, the focus of an 8-inch lens becomes 8⅜ inches on a 25-foot throw.) The "working focus" of any lens is found by this formula: F′ equals F plus F/T x F. F′ being the working focus and F and T being the e. f. and the throw respectively (all expressed in inches). Or we can use the usual formula for conjugate foci, but this serves as well; and it indicates how the variation is proportional to the square of the focal length, as in the latter part of the equation F is multiplied by itself. Commonly, a lens focussed on an object 100 feet away is considered as focussed for parallel rays, or at infinity; though in fine work with long focus highly corrected lenses, "infinity" becomes two or three times 100 feet. But all this has nothing to do with projection. So, in ordinary projection, we may consider that any lens is working at its e. f., and in matching a condenser system, I hardly think that an error of 1/16 inch or so will have any effect on the work of the condenser system.

What is of real importance, in your scheme of matching condensers to objectives, is that lenses of different manufacture or construction many have widely different back focus. I have used a pair of such lenses, one a Gundlach in a Simplex machine and the other a Bausch & Lomb in a Power's, and got a screen image identical in size from each of them. The e. f. of each lens was five inches; but the back focus of the Gundlach was four inches, and that of the Bausch & Lomb was three inches. Quite a difference, you will admit. The reason lies in the construction of the lenses: the Gundlach had a short lens barrel, with combinations close together, and of long focus; while the B. & L. had a long barrel, with factors of shorter focus, the greater separation between the factors being required to obtain the focal length of the complete lens.

Well, all things must come to an end, and so must this "lucubration," as Mr. McQuade might call it. I only hope that it has not bored you to read this too long script; I realize that I have been prolix in many places, but chose prolixity rather than to be misunderstood. I trust that I have been clear throughout and have held your interest. My only regret is that I have not had the opportunity or facilities to make any experiments to verify the practical value of the sub-condenser system herein outlined; but I am sure that the theory is sound, and I offer it for you and friends Griffiths, Martin, Solar, et al., to anlyze and pick to pieces.

I am going to borrow one of Brother Sargent's bits of advice and use a heavy manila envelope for this—it may not look so pretty as one of bond paper, but the contents are more likely to arrive intact.

As I am, of course, eager to know what you think of my scheme, I enclose a couple of stamps for a carbon copy of your reply in the department—but if you care to write a personal letter it will be very welcome.

With best wishes for the success of the Moving Picture World, and for the Projection Department and its editor.

I have little comment to make on this article, preferring to leave that to others, with caution to make it as pointed as practical, without losing value; also that it is eminently essential that this discussion be kept just as clear of technical terms as possible, to the end that it be understood by the average operator. This has been pretty well adhered to in the past, and must be continued in the future. I feel that we are rapidly approaching the point where our labors will need only certain practical experiments to crown them with success, and when that time comes the experiments will be made. This department will see to that. The advantage of placing the sub condenser between the light and the film lies, to my mind, largely in the possibility of properly mounting it. If the lens really is a practical thing, as I am pretty well convinced it is, then it but remains to arrange for a suitable, properly placed mount, and compile a somewhat elaborate table, giving focal lengths to use the different e. f., objectives under varying conditions. I am right now having a preliminary test of an aperture lens sent in by Brother Martin, made by Lester Bowen, chief operator, Rialto theater, New York City.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

MOST varieties of trick work will come under the following headings: The hold, the dissolve, vision, stop-crank and reverse.

The simplest of these is the hold.

The Hold.—The hold is generally used for the instantaneous materialization or extermination of a character or object in the picture. It is called "hold" because when it is necessary to remove or introducc a character or object instantaneously in the scene without spoiling the action of the characters which continue in the scene, they must hold whatever position they happen to be in while the character or object in question is being introduced or taken from the scene so that when the camera starts again they may continue whatever they were performing at the cry of "hold."

In the old days in the infancy of motion pictures, magic subjects were more common than dramatic subjects and many weird and fantastic pictures were made in which the hold was often used. At the present day there is seldom occasion to use these devices as when characters which are of a visionary or supernatural nature are to be introduced the fade-in is more commonly used.

Often, where characters are instantaneously introduced into the scene in magic or fairy tales, the character introduced seems to come from a puff of smoke. The method of producing this effect was that of placing an electrically connected box of flash powder in the scene at the point where the character was to appear and igniting it with a switch at the instant for holding, the puff of smoke acting as a cue for the hold. After the smoke has cleared away the character to be introduced would stand in the proper position, and when the camera was started would leap into the air. As it takes a revolution of the camera crank to bring the camera to speed, it is almost always necessary to cut out several frames of dead action in the hold negative, the amount necessary to cut being easily determined by looping the hold and examining the frames closely to see how the action should continue to give the proper effect. After the first cut is made, taking care not to cut too many frames, it may be projected upon the screen, and if the result is not yet satisfactory the action can be accelerated by cutting out a few more frames and cementing the negative together again. Where characters are not numerous in the set it is sometimes possible to make a hold much better by duplicating the last action before the hold again directly as the camera is started. The duplicate actions being then lapped back so that the part before the hold may be cut out at any point during this duplicate action, and then, after the hold, the latter part of the duplicated acion matched to the first part. Where this is possible the result is much smoother as it is almost impossible to get an instantaneous hold that will not appear jerky or jumpy when shown on the screen, because the action of holding requires the motion to be immediately slowed up, whereas, by duplicating the action and matching back, there is no perceptible jerkiness to be detected. The hold is also used for transformations where costumes are instantaneously changed. When such changes are made the wait involved is often very tedious for those characters who have to hold their positions. It is well, in these cases, in the rehearsals to allow the players to find positions for holding which are easy to hold or which they may be sure of being able to duplicate. Where the holds are extraordinarily long, holds of fifteen or twenty minutes for changing costumes being not uncommon, it is customary to mark the positions of the players on the floor with chalk about the soles of their feet, so that they may even walk off the stage and yet be able to resume their positions again in the exact spot in which they stood before. This is absolutely necessary in some cases where the hold is used in connection with a reverse action. In matching a hold with the reverse action, which will be treated later, it is necessary that the player or players come back to a certain original position and attitude after having performed a certain action in reverse. Take, for example, a scene in which a character does something which could not be reversed and then has to leap to the top of a fence manifestly too high for him to actually do so in real life, the scene may be done by marking a hold position for the end of the first part of the scene, after which a reverse strip is taken of the player jumping backward from the high fence and then backing up to the hold position assumed at the end of the first part. Where this is done properly the two strips may be united so that the action is continuous with the actor leaping to the top of the fence at the conclusion of the scene.

The Dissolve.—The dissolve is used much the same as the hold for the introduction and disappearance of characters, except that the effect is the gradual materialization of the subject brought in from a slight visionary figure to material proportions. Dissolves are used not longer than three to five feet in such cases, as it is necessary for all the other characters to remain rigid during the duration of the dissolve, otherwise they will appear double during the dissolve. It is needless to say that a dissolve where there is much action in the picture, requires considerable ingenuity in devising a natural method of making the permanent characters in the scene motionless for the period of the dissolve. This is usually accomplished by having the other characters remain motionless as if in surprise, since this would generally be a natural emotion at the magical materialization of an unexpected subject in the scene. It is also possible to use the hold and, by very carefully making note of the position of the character introduced, to afterwards double exposc the materialization of the figure up to the time of its instantaneous appearance without interrupting the action in the scene. This is very difficult, however, since the duplication of the position of the figure against the background and its matching upon the film at the exact footage is a very difficult task. As commonly done the procedure is as follows: The foot position for the introduction of the character having been carefully marked in the scene the character is introduced as described under "hold." The frame line having been marked upon the film at the beginning before taking the scene and the number of turns to the hold from the frame line marking being carefully counted. After the scene has been taken the character resumes the position as marked, and a test strip is made with the actor standing in position. This test strip is then developed, fixed and dried. Meantime, the scene is either rewound in the dark room or run back to the beginning by reversing the camera with the lens capped. The frame line marking mentioned before is for locating the frames upon the claws so that they will coincide with the aperture when the film is re-threaded. The common method for marking the frame line so as to be easily distinguished is to make pen pricks between the perforations just below the holes into the claws engaged, also to make some distinguishing mark upon the film so that the beginning point may be easily recognized even in a dark room; it being often expedient to place the film for the double in a can for several days pending the preparation of the scene to be doubled. The test strip before mentioned now serves as a guide for placing the actor in the same relative position as regards the camera as he occupied when the scene was previously taken. To ascertain this position place the test film in the camera and match one of the frames in the aperture opening with a ground glass over it. By posing the character in front of the camera it will be found that he may be maneuvered so as to make his image exactly correspond with the image already developed upon the scene. When this is accomplished in front of a black velvet, the original scene is again threaded into the camera, and at the correct number of turns, the player is faded-in to his previously-taken image on the film.

It is pertinent to mention here that black velvet, which is most generally used for a background in making dissolves, should always be stretched perfectly taut, otherwise folds and wrinkles will be apt to show in the double. Black velvet reflects the least light of any material, but it does not by any means absorb all of the light which falls upon it. If it did, the folds and wrinkles would not be visible to the eye. The sheen, or high light, in folds or wrinkles is quite apt to show plainly where the velvet is not kept perfectly flat. Even better than velvet for double exposure is the shadow box. A shadow box is a cube with one open side, the interior of which is painted black or covered with black cloth. The subject is posed before the open side of this shadow box in full light. The side of the shadow box naturally protects the back part of it from direct rays of light, and there is practically no light reflected from the interior. When a shadow box is made it is not necessary to be so careful about drawing the background perfectly taut, the shadow box being often constructed from wings or flats arranged about a velvet drop. It is not absolutely necessary to paint the flats black if they are of a dark color and opaque, especially if the box is large enough so that the flats are beyond the range of the picture. In making small figures against the black drop or shadow box it is often impossible or impractical to make the background big enough to cover the field of the picture. In this case a supplementary shadow box of wood painted black inside may be placed just in front of the camera with an aperture cut in it sufficiently large to allow just the figures to be photographed through it. The edges of this aperture must be, of course, also painted black and shaded from direct light, or a matte may be placed over the lens hood of black paper or cardboard with an aperture cut in the matte.

American Projection Society's First Banquet

Enthusiastic Gathering at Hotel McAlpin, New York, Presided Over by Lester Bowen.

By F. H. Richardson.

IT WAS the privilege of the editor of the Projection Department to attend the first banquet of the American Projection Society, held in the Green Room of that very classy abode of the traveler, the Hotel McAlpin, New York City, at midnight Tuesday, September 18, in this year of our Lord 1917 A. D., the same lasting until four ante meridian, beginning with goodies galore, continuing with oratory and ending with good fellow and womanship and a treading of the measures of the dance.

The American Projection Society was formed three years ago, Joseph Basson, then president, if I rightly remember, of Local Union 306, being largely responsible for its borning. It is composed of those operators who may wish to join and who can thoroughly demonstrate their fitness both as to professional ability and integrity of character to be classed as high-class projectionists.

The society is incorporated under the laws of New York. It seeks to bind together, socially and professionally, the best men there are in the business and to elevate the projection of motion pictures to the dignity of a profession. The writer is, and has been almost from its inception, a member. He vouches for the fact that the society in no manner or way interferes with or infringes upon the field of the union. In fact, practically all, if not, in fact, all, present members are also members of Local Union 306, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., and this includes at least two past presidents of that body

The president of the society is Lester Bowen, who is, or soon will be, the highest paid moving picture machine operator, I dare say, in the entire world; also he is certainly one of the best operators I know of in this country. Brother Bowen is chief operator in the Rialto theater, New York City, and after January 1st Mr. Bowen's salary will be $5,000 a year, he to then become chief operator in charge of both the Rialto projection and that of the new theater de luxe which Mr. Rothapfel will soon have at 49th street and Broadway. The announcement of this was made upon the direct authority of Mr. Rothapfel, who, together with J. H. Hallberg and wife and the editor and wife, occupied the table at which Toastmaster Smith presided. It came as a complete surprise when Mr. Rothapfel whispered the good news and gave permission for its use that evening; also it was eminently fitting that that particular piece of information be first made upon such an occasion. Mr. Rothapfel's act in thus financially recognizing the worth of high-class work in his operating room will be an encouragement to operators all over the world to strive to excel, since it proves that real excellence in projection has at last been recognized and rewarded in a really big way. After the writer had made the announcement, Mr. Rothapfel in his address made the pointblank statement that the salary was to be paid because Operator Bowen was worth every cent of it. "I am no philanthropist," said Mr. Rothapfel. "I am not giving Mr. Bowen that sum for any other reason than because the high-class service he has given me in years past, coupled with the increased responsibility he will in future have in assuming charge of both the Rialto projection and that of the new theater, justifies its payment. Operator Bowen has made his services worth $5,000 a year, and I am going to give it to him" at which point the applause stopped all further speech for an extended period.

Will C. Smith, assistant general manager Nicholas Power Company, acted as toastmaster and demonstrated the fact that he was complete master of the toast. His introduction of the speakers and his comments on their efforts were invariably good, often witty and always pleasing.

The list of speakers was long. Among them were S. L. Rothapfel, J. H. Hallberg, Ira Sherman, Lester Bowen, Joseph Basson, E. F. Porter, J. E. Robin and F. H. Richardson.

The society has spent three years building a firm foundation. It now proposes to push itself forward and become a factor for good in the projection field. It may and probably will become international.

Shipman Organizes Money-Making Plan

Opens New York Offices as Representative for Independent Manufacturers.

A PLAN of intelligent and practical co-operation for money-saving results between the producers who make pictures and the man who buys them has been evolved by Ernest Shipman, who has been in close touch with the domestic and foreign buyers for some time.

Three prominent film organizations and over ninety purchasers of the territorial rights in the United States and Canada have already agreed upon a plan of co-operation which will permit the placing of an "O. K." upon a story or scenario before it is made, thus insuring profits for the producer and investors.

Mr. Shipman, backed by an experienced office and selling force, is prepared to undertake all business angles in connection with the selling and exploiting end of pictures. Since 1914 he has a record of over $900,000 worth of pictures disposed of, the operations covering the entire field from Broadway runs to small deals in distant parts.

The foreign situation is at present a most complex one, and the utmost skill and knowledge are required in dealing with this market. After a thorough investigation of the men and companies now engaged in the work, no less an expert than Chester Beecroft has been affiliated with for the export trade. Mr. Beecroft has just returned from a four months' tour of England, France, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland and Russia, where he made a critical survey of conditions and established connections with the strongest and most reliable buyers and distributors in each country. His knowledge is accurate, fresh, and thorough; his standing and associates so irreproachable as to remove all fear of possible dangerous governmental difficulties, and his organization is quite unique in system and efficiency.

In order to properly care for the studio and laboratory requirements of certain producers and prominent directors who are already under co-operative contracts, Mr. Shipman has executed a five-year lease for an extensive plant in the very heart of the city, where the highest art in negative development, positive printing, art titles, tests, etc., will be maintained. This plant which has been improved and enlarged since coming into Mr. Shipman's possession, will be known as the Art Studios, and one of the best known laboratory men in the business and staff of assistants is already in charge.

Paralta Engages Raymond B. West

Former Triangle-Ince Director Will Have Charge of the Bessie Barriscale Company.

RAYMOND B. WEST, who made a very notable reputation as a director with the Triangle Producing Company, has joined the directorial staff of the Paralta organization. Negotiations which have been going on between Mr. West and Paralta for several months were brought to a head during the recent visit of Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, to the studios of his company in Hollywood. Contracts were then signed under which the young director entered into a long-term connection with Paralta producing interests.

Raymond B. West.

Since Mr. West's contract with Triangle expired in August, he has been spending much of his time in the California mountains and joins Paralta in fine condition for a season of hard work.

The engagement of Mr. West marks an important step in the determination of Mr. Anderson, president of Paralta, and Robert T. Kane, vice-president, to retain the services of a battery of directors, who, in talent, versatility, experience and reputation, will enjoy the entire confidence of exhibitors throughout the country. In annexing Mr. West, Reginald Barker and Oscar Apfel, they have undoubtedly attained their purpose.

Mr. West will direct Miss Barriscale's third Paralta picture, following the completion of the finishing touches Reginald Barker is now puting on "Madam Who," Harold MacGrath's romantic military mystery story, which will be Miss Barriscale's first Paralta release. "Rose o' Paradise," her first Paralta picture, will be her second Paralta release.

Miss Barriscale's company will go over to Mr. West's direction intact and he will have the very great advantage of the retention of services of Clyde De Vinna, the cameraman who has been so successful in the photography of Miss Barriscale's pictures. He has made a very careful study of her photographic peculiarities and possibilities and has filmed most of her pictures.

Mr. West directed several productions in which Miss Barriscale appeared under Triangle management. It was he who directed her first screen appearance—"The Cup of Life," which has been described as "the perfect photoplay."

Mr. West came to the motion picture industry from commercial life, in which he had a most diversified business training. Beginning as a property man at the old Edendale studio of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, he was promoted to assistant cameraman. He soon became a full-fledged cameraman and in a short time thereafter was intrusted with the responsibility of directing a two-reel comedy, which made a hit and at the same time led to his promotion to a full-fledged director.

Mr. West's greatest work was his participation in the production of "Civilization." For eight months he not only directed many of the great situations and incidents, but he also devoted his attention to the camera work and to the construction of scenes.

TYPES IN HERBERT BRENON'S "EMPTY POCKETS."

"Empty Pockets," the mystery story by Rupert Hughes, whch Herbert Brenon has chosen for his next picture, is composed mainly of types. For this production there will be no star, but a typical Brenon cast will be headed by Bert Lytell, Barbara Castleton, Galanta and Susanne Gilla.

Mr. Brenon has had considerable difficulty with his types. His casting director presented to him one character after another, till in desperation he went to the East Side district. It was there in the Jewish theater that he found the necessary material and Mr. Brenon is now satisfied. The scenes in the sweatshops are acted by people from the sweatshop district.

Metro Sells Foreign Rights

Ben Blumenthal, of the Export and Import Fim Company, Gets the Concession.

A DEAL of great interest to the trade was consummated about two months ago, and has only just come to public knowledge through Frank Garrett, the president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc. Ben Blumenthal, President of the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., has takn over the entire foreign rights to the Metro Pictures.

Ben Blumenthal.

Madame Schuepbach, the representative of the Mundusfilm Corporation of Paris, who was recently here to buy material for the foreign market, and whose personal representative is Mr. Garrett, delayed her departure until she was able to close a deal with Mr. Blumenthal for the rights to these pictures for Spain, France, Italy, Switzerland, Holland and the Balkans.

Mr. Blumenthal is most enthusiastic over the proposition, and feels that the Metro Pictures will be sure of immediate success with European audiences. Such stars as Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne and the Sidney Drews and Harold Lockwood have obtained enormous popularity in this country, and their following will doubtless be increased wherever they are shown abroad. Mr. Blumenthal believes that the European market is coming more and more to demand the American productions, with their elaboration of detail and expensive settings, and that it is a matter of simply bringing the pictures before the audiences in the proper manner to result in the ultimate triumph of American releases over the foreign products. It is a field of the industy of tremendous scope, and heretofore but little explored, and offers great possibilities to the American exporter.

In accordance with his present plans, Mr. Blumenthal is opening exchanges in the other foreign countries, where he cannot sell the territory to some reputable foreign distributor so that all of Europe will be covered in the shortest possible space of time. These exchanges are modeled on the Blumenthal plan of efficiency, under strictly American methods. In the past he has collected an accurate list of all the theaters in all the territories of Europe, and classified them according to grade. This has been accomplished by a thorough canvass of territory. The relative sizes and populations of the various sections have been carefully worked out so that exactly the correct returns from each territory can be estimated. In fact, the whole has been reduced to a matter of statistics.

THEDA BARA SOON TO BE SEEN ON BROADWAY.

Miss Theda Bara, the William Fox star whose fame encircles the globe, will be seen for the first time on Broadway in a sumptuous production of "Cleopatra." In this tremendous photodrama the greatest siren of ancient times, whose charms and machinations wrecked empires and changed the map of the world, is portrayed by Theda Bara, who by her reputation as the greatest living portrayer of siren roles has reincarnated the great figure of history and has depicted with a fidelity that is uncanny the wondrous beauty and the subtle cunning of the Siren of the Nile.

INDIANAPOLIS GENERAL FILM OFFICE MOVES.

The Indianapolis branch of General Film has just made a change in location. Formerly at 24 Washington street, it is now at 122 West New York street.

Honor Roll

J. L. HUNTER, chief auditor of the George Kleine System of exchanges, is one of the latest to doff the civilian garb of the workaday world and don in its stead the trim fitting uniform of the military world. On Friday, September 14, he closed his desk for the last time in the George Kleine executive offices, 63 East Adams street, Chicago, and left for Toronto, Canada, where he is already enrolled as a member of the Royal Flying Corps of the British army and will undergo a thorough course of training at a big aviation field before "going across" to take his place in the air alongside the men who are acting as the "eyes" of the British Army.

J. L. Hunter.

A Canadian by birth, Mr. Hunter spent the early part of his life in the Dominion, acquired a thorough banking experience and was engaged in business at Edmonton, Alberta, when some three years ago he was summoned to New York to accept a position as assistant to Auditor F. S. Phelps in the George Kleine offices. A year later when Mr. Phelps was made general manager, Mr. Hunter was appointed general auditor, and up till last week supervised all the expenditures of the home office and the twenty-four branches scattered throughout the principal cities of the country. His name, naturally, is one known to every employee of George Kleine, and when the next checks go through it will seem strange to many of them to behold a new signature in the place filled for so long a period by the name of J. L. Hunter. The sincere good wishes of the entire George Kleine organization go with Mr. Hunter wherever duty may call him, and it is hoped that he may return at the end of the war covered with glory.

Burett H. Stephens, the theater building expert of Wilmington, N. C., a member of the governing board of the North Carolina Exhibitors' Association, and who took a prominent part in the organization of the A. E. A. at Chicago, has been called to the colors, having been offered a commission as captain in the Engineering Department by President Wilson. Mr. Stephens offered his services to the President soon after the United States entered the world war and qualified as an expert on building of docks and wharves, as well as other construction work. He received notification some days ago of his appointment dating from that time, and has written the War Department asking for ninety days in which to close his private business affairs before going to the front.

Roscoe B. Dayton, formerly associated with L. M. Day, of the Metro Company, Washington, D. C., is another of the film men who have entered the army as a commissioned officer. Mr. Dayton is a graduate of Lehigh University and was a civil engineer. He specialized in bridge building, and his services were readily accepted by the War Department. He has gone to one of the mobilization camps and expects to leave for France before the end of the year. He is very anxious to be assigned to active duty. Upon graduating from Lehigh University, Lieutenant Dayton came to Washington to take an interest in the local Metro branch. He was placed in charge of the cashier's and bookkeeper's department. He continued in this position until he received his orders from the War Department to report for active duty.

Rodney A. Horton, who has just been admitted as a member of the recently organized Officers' Training Camp at Fort Myer, Va., is the first among the moving picture operators of the District of Columbia to have an opportunity to become a commissioned officer in the new National Army. Mr. Horton has been holding two positions in the moving picture field at Washington, being employed during the day by the Metro Film Service Company, while evenings he was the operator at the Washington theater, of which A. H. Brown is the manager. His employers and fellow employees at both places join in wishing him great success, expressing the hope that he will gain a commission in the army as a result of his service at the training camp.

Frank Jonasson, Character Actor

FRANK JONASSON, the popular Kalem character actor, has returned temporarily to the stage, being featured in a vaudeville act. He is using the make-up of "Roger King," father of the girl in Kalem's "The American Girl" series of seventeen episodes. Jonasson first used the make-up in the character of "Ace Brent," the millionaire ranchman of "The Girl from Frisco," of which "The American Girl" is a sequel, and as "The Girl from Frisco" was in twenty-five episodes, Jonasson has appeared on the screen in practically the same character every week for a year.

Frank Jonasson.

"I have been recognized in every city in which I have appeared with my sketch," Jonasson stated in a letter to the Kalem Company, "and some of the discussions regarding my identity have been very amusing. For instance, at a recent matinee in Portland, Oregon, a man sat in the first row with two small boys, who apparently were his sons. After I had been on the stage a few minutes I heard an argument across the footlights. One boy was insisting that I was Ace Brent, and the other contended I was Roger King. As near as I could judge the father settled the discussion by explaining that I was both."

FIRST CAVALIERI SUBJECT UNDER WAY.

Lina Cavalieri has started work on her first Paramount picture under the direction of Emile Chautard. "The Eternal Temptress" is the title of the story which was written expressly for Mme. Cavalieri by Mme. Fred de Gressac, and is a modern tale of Venice and Rome, with powerful dramatic situations, great human appeal and opportunities for scenic investiture seldom equalled in a photoplay. Director Chautard is responsible for the statement that it will afford the beautiful star every opportunity for the exercise of her talents, and believes the picture will be a veritable artistic triumph.

PARAMOUNT CONSERVING FOOD.

Conforming heartily to every requirement of the United States Government, the producing organizations of Paramount have signified their intention of co-operating with Herbert Hoover and the U. S. Food Administration in eliminating food waste by using substitutes in all pictures now in process of production, or which shall hereafter be produced, until the necessity for such conservation is past. Orders have gone forth to each producing company that no more real food shall be used. Papier mache imitations and other substitutes which will not be noticeable in the screen are to be employed.

ABEL ON HIS FIRST TRIP FOR SELECT.

Sydney E. Abel, special representative of Select Pictures Corporation, left Thursday on his first visit to the newly established Select Exchanges. Mr. Abel's first objective is Washington, D. C., where he will be in conference with branch manager V. P. Whitaker, who has recently taken charge of the Washington Exchange, just opened at 811 "E" Street, North West. Whitaker reports big business from the nation's capital, and Abel expects to have a promising report to make on his return from his first official trip.

Walthall Announces Picture

The Initial Production of His Independent Producing Company Will Be "His Robe of Honor"—Miss Charleson Leading Woman.

HAVING established himself as one of the foremost delineators of intense types the screen has borne and having appeared in the stellar role of many of the greatest achievements of the photoplay art, Henry B. Walthall has severed his former connections and in the future will appear at the head of his own independent producing company in screen dramas of a far greater magnitude than the program system would permit. In the future each of his productions will be of such caliber as to constitute an entire evening's entertainment and will be presented under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, Inc.

Mr. Walthall is now in Los Angeles, California, arranging for the filming of his first production, under the new arrangement, which will be a visualization of E. S. and J. F. Dorrance's romantic story, "His Robe of Honor," a strong, virile portraiture of love and politics in a great city, featuring a leopard judge who changes his spots under the influence of a girl of high society. The decision to present this story as the initial production of Mr. Walthall's new organization comes after much deliberation. For many weeks Mr. Walthall has been engaged in reading manuscripts written by many of the foremost writers of the day, a number of which have been purchased for future presentation. The final decision was made to present "His Robe of Honor" as the initial production, not only on account of the great popularity of the book, which ran into several editions, but owing to its aptness to be portrayed by the type in which Mr. Walthall has achieved his greatest triumphs. "His Robe of Honor" is a bold, clever denunciation of graft-permeated, back-room politics, setting forth in telling manner the inner workings of a powerful political ring seldom exposed to the view of the average voter, which promises to give Mr. Walthall exceptional opportunities to run the entire gamut of emotion and to present a photo-dramatic offering of exceptional appeal.

Henry B. Walthall and Mary Charleson Arriving in Los Angeles.

Miss Mary Charleson, whose beauty, combined with her rare histrionic talents achieved for her a most notable success while playing opposite Mr. Walthall in productions produced by Essanay Company, has been engaged by Mr. Walthall as leading woman in his new organization. Miss Charleson is now at the Coast, making preparations to appear in his initial production, which will be released by the Paralta Plan.

ALLAN SEARS IN "BLUE BLOOD."

Allan Sears, well-known leading man of filmdom, is the most recent acquisition to the large force of players now engaged at the Triangle studio in Culver City, Cal. His first production under the Triangle colors will be in "Blue Blood," a production just begun by Director E. Mason Hopper, in which Alma Ruebens will be starred. An unusually elaborate set, covering an entire stage 50 by 150 feet, has been erected for the production. The furniture includes some of the finest antiques in the huge Triangle art collection, and is valued at $30,000.

Fox Players in Big Scenes

Delegation of Press Representatives Witness Filming of Thrilling Spectacles for "Les Miserables."

REPRESENTATIVES of the publicity department of the Fox Film Corporation, including Walter Sanford, Kilbourn Gordon, Hamilton Thompson and A. L. Selig, on Thursday entertained numerous individuals from the trade press and other publications interested in moving pictures.

The party went in autos to the studios at Fort Lee, N. J., where they saw one of the largest sets of the production in finished state, and witnessed several hundred performers at work. The scenes taken were located on a Paris street in the days of the Commune, and led up to the fighting between soldiers and citizens at the barricade. The street setting was more than two blocks in depth, with cobblestone pavement, street lamps, a pharmacy, sidewalk cafe and many picturesque shops. The populace and soldiers were in true historical costume and made a fine showing. Frank Lloyd, Mark Robbins and others were in charge of the production.

In the party of press visitors were Mrs. Jessie Niles Burness, editor of Film Fun; Miss Agnew of The Morning Telegraph, K. C. Beaton of the New York American, C. E. Wagner of The Exhibitors' Trade Review, Peter Milne of The Motion Picture News, Kitty Kelly of the Chicago Examiner, Mrs. G. S. Kaufman of the New York Times and R. C. McElravy of The Moving Picture World.

"Les Miserables" is scheduled for release sometme during the fall months.

Stanley King in New Play

WILLIAM HUMPHREY, one of the best known directors in the country, has in association with others for the past few months been laboring in the preparation of a semi-spectacular, yet extremely modern play. The final touches to the scenario are now being applied and Oscar I. Lamberger, Ph.D., who is one of the moving spirits in this enterprise, reports that the finding of locations, selections of special scenic settings and effects are practically completed.

As it will be necessary to take scenes of this picture in different parts of the country, arrangements of engaging special trains have been entered into.

The production will rank among the hundred thousand dollar kind, and the leading characters that are to be portrayed will call upon the lines of artistry specially in the difficult parts. One of the very important roles will be the one of the juvenile lead, who will have to appear in the double role of a youth of eighteen and a man of twenty-eight. This part already has been secured by Stanley King, a youthful artist, who in the pre-rehearsals has proven exceptional fitness for the part ascribed to him. Mr. King's screen experience and his painstaking study of the drama have shown remarkable results. Born in this country, he was not satisfied with the tuition received in the land of his birth, but visited the Imperial Dramatic School of Vienna, where he received an additional year of tuition. His studies there were cut short by the outbreak of the war.

Stanley King.

Unquestionably under the well-known Humphrey direction, Stanley King will forge fast to the front.

WORSLEY TO DIRECT RHEA MITCHELL.

Wallace Worsley will direct Rhea Mitchell's first independent star picture, made at the Paralta studios in Hollywood, to be released under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, Inc. Mr. Worsley is an actor and director of wide experience, both on the legitimate stage and screen. He made an exceptionally notable hit as Henry Jenks in support of J. Warren Kerrigan in "A Man's Man."

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Essanay Perfection Pictures

October Releases Through the George Kleine System Includes Two Comedy Dramas and Ade Fables.

ESSANAY'S October offering on the Perfection Pictures program, George Kleine System, distributors, includes two five-part comedy-dramas and a continuation of the weekly releases through General Film of George Ade's Fables in Slang.

Taylor Holmes heads the feature list in his second Essanay production, entitled, "Fools for Luck." This is a screen version of a story by Kennett Harris entitled "Talismans," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Based on the prevailing human weakness, superstition, and portraying the ludicrous efforts of a young man to "work a rabbit's foot" in a love affair, it presents Mr. Holmes in a role of subtle humor of the same type in which he won his fame on the stage. The picture has a screen time of sixty-five minutes. It will be released October 8.

A week following the release of "Fools for Luck," Bryant Washburn will make his first appearance on the Perfection Picturs program in a five-part comedy-drama entitled "The Fibbers." The story, written by Jas. W. Adams, a magazine writer, hinges on the theory that while it all very well not to fib to your wife, still, by the same token, your wife should not fib to you. The results of this reasoning, wrought in "The Fibbers"—both man and wife—are dire in their effect. It has been aimed to give Mr. Washburn a role affording him the amplitude for his humorous portrayals which were so well liked in "Skinner's Dress Suit," and other of his recent successes. Virginia Valli appears as his leading woman. Miss Valli has been seen before with Mr. Washburn, having played an important part in "Filling His Own Shoes." She also essayed the leading feminine role for Taylor Holmes in his first Essanay production, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," and won favorable comment on her work. "The Fibbers" has a screen time of sixty-five minutes. It will be released October 15.

UNIVERSAL SERVICE DEPARTMENT IN CHICAGO.

The Universal Company has taken hold of the Service Department idea very strongly. W. A. Bach, of the New York office, has just opened a Publicity-Service Department in the Chicago office and has placed L. M. Firestone in charge. Mr. Firestone is a clever young advertising man and will be able to render splendid service to the exhibitor. He was formerly an agency man.

The object of this new department is to give every possible assistance to the exhibitor in the matter of advertising, publicity and the looking after of all the exhibitors' requirements, free of charge. Service to the exhibitor will be rendered spontaneously and with a sincere feeling of "we are glad to do this." Summed up, the Service Department will be the "missing link" between the exhibitor and the exchange.

Universal now has three most complete departments in New York, Toronto, Canada, and Chicago. Similar departments will soon be opened up in many other exchanges.

GAUMONT PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF OCTOBER 8.

Focussing its efforts for the present upon its single-reel featurettes, the Gaumont Company is able to offer to the public in the Mutual Weekly a news periodical on the screen which is not only up to the very moment in timeliness but edited as carefully as a high-grade literary magazine. As war news now takes precedence in the minds of the people, current issues of the Weekly are largely devoted to this topic, but other important events are not neglected. A capable and enthusiastic staff of cameramen all over the world insure a regular supply of war pictures. The Gaumont-Mutual Weekly is released every Wednesday.

The other single-reel release of the Gaumont Company is the magazine on the screen, "Reel Life," which, in variety of subjects, excellence of photography, and carefulness in editing, has eclipsed all other releases of this class. Issue No. 76, which released Thursday, October 11, keeps up the high standard acquired by preceding numbers. The subjects therein, which are shown in entertaining detail, comprise: "A Dam Across the Mississippi," which makes Minneapolis a river port; "Acrobatic Cyclists," a clever stunt from the vaudeville stage; "Cantaloupes of the Imperial Valley," showing the gathering, packing, and shipping of these luscious melons from below sea level; and "The Development of the Watch," a feature subject, picturing the watch from the earliest model to the latest, including many worth a king's ransom and some of which represent the extravagance responsible for the French Revolution. This week's animated drawing from "Life" is entitled, "Coming Home from the Club in 1950," and shows what the jolly clubman may expect when he reaches his home roof in the early morning hours a few years hence.

VICTOR MOORE IN "IN BED—IN BAD."

Victor Moore will release on Sept. 24 his newest comedy called "In Bed—In Bad," written for him by Thos. J. Gray. Vic is a "busy bee" at his office, and he is working so hard that his office staff becomes alarmed, for fear he may overwork. They all impress this strongly upon him. Needless to say he laughs at them, for he never was sick a day in his life.

On his arrival home, his wife greets him with great concern over the way he looks and insists upon sending for the doctor. She phones him, and he tells her to put Vic to bed at once, that he will be over with a nurse. She does.

The fact that Vic has been put to bed sick becomes the talk of the neighborhood and each neighbor comes over to do their "bit." Each one suggests a different doctor, and "Mrs. Vic" has them all. One doctor says it's his heart, the other his chest, and another says it's his throat. However, after a final consultation, they all decide he should be operated on for appendicitis. Vic is alarmed and wants to know what caused this, and the doctors tell him he does not get enough exercise. Vic says, he will get some right away, and he ends up by "walloping" the life out of all the doctors.

This is a distinctly different Moore Comedy and the fans who like "Camping" and "The Cinderella Husband," will more than like this one. It has plenty of laughs and funny situations.

Strong "Falcon" Offering

Vola Vale Featured in "The Secret of Black Mountain" with Picturesque Western Atmosphere.

FOLLOWING great appreciation evoked by the first Falcon Features, with a strong western dramatic atmosphere, "The Mainspring," General Film offers another western subject just as handsomely produced, with a notable star. The star in this case is none other than Vola Vale, and opposite her plays a screen favorite who is leaping into fame and popularity fast, Philo McCullough. The play is "The Secret of Black Mountain," which is ready for immediate release.

This drama is picturized from a fine magazine story by Jackson Gregory. The scene is laid in California, and the plot is filled with red-blooded situations amid mountain backgrounds of natural grandeur. The story is one of great appeal in behalf of both the heroine and the hero. Miss Vale, today established as a box-office luminary of the first rank, has the role of a young school teacher from the East who penetrates the uncivilized fastnesses of the Mother Lode country in search of her grandfather's fortune, he having been a Forty-niner. There are many adventures and complications, but the most vital part of the story concerns her experiences when she is kidnapped by a handsome young mountaineer and conducted upon an enforced mission of mercy. During her thrilling dangers the secret of the fortune becomes gradually disclosed, making this a combination of romance, detective story and love affair. The direction was under the supervision of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer, who provided Miss Vale with a strong supporting cast.

DETECTIVE STORY GIVES SCENE TO PICTURE.

In "The Penny Philanthropist," Wholesome Films production, there is an intensely dramatic incident founded on an actual experience of William J. Burns, the internationally famous detective. An Italian laborer has been bribed to light a fuse-bomb in the basement of a rich man's home. The Italian had no grievance against the rich man, but he needed money with which to bring the wife and family from Italy.

Miss Peggy O'Neill, in the title role of Clara E. Laughlin's master story, offers a remarkable portrayal bringing to her interpretation a wealth of talent and charm.

Frank Weed, as the Italian, is most realistic and the role as presented by him will long be remembered, say critics, as one of the truest Italian characterizations ever given to the screen.

The scenes between Miss O'Neill and Mr. Weed, including the planting of the bomb, were taken in the heart of Chicago's "Little Italy."

The action all seemed so real that with the gathering of an excited menacing crowd it was thought best to obtain a guard of police. Miss O'Neill obtained from each police officer his name and address that she might send autographed photographs as souvenirs of the incident.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS HAS BIGGEST WEEK OF ITS HISTORY.

The collections on the Hearst-Pathe News for the week ending Sept. 1 were the largest in its history. This important fact not only illustrates the general desire on the part of the public to follow on the screen the various civil and military activities of the United States in connection with the war, but also proves that exhibitors have come to believe what the Hearst-Pathe News has always maintained, that the news weekly is vitally essential to a well balanced program. Today the Hearst-Pathe News is booked by more and better theaters than at any time in its long and successful history.

Fox October Releases

Great Variety of Subjects Announced—"Miss U. S. A." Will Feature June Caprice.

WHAT is probably the most varied and widely different group releases William Fox has ever made is announced for October. The pictures star Gladys Brockwell, Virginia Pearson, June Caprice, George Walsh and Dustin Farnum. Technically, Miss Brockwell's play is a September issue, as it will be released on the last day of the month; but inasmuch as it has been substituted for another production through a change in schedule, it comes practically unheralded. This will be the order of the photoplays:

September 30—Gladys Brockwell in "Conscience."
October 7—Virginia Pearson in "Thou Shalt Not Steal."
October 14—June Caprice in "Miss U. S. A."
October 21—George Walsh in "This Is the Life."
October 28—Dustin Farnum in "The Scarlet Pimpernel."

"Conscience," Miss Brockwell's new starring vehicle, is an unusually vivid drama with an allegorical motif. The central theme has been deftly treated by Bertram Bracken, the director.

Miss Pearson's forthcoming subject, "Thou Shalt Not Steal," required an extraordinarily large supporting cast.

"Miss U. S. A.," as the title indicates, gives June Caprice a story infused with patriotic spirit. The picture is most dramatic and shows also many spectacular military scenes.

On October 21 the public will first have the opportunity of seeing a photoplay made by one brother and starring another. R. A. Walsh is in charge of screening "This Is the Life," and George is doing valiant work in showing just what that life is. The picture is of the light comedy type for which "Smiling George" has become famous. With R. A. Walsh, the man who staged "The Honor System," attending to the productions, a remarkable attraction should result.

"The Scarlet Pimpernel," the final release of the month, is rich in adventure and brims with swiftest action, as anyone who has read Baroness Orczy's splendid novel well knows. The stage version has been counted as one of the biggest "hits" of the British theater. Dustin Farnum is in the starred part. The pimpernel is a tiny wayside flower which has been adopted as the emblem of a band of Englishmen engaged in rescuing condemned aristocrats during the French Revolution.

FOOD CONSERVATION IN HEARST-PATHE NEWS.

Early in October, the International, through the Pathe Exchanges, will release an educational feature entitled "Saving the Food of a Nation," which presents unusual and striking features of national importance.

The pictures were taken in the Municipal Evaporating Plant of the City of Hartford, Conn., where the Chamber of Commerce established a system of drying surplus food products of the Connecticut farmers that would otherwise be wasted.

An imposing feature of the film is the views taken of Governor Marcus H. Holcomb, of Connecticut, and Frank A. Hagarty, Mayor of Hartford, inspecting the plant, in company with members of the Chamber of Commerce and a special Conservation Commission created to look after this industry. So important does Governor Holcomb consider this work that he is giving it his personal supervision, believing that the example set by the Hartford authorities of the State of Connecticut will be taken up on a national scale as soon as its value is realized.

So far tons of corn, squash, cabbage, spinach, apples and other vegetables and fruit, that would otherwise have been wasted, have been saved for future consumption. The city authorities retain 10 per cent. of the products brought in by each farmer, and this percentage is given away to the poor of the city and state.

The pictures show the arrival of surplus produce from the farmers, its preparation for the drying kilns, the kilns themselves, and the products in their state after evaporation. An interesting feature is the part played by school girls and boys who do all the work in the plant under the supervision of the Conservation Commission, whose chairman is William C. Holden. The plant is located in a building donated by the City.

The city, at its own expense, has installed a complete evaporating plant capable of handling a large amount of produce each day. The value of this work lies in the fact that evaporated food of all kinds can be kept for years, only needing the addition of water to bring it back to an edible condition. Among the voluntary workers in the plant are fourteen members of the First Russian Union of Agricultural Instruction, who, next Spring, will return to Russia to instruct their fellows in this work, which they consider to be of incalculable value.

COMMONWEALTH COMEDIES NAMED.

President Joseph S. Klein of the Commonwealth Comedy Company, Inc., has now decided upon the first three releases of "Three C Comedies," which begin distribution through General Film Company one week beginning September 28. They are in the order named: "His Winning Way," with Lou Marks; "Fat and Foolish," with Hughey Mack; and "A Harem Romance," with Lou Marks, Pearl Shephard and Oom Paul. The last-named trio is to be featured in all future Lou Marks subjects. Specially designed one-sheet posters accompany all these releases.

Five Stars on Mutual Program.

Schedule for Week of October 1 Notable for Leading Players Featured.

EDNA GOODRICH, Mary Miles Minter, Helen Holmes, Billie Rhodes, and George Ovey are on Mutual's release schedule the week of October 1. Miss Goodrich appears in "Queen X," the second of her Mutuals, and Miss Minter in "Her Country's Call." Billie Rhodes appears in "Some Nurse," the first of a new series of Mutual-Strand comedies.

"Queen X" is a five-reel drama built around the crusade of the federal authorities against a gang of Oriental smugglers. It was written by Edwin M. Stanton, assistant district attorney of New York, who conducted the government's fight on the Orientals. It is full of vivid action and unusual scenes, carried by an interesting and powerful story. The production was staged under the direction of John B. O'Brien.

Miss Goodrich's first Mutual production, "Reputation," was a revelation of the star's popularity from the box-office angle. It swept aside all doubt as to the value at the ticket window of the motion picture theater of a star of the speaking stage. Miss Goodrich's fame as a beauty and as an actress, if box-office results are indicative, has penetrated the most remote crossroads.

"Her Country's Call" is the second of the new series of Minter Mutuals, starring the pretty little star. Miss Minter is now working under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. "Her Country's Call" follows "Charity Castle," which was pronounced a Minter masterpiece.

Miss Minter is cast in "Her Country's Call" as a girl of the moonshine mountains, the daughter of a Civil War colonel, stolen during war time by a bootlegger, who has been reared to despise the flag by the mountaineer whom she thought her father.

The old lesson is unlearned by a young captain of secret service, and the mountain child sounds the alarm which saves the border town from attack by outlaws. She finds her father and sister and acquires a handsome husband.

"Some Nurse" is the first release of a new series of Strand-Mutual comedies, starring Billie Rhodes, the pretty little comedienne. She is supported in the pictures by Jay Belasco, who appeared with her in a series of successful one-reel productions a few months ago. "Some Nurse" is built on a clean, rollickingly funny story and has been produced with lots of snap. It is in every respect a quality comedy. The release date is October 2. The second comedy on the week's schedule is "Jerry in Yodel Land," a side-splitting one-reeler, featuring George Ovey, the star in the series of one-reel Cub comedies, which are released through Mutual. The release date is October 4.

The third chapter of the new Mutual serial, "The Lost Express," is released on Monday, October 1. Helen Holmes does some thrilling stunts in "The Wreck at the Crossing," which is the title of the chapter. She rides on the roof of a speeding passenger train, does battle with a gang of ruffians, leaps to a cable stretched across the track and crawls hand over hand to a telegraph pole. Before the chapter ends she has another thrilling experience. The automobile in which she is racing is struck by the train at a grade crossing, hurled 25 feet and demolished. The action of the chapter is fast, and the story moves with great rapidity. Director McGowan has produced some high-voltage thrills, and Miss Holmes takes the risks with the same fearlessness which has won her world-wide fame as the most daring girl on earth. "The Lost Express" is a fifteen-chapter photonovel from the pen of Frederick B. Bennett, noted traveler and writer. It was directed by J. P. McGowan and produced by the Signal Film Corporation.

The topical releases for the week include Reel Life No. 75, scheduled for October 1, and Mutual Weekly No. 144, scheduled for October 3. The weekly contains the current news up to the hour that the film is made up. Reel Life covers the following subjects: "Dogs of War," "The Sign of a City," "Making Army Rifles," "Japanese Dwarf Plants" and an animated cartoon from Life, entitled "The Chorus Girl Who Hesitates Is Lost."

ART DRAMAS GO BIG IN SOUTH.

The Art Dramas program is filling a valuable niche in the booking arrangements of exhibitors of the South and Southwest, according to a statement made by Arthur F. Beck, general manager of Art Dramas, Inc., following conferences with the company's representatives in the southern territory.

Frank M. Sanford, president and general manager of Southwestern Art Dramas, Inc., of Dallas, Tex., and also of Southwestern Art Dramas, New Orleans, La., spent several days here in consultation with Mr. Beck. As a result he acquired additional territory for Art Dramas, covering the entire state of Mississippi and the western portion of Alabama.

Mr. Sanford expressed himself as greatly pleased with the success of Art Dramas in his territory. Exhibitors, he said, have found the program one of attractiveness and high quality and possessed of a drawing power that gets them the business. Mr. Sanford is enthused over the outlook for the coming season, which he is confident will bring him an enormous volume of business. He has arranged for additional prints of the Crane Wilbur subjects, which are proving very popular in his territory.

Charles W. Harden, of the E. & H. Film Distributing Company, of Atlanta, Ga., was also in town and reported that Art Dramas films are a wonderful success in his territory, covering a vast section of the South.

"THE PRICE OF A GOOD TIME" (Jewel).

Lois Weber, producer of "Where Are My Children?" "Shoes," "Hypocrites," "Even As You and I," "The Mysterious Mrs. M," and a score of other widely known screen successes, has just completed a new and very elaborate production which Jewel Productions, Inc., will bring into the Broadway Theater on October 7, for a limited engagement. It is titled "The Price of a Good Time" and features Mildred Harris. The cast includes Kenneth Harlan, Anne Schaefer, Helene Rossin, Alfred Allen, Adele Farrington and Gertrude Aster.

Scene from "The Price of a Good Time" (Jewel).

The story adapted by Miss Weber is from "The Whim" by Marion Orth, which appeared in Breezy Stories and attracted widespread attention as a department store study with unusual situations. Miss Weber and Phillips Smalley have directed the feature which enjoys the distinction of being the first Lois Weber production made entirely in Miss Weber's own new studio in Universal City, Cal. Allen Siegler is the photographer, and it is said that some very novel color effects have been achieved by Jack Bloom, formerly with Griffith. The story reveals the life and problems of two department store girls who work side by side and the chapters which follow when the son of the store's owner, as a whim, fancies one of them. Miss Weber declares this one of her most notable offerings.

SPIRIT OF THE TIMES IN CURRENT EVENTS.

With the exception of a series of pictures showing the opening of Billy Sunday's fall campaign at San Francisco, where it is predicted the athletic evangelist will make the devil take to the Pacific Ocean, the nineteenth issue of Universal Current events is devoted exclusively to military subjects.

Patrons of this up-to-the-minute news feature are given an excellent opportunity to view the reception accorded our troops in London. In addition to interesting human interest studies of the crowds, intimate pictures are given of King Georve V, Queen Mary, and Queen Mother Alexandra, besides close-ups of Premier Lloyd-George, American Ambassador Page and Admiral Sims, U. S. N. In Trafalgar Square and at Wellington Barracks Universal's cameramen obtained some of the finest shots that have come out of London in months.

Another thrilling review, recently staged on the narrow strip of sand that still remains free of invaders, shows King Albert of Belgium, "the hero without a country," watching his battle-worn veterans pass before him in full campaign regalia.

A series of official French war pictures has also been added to this reel, giving a graphic idea of the celebration held in Alsace a few weeks ago upon the arrival of the French General Hirschauer with his troops in one of the cities of the province that has been under Prussian domination from 1871 until very recently. The joy of the liberated French populace is expressed in characteristic fashion.

Throughout the reel occur many unusual bits of photography, while the titling has all of the popular appeal that has made other issues notable.

HARTMANN GETS WALLY VAN COMEDIES.

William C. Hartmann, of 218 West Forty-second Street, has secured exclusive control of Wally Van Productions. Wally Van, formerly one of the Vitagraph stars and directors, has entered the production field. His policy will be to make two reel high grade refined dramatic comedies, starring himself in these productions.

Mr. Hartmann states that the first comedy is ready for screening. He says that it is replete with comical situations, and spectacular stunts of the Wally Vanesque type. He says that the comedy in the picture increases with the length of film, and has a happy ending. The picture is one that will please both old and young, and will take a high place in the comedy productions of the day.

It has not yet been definitely decided in what manner the Wally Van Comedies will be released.

The Week's Work for Fox

Gladys Brockwell Feature Advanced on Schedule—June Caprice Company Completed.

THROUGH a change in releases in the one-a-week special features just decided upon by William Fox, Gladys Brockwell's new production, "Conscience," a wonderful production and a film novelty, which Bertram Bracken made in the Hollywood, Cal., studios, has been advanced in the schedule to September 30. Bertram Grassby plays opposite Miss Brockwell in the picture. The entire supporting company is one of the finest that has been seen in any subject this year.

A mid-October release will be June Caprice's new starring vehicle, which has been titled during the week "Miss U. S. A.," and for which the cast has just been selected. This will include William Courtleigh, Jr., Frank Evans, Tom Burrough, H. S. Gatchell and A. Hall. Mr. Courtleigh, who was in the original "Under Cover" company on Broadway, has an important role in Mr. Fox's film version of Ralph Connor's "The Doctor," soon to be released. William Farnum is the star of this production.

Frank Evans and Tom Burrough are both veteran cinema players. Evans has appeared in many William Fox dramas, among others "The Family Stain," "The Unwelcome Mother," "Destruction," and "The Battle of Life." Burrough has been in two previous Caprice subjects, "Caprice of the Mountains" and "The Ragged Princess," and was also seen in "Sins of Men," "The Unwelcome Mother" and "She."

Miss Caprice's picture is her tenth for the Fox films and has a story of a decidedly patriotic nature. Harry Millarde is directing "Miss U. S. A." at the Fox studies in Fort Lee, N. J.

Wanda Petit is now playing her first role in motion pictures on the West Coast. Miss Petit is opposite George Walsh in the film which his brother, R. A. Walsh, is directing in Hollywood, Cal. The rise of Wanda Petit to leading woman in the company of one of the best in picturedom is one of the most remarkable features of its kind in years. Miss Petit had appeared previously in only three screen dramas, all William Fox productions, but her work was of such quality that she was advanced immediately to her present position.

Virginia Pearson finished this week her eleventh pictureplay for Mr. Fox. The film is called "Thou Shalt Not Steal," and was directed by William Nigh. It is scheduled for release on October 7.

HAM COMEDIES GO WELL.

Hardly had the Kalem group of five new "Ham Comedies" been announced to the trade than bookings came in spontaneously, General Film reports. "Ham and Bud," featured in these subjects, have long been premier favorites of the comedy screen. Besides Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan, various of the casts include pretty Edyth Sterling, Henry Murdock, Marin Sais, John Steppling, R. E. Bradbury and Edward Clisbee. The series begins October 5.

"TICKLED TO DE-FEET" (L-Ko).

Archie Mayo has turned out his second L-Ko, under the general direction of J. G. Blystone, with Eddie Barry the featured comedian. "Tickled to De-feet" is the title, and it will be presented late in October through Universal exchanges. Eva Novak will be leading lady, and Chester Ryckman and Bob McKenzie will join in the fun making.

Scene from "Tickled to De-feet" (L-Ko).

Despite the fact that turning out "slapstick" comedies with regularity keeps the inventive genius of General Director Blystone working at top speed, the assertion is made that "Tickled to De-feet" will prove that his well of comedy inspiration is a long way from run dry. Novel methods of surprising laughs from the "fans" have been incorporated in the routine of fun making, and an L-Ko right up to the standard is promised.

BUSY AT GLENDALE STUDIOS.

The Empire All Star Corporation studio at Glendale, L. I., is busy from morning till night with every stage occupied. "Please Help Emily," starring Ann Murdock, is being filmed under the direction of Dell Henderson. Ferdinand Gottschalk is playing the part of Herbert Threadgold, the same part he created on the stage; Rex McDougal has the leading male role while Hubert Druce, Amy Veness and John Harwood are all in the cast, thus insuring excellent interpretations of the various roles.

Olive Tell, movieland's newest and perhaps most beautiful star, is busily at work on "The Unforeseen." Mr. David Powell is supporting Miss Tell and has a very unusual and difficult role to enact, that of a man who suddenly loses his sight, and it requires all Mr. Powell's well-known powers of interpretation to make the part seem natural and real. John B. O'Brien is the director for "The Unforeseen," as he has been for several of the features filmed at the same studio.

Albert Capellani has Edna Goodrich under his direction, and "American Maid," the picture being taken, is now well on its way to completion.

A screen picturization of "My Wife" has been prepared by the Empire All Star Corporation who are filming Charles Frohman's successes in motion pictures. Ann Murdock will be seen in the stellar role, while Ferdinand Gottschalk, Rex McDougal, Hubert Druce, and Amy Veness are other prominent members of the cast.

LEAH BAIRD IN "SINS OF AMBITION."

Noting the fact that there are no less than three coming features this fall advertising Miss Leah Baird we must fain believe her guilty in accordance with the title of her last announced vehicle, "Sins of Ambition." For successful features released on the open booking plan this beautiful young lady must be conceded the palm, this year, at least. Commencing with "The People vs. John Doe" each and every feature in which she has appeared has made a monetary as well as an artistic success.

It is understood that she has claimed "The Sins of Ambition" to be her best work, and as the feature has been booked for a Broadway run in one of the big houses for its pre-release premier, her many admirers will have the opportunity of comparing her efforts with past performances. With Miss Baird in this production are Wilfred Lucas, James Morrison and Barbara Castleton, and those in the "know" claim that faultless direction and extraordinary beautiful sets have united in making this one of the best offerings of the year. Together with the claim of the beautiful star these "underneath the low down" statements have aroused widespread interest among the trade and the opening night will undoubtedly find Miss Baird receiving felicitations from a legion of friends and admirers. The industry as a whole can well afford to be proud of such sterling performers as beautiful Leah Baird, whose wholesomeness and intelligence of mind match fully the beauty of her face and form.

MAE MURRAY'S GOWNS IN "THE PRINCESS VIRTUE."

Mae Murray in her first Bluebird production, "The Princess Virtue," will wear a number of remarkable gowns of costly material and most unusual design, some of them, in fact—those for the ballroom and dinner scenes—being really very striking. The new Bluebird star has been an artist from her early childhood days, and most of the clothes which she wears away from the studios are of her own designing. She keeps in close touch with the modistes who make gowns for the pictures, with the result that Miss Murray is rated among the best dressed women in screendom.

The scenes for "The Princess Virtue" are laid in France, among the ultra-fashionable folk of Paris and at the exclusive watering resorts, and Director Robert Leonard makes the declaration that the many women who appear in the scenes will be so beautifully gowned that a veritable fashion show feast will be constantly presented. Miss Murray has had two wonderful shawls made for the production. One is of silk with gold trimming and the other is of black lace trimmed with silver. They have safely arrived at the studios from New York and have been pronounced the most beautiful creations of the kind ever seen in Bluebirdom.

LIVE SELIG SUBJECTS.

Variety marked General Film's current releases from the Selig Polyscope Company. The list is headed with a two-reel military spectacular offering which may be described as a picturized war college, and which bears the title "Training Our Khaki-Clad Heroes." In two reels of highly interesting scenes, the development of the raw recruit into an efficient fighting machine is graphically presented. Snap, fore and martial dash are contained in the diversity of scenes unfolded, although they move systematically to a culminating presentation of huge national achievements.

The dramatic releases have Bessie Eyton as lead in several of the subjects, notably "The Law North of '65" and "The Angel of Poverty Row." Kathlyn Williams comes back in "The Voice That Led Him." Myrtle Stedman, Tom Mix, and Laster Cuneo are again favorites of old in "The Rustler's Vindication." All of these are fine short-length releases.

The Selig World Library has attained its nineteenth weekly issue, with continued success as an educational subject.

Artcraft's October Array

Douglas Fairbanks, Geraldine Farrar and William S. Hart Subjects Completed Simultaneously—All Three Productions Now Being Cut and Assembled.

BY strange coincidence the productions of all three Artcraft releases for October were completed simultaneously, and the work of cutting and assembling the respective films is now under way in the Fort Lee and Hollywood plants of the Famous Players-Lasky organization. The final preparation of all the October offerings is expected to be completed within the course of a week, allowing plenty of time for the distribution of the prints to the Artcraft exchanges throughout the country.

At the Fort Lee plant the Douglas Fairbanks picture, "The Man from Painted Post," is receiving its final touches. Proclaimed by everyone connected with its production to be the best Fairbanks offering yet, this photoplay discloses the energetic Douglas in a role that will meet with particular favor among his many admirers. The characterization is typically Fairbanks and includes many athletic stunts which outshine any of his previous presentations, including a record long-distance saddle mount, in which Douglas leaps from the porch of a house onto the back of his pony 14 feet away. "The Man from Painted Post" will be the first Artcraft release in October.

Under the personal supervision of Cecil B. De Mille, "The Woman God Forgot," starring Geraldine Farrar, is now being cut and assembled at the Hollywood plant. Another cinema spectacle, disclosing the combined arts of Geraldine Farrar, Cecil B. De Mille and Jeanie Macpherson, this production bids fair to create a greater sensation than even "Joan the Woman," the last film offering of this noted trio. Undoubtedly the most spectacular film ever released by Artcraft, "The Woman God Forgot" is expected to prove the motion picture triumph of the season. Among its other features, this photoplay boasts of the highest set ever built for a motion picture in this country in its presentation of the Aztec temple, on the top of which a thrilling battle was staged.

As its final release for October, Artcraft will offer Thomas H. Ince's initial William S. Hart production, "The Narrow Trail," now also receiving its final treatment in California. Produced under the supervision of Mr. Ince, this film is undoubtedly the most spectacular Hart picture ever staged, thousands of people taking part in various thrilling scenes. In addition to its many notable features, this picture will mark three important events in annals of the screen, namely, the introduction of "Big Bill" as an Artcraft star, his debut as an author and the final appearance on the screen of his popular horse "Fritz," whose narrow escape in one of the thrilling scenes of this production prompted the actor to retire his beloved pony.

For the presentation of these photoplays the advertising and publicity department of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, in conjunction with the exhibitors' service department, have prepared extensive exploitation campaigns for the exhibitor. An exceptional line of advertising accessories and publicity aids is now being completed and will be tied up with the general campaign on these films conducted from the New York headquarters.

"SOME NURSE" (Mutual).

"Some Nurse," the first of the new series of Mutual-Strand one-reel comedies starring Billie Rhodes, carries a situation which contains limitless possibilities for riproaring laughter.

Scene from "Some Nurse" (Mutual).

Rival suitors for the fair damsel's favor have both feigned injury in automobile mishaps to gain her sympathy. They have been carried into the same hospital room. The doctor suspects. The girl is certain. Whereupon radical treatment is prescribed. A cold pack is ordered for one, a hot pack for the other. The butler brings a cake of ice into the room and packs one. Two huskies come in with a strange arrangement, a species of steam boiler. It is fitted over the "injured" hero, and the fires started. In the height of the patients' anguish, one freezing and the other boiling, the doctor decrees a shifting of the treatment, whereupon each patient gets the opposite extreme.

"THE DESIRE OF THE MOTH" (Bluebird).

The Bluebird release for October 22 will be the third of a series of special productions Rupert Julian has undertaken for the program. In "The Desire of the Moth" one of the principal roles is also played by Mr. Julian, but the star will be Ruth Clifford. In this production, Miss Clifford's new leading man, Scene from "The Desire of the Moth" (Bluebird).

Monroe Salisbury, will make his first appearance in furtherance of the intention to have Miss Clifford star, Mr. Salisbury lead and Mr. Julian produce a line of releases that will be especially featured among forthcoming Bluebirds.

Elliott J. Clawson originated the story and prepared the scenario of "The Desire of the Moth." Supporting roles will be carried by W. H. Bainbridge, Milton Brown and Al Sears, as principals, with a numerous company of riders and Western "types" to forward the atmosphere of the beautiful Sierra Nevada scenery that Mr. Julian picked out for the backing of a series of episodes filled with dramatic and pictorial interest. The plot will unfold a sturdy and vigorous romance, typical of the old West, when real men flourished and performed heroic deeds in the natural progress of everyday events.

FUN-ART FILMS, INC., STARTS WORK.

Fun-Art Films, Inc., has started actual work on its first picture at the Thanhouser Studios in New Rochelle. It is the intention to release two two-reel comedies a month, with the well-known vaudeville team of Ray and Gordon Dooley featured in the principal comedy roles.

The Dooleys, although young in years, are well known on the big time circuit and are live wires that need no recharging. Gordon Dooley, famous for his falls, slips and slides, with utter disregard for suffering limbs or endangered neck, has never failed to convulse his audience with his sure-fire rapid style of entertainment.

Vincent Bryan and Johnny Hines will collaborate as producers and directors.

Edward Horn, who will do the camera work, was five years with Pathe, a year and a half with the Biograph, two years with the World Film and George Kleine.

Among those who will be seen in the cast in addition to Ray and Gordon Dooley, will be Mr. Hines, who will play the opposite comedy parts to Gordon Dooley, and Edward Kimball, the father of Clara Kimball Young, who owns Fun-Art Films, Inc.

NEW COMEDY COMPANY AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

The latest addition to the directing force at Universal City is Edwin Frazee, well-known producer of comedies, who will direct two-reel subjects. Frazee is the director of a number of successful Keystone comedies, including "Crooked to the End," "The Village Vampire," "An Oily Scoundrel," "Bathtub Perils," "Love Will Conquer" and "A Favorite Fool," in which Eddie Foy and the Seven Little Foys were starred. He also produced "Social Pirates" and other comedies for the Fox company.

A new company of players has been organized by Production Manager McRae for Director Frazee. The principal comedian is Stanley Laurel, who recently was one of the featured players at the New York Hippodrome. Rena Rodgers, who has been appearing in Vogue comedies, will play the leading feminine role, and Neal Burns, who is well known through his work in Christie comedies, will be the juvenile man.

Walter Belasco and Lydia Yeamans Titus, both popular Universal players, complete the cast of Frazee's first picture, which is being produced under the working title of "Skidding Hearts."

Mutual Gets Billie Rhodes Comedies

Signs Contract for Forty-one Single-Reel Productions—Releases Weekly, Beginning October 2.

BILLIE RHODES, the dainty little comedienne, comes back in one-reelers on the Mutual release schedule of October 1. The Mutual Film Corporation has just concluded negotiations for a series of 44 one-reel comedies, starring Miss Rhodes, supported by Jay Belasco. They will be released weekly. The first release is issued October 2. The schedule for October includes: Tuesday, October 2, "Some Nurse"; Tuesday, October 9, "Firing Father"; Tuesday, October 16, "For Sweet Charity"; Tuesday, October 23, "And Along Came Mary."

Miss Rhodes scored a distinct success in a series of eight Mutual-Strand comedies released early in the year, and they were so successful from the box-office point of view that John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual, began negotiating to secure another and a longer series of productions of the same type and quality.

Billie Rhodes is just 5 feet tall and weighs a little more than 100 pounds, but the 100 pounds is all fun. She has a faculty of putting over her stuff, of getting the laughs without resort to the ludicrous. A well-balanced cast was selected to appear with her. The productions are in every sense what are known in the language of the trade "society comedies." There wasn't a slapstick in the studio. They quite disapprove of the old theory of motion picture comedy that pie throwing was essential to put comedy across.

Miss Rhodes began her stage career on the Orpheum circuit in San Francisco. She was a soubrette in "Babes in Toyland" and broke into pictures in dramas for Kalem. She has appeared in "His Yodel Wife," "A Gay Deceiver," and "Hubby's Flirting Way."

IVAN PRODUCTIONS GOING STRONG.

M. & R. Feature Film Company, of San Francisco; Herman Rifkin, of Boston; Unity Photoplay Corporation, of Chicago; Owl Features, Inc., Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, Ky.; Super Film Attractions, of Syracuse, and Super [illegible] on "One Law for Both" and "Babbling Tongues." So satisfactory have been the results of these two productions wherever they played, that quite a few of the above mentioned have placed running orders for every production released by the Ivan people for the next six months.

E. H. Hulsey, who owns a large chain of theaters in Texas, and who is one of the big figures in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has just purchased "Babbling Tongues" and is going to head with this production his exploitation plan in his territory.

The Pioneer Film Company, of Wichita, Kansas, is going to handle all of Ivan Film Company's super productions in their territory, and arrangements have just been concluded with the True Features Film Company, of Texas, to handle "One Law for Both" and "Babbling Tongues" in Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana.

The Ivan Film Productions, greatly encouraged by the results attained in the past year under the management of I. E. Chadwick, at the conclusion of his late trip, have practically decided to almost double their output in the coming year.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG FILMING "SHIRLEY KAYE."

Clara Kimball Young, who has just completed "Magda," her first production by her own organization under the management of Harry I. Garson, has already started work on "Shirley Kaye," which will be her second release. Joseph Kaufman, who has just completed Billie Burke's new picture "Arms and the Girl" will direct Miss Young, instead of Emile Chautard, who is busily engaged on the picture now being made by Mme. Lina Cavalieri.

Corliss Giles has been engaged to play the lead. This will be Mr. Giles' first appearance on any screen, although he is an actor of sterling worth, having played the lead in "Mother Carey's Chickens," Thomas Dixon's "One Woman," and "The Iron Door."

The screen version is particularly adapted to Miss Young's talents, and there is no question but that she will duplicate her former screen successes in "Shirley Kaye." The picture is to be released some time next month.

"THE BEAR FACT" (Selig).

"A Bear Fact," is the title of the Selig comedy in two reels, released in K. E. S. E. service Monday, October 1. The comedy was written and directed by J. A. Richmond and features the players who have won such signal successes in the previous Selig-Hoyt comedies that have been released. The stars include William Fables, James Harris and Amy Dennis. The plot, in brief, had to do with "Box Car Bill" and "Journeying Jim," who steal a bear skin and run amuck. A honey bee works overtime and Bobbie Swift and Dottie Love, ardent spooners, figure in the excitement. There is an exciting motor boat race and an automobile explosion before the picture ends.

TWO SPECIAL GENERAL FILM HERALDS.

The General Film Company has just issued two special editions of the General Film Herald in which announcements are made of the first three 4-reel O. Henry stories and the first four Falcon Features, both of which are being distributed by the General. Complete data is given for the following O. Henry subjects: "The Defeat of the City," "Blind Man's Holiday" and "The Duplicity of Hargraves." The four Falcon Features described are "The Mainspring," by Louis Joseph Vance; "The Martinache Marriage," by Beatrix Demarest Lloyd; "The Stolen Play," by D. F. Whitcomb, and "The Phantom Shot Gun," by Stanley Clisby Arthur.

HARRY CAREY IN "THE SECRET MAN."

Harry Carey is the star of the Butterfly picture scheduled for release October 1. "The Secret Man" is the title of Carey's starring vehicle and gives promise of being by long odds the most popular feature in which he has yet appeared on the Butterfly program.

Romance and mystery are happily blended in the story, which details one of the most varied chapters in the career of Cheyenne Harry. The likable road agent is serving a term in the Arizona penitentiary on a charge that he believed is unjust, so he takes the first opportunity to escape via the refuse-wagon, and before his absence has been discovered, boards a transcontinental flier and hides himself in the compartment which has been reserved by Henry Beaufort, a young Easterner on the way to his uncle's ranch near the Mexican border. Beaufort has been secretly married to Molly Harris, the sister of the local sheriff, during a previous visit, and their child is being cared for by a family of Mexicans, who are continually pressing Molly for more money. Cheyenne Harry sees a letter from Molly, together with her picture, among Beaufort's effects in the Pullman. He has hardly put them down when Beaufort enters and after one glance covers the outlaw with a revolver. After hearing Harry's narrative, however, Beaufort gives him a change of clothes and helps him to leave the train in safety. Harry soon finds work on a ranch not far from Beaufort's destination, but his identity is discovered by a clever sleuthhound of the law, and he is forced to take to the trail. The opportunity soon arises for him to return Beaufort's kindness, and it is not overstating the matter to say that he rises nobly to the occasion. Carey is cleverly supported by Edith Sterling, Vester Pegg, Elizabeth Janes and other Butterfly favorites. George Hively wrote the script, which has been excellently produced by Jack Ford.

Olive Thomas Leads Triangle

Walt Whitman in "The Tar Heel Warrior" Also Among Releases for Week of December 30.

A MODERNIZED variation of the cactus-bandit theme and a very human drama of Southern aristocracy are the features of the Triangle program for September 30, with Olive Thomas and Walt Whitman as the headliners. The first release, "Broadway, Arizona," blazes a trail from the Gay White Way to the Western desert, along which Olive Thomas travels as a New York musical comedy star abducted by a wealthy cattleman whose pride has been injured by her press agent a year previous, when he was doing the town. Resenting the exploitation of his name to further the publicity of her Broadway show, his determined love leads him back to the metropolis when news of her failing health reaches the ranch, and by a clever ruse, he steals the girl from her hotel in broad daylight. Ont in Arizona, she regains her strength while detectives follow the trail. The discovery of her hiding place, and her surprising confession, give the story a satisfying climax. Miss Thomas, as the actress, alternates between the tinsel of the Eastern footlights and the becoming Indian garb of the ranch. She is supported by George Chesebro as the cattleman-kidnapper and George Hernandez, the eccentric foreman.

Walt Whitman portrays the dignity and honor of a true gentleman of the South in the second Triangle release, "The Tar Heel Warrior." The story carries Col. Dabney Mills, an old Southern planter whose estate is burdened with debt, to New York in search of urgently needed funds. Circumstances make him the custodian of funds belonging to his granddaughter's husband, a broker, whose guest he is, and, by playing a losing game on the cotton exchange, he unintentionally violates his trust. Child-like in his simple conception of honor, he returns South to expiate the crime. Timely events halt his plan and consummate a little romance which is woven into the tale. Ann Kroman and Dorcas Matthews are members of the supporting cast.

An Oriental comedy, featuring Bobby Vernon, Gloria Swanson, Joe Callahan and the Keystone beauties, is the new Keystone offering. It is called "The Sultan's Wife."

The one-reel Triangle comedies of the week are "His Saving Grace" and "Caught in the End."

Rothapfel's New Theater Opens in December

Rialto's Managing Director Announces Plans for 2,500-Seat House on Broadway.

S. L. ROTHAPFEL, managing director of the Rialto theater, New York, announces that his new theater at Broadway and Forty-ninth street, New York, is scheduled to open about the middle of December. The new theater, like the Rialto, will be under the personal supervision of Mr. Rothapfel, and the Rothapfel idea will be carried to its "ninth" degree in the new house. It is promised that the new amusement palace will be a revelation in the matter of beauty, luxurious appointments, and novel illuminating effects. Mr. Rothapfel stated that the new house would be operated in conjunction with the Rialto without affecting the latter institution any way.

Music will assume an even more important part in the new theater than it has on Mr. Rothapfel's program in the past, and once a week the orchestra of the new house will be combined with the Rialto orchestra to form the Rothapfel Symphony Orchestra of one hundred pieces.

The new theater will contain no stores and no offices other than the executive offices of the theater itself. The Broadway facade will be a stately colonnade of white stone, patterned after the Parthenon at Athens. The interior will be of classic design, decorated and illuminated according to Mr. Rothapfel's own specifications. The seating capacity will be approximately 2,500. The theater is being built for G. M. Heckscher, Jr., by Russell B. Smith and R. H. Hall, who built the Rialto.

BUSHMAN AND BAYNE BEGIN NEW PRODUCTION.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Metro stars, have gone to central Georgia to begin the production of their forthcoming Metro Super-Feature, "The Voice of Conscience." This photoplay has been written by a Southerner, Finis Fox, author of Mabel Taliaferro's Metro wonderplay, "The Jury of Fate," and Mr. Fox has accompanied the stars on their trip to the Southland, to help choose the locations of this part of the picture. Edwin Carewe is directing "The Voice of Conscience," which will be produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Metro super-feature studio. Mr. Fox will be Mr. Carewe's co-director in this production. June Mathis has adapted the story for the screen.

Mr. Bushman, who is a native and a resident of Maryland, has long cherished an ambition to mirror the true life of the South in a Metro super-feature, and star, author, and director will work together to this end. Rudolph Bergquist, cameraman, and a corps of assistants have gone to the Southern location to aid in the preparation of the picture.

In "The Voice of Conscience" Francis X. Bushman will have by all ods the most exacting role of his career. It is what is commonly known as a dual role, but a dual role of an entirely new type. Miss Bayne has the part of Elaine Huston, a role which makes strong demands upon her in emotional expression. Mr. Fox wrote the part for Miss Bayne after admiring the remarkable play of expression in her features in "Romeo and Juliet."

EDNA GOODRICH PUTS PEP INTO "QUEEN X."

Miss Edna Goodrich's new Mutual protodrama, "Queen X," released October 1, is a sensationally attractive production from every point of view. Director John B. O'Brien displayed much genius in his selection of the scenes. Miss Goodrich entered into the adventurous spirit of the play quite as though she were well used to underground passageways, smuggler's dens, villainous-looking and slant-eyed orientals and all the elements that go to make up this quick action drama.

Scene from "Queen X" (Mutual).

Miss Goodrich is at her best when she has plenty of chance for action. She made the critics sit up and take notice when she played "Paprika" in "The Runaway." She used the cayenne instead of the paprika and, as a result, this dashing little bit was one of the sensations of the New York state. In "Queen X," Miss Goodrich is living up to her reputation as a peptonizer. She is charming, convincing, thrilling in her dramatic moments, amusing where she lights the labyrinths of crime with a touch of comedy and entirely satisfactory in her general treatment of a difficult topic. Director O'Brien has caught the spirit of the play admirably.

"PARADISE GARDEN" (Metro).

George Gibbs' romantic novel, "Paradise Garden," has been picturized by the Yorke Film Corporation and serves as a starring vehicle for Harold Lockwood for his next appearance in a Metro wonderplay de luxe. The picture bears the same title as the book and will be released October 1.

In the adaptation of the novel for the screen by Fred J. Balshofer and Richard V. Spencer the charm of the tale has been carefully preserved. The central figure of the story is Jerry Benham, who, according to a provision in his father's will, is brought up in the seclusion of a vast estate under the guardianship of Roger Canby without knowledge of the feminine sex and of evil.

Director Fred J. Balshofer has made the story into a seven-reel picture. Mr. Lockwood is cast as Jerry Benham, and his support includes Vera Sisson, Virginia Rappe, Lester Cuneo, William Clifford, G. Sprotto and Catherine Henry.

"The Public Defender" Completed

First of Series of Big Special Screen Productions Announced by Harry Raver, Based on Theme of Equal Rights Before the Law.

THE PUBLIC DEFENDER," the first of a series of big special screen productions, dealing with themes of vital interest to all of the people and treating of problems close to the minds of the masses, announced for presentation by Scene from "The Public Defender."

Harry Raver, has been completed and is now ready for the market.

Aside from the fact that "The Public Defender" is built on a basic idea of momentous interest to all humanity—equal rights before the law—and that its cast contains the names of three great stars, in the persons of Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon and Robert Edeson, artists whose names have a real significance at that unerring indicator of popularity, the box office, it presents a story of genuinely strong entertainment values.

"The Public Defender" is a forceful drama, based on the conflict between the opposing forces of right and wrong, founded on the book of the same name by Mayer C. Goldman. Back of the countless big situations, direct heart appeal and wealth of human interest looms a tremendous idea, a plea for justice.

That the theory advanced so eloquently in "The Public Defender," which declares effectually that every municipality possessing a public prosecutor should elect or appoint a corresponding public official whose mental equipment and legal attainments equal the qualifications of the former is sound and of practical value is acknowledged in the success of the nineteen "Public Defenders" established recently in various cities of the United States.

It is interesting to note the effect that theatrical attractions in the form of stage plays and screen productions have had on movements affecting the public welfare, from ante bellum days, when "Uncle Tom's Cabin" started the wave of sentiment which figured materially in bringing on the Civil War and abolishing slavery, down to more recent times, when such plays as "Within the Law" are noted as directly responsible for the betterment of conditions under which department store workers are employed.

The creation of the office of a "Public Defender," as outlined in the visual story presented by Harry Raver, is held by many eminent jurists to be absolutely essential to the proper and fair administration of justice. The idea also has the unqualified indorsement of over 2,000 newspapers and magazines throughout the country, having been editorially commended by such influential metropolitan dailies as the New York Tribune, the Mail, the Globe, and the Herald.

A glance at the cast of "The Public Defender," which was directed by Burton King, who produced many successful pictures in which Petrova and other players of equal note have been starred, gives ample assurance that its characters are portrayed by actors of unquestioned ability. In addition to Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon and Robert Edeson, players of the highest standing are intrusted with the principal roles, such as John Sainpolis and Florence Short, whose past performances on the stage and screen have stamped them as artists entitled to a place in the front ranks of their profession.

ETHEL BARRYMORE ON NEW PRODUCTION.

Motion picture rights to Sidney McCall's novel, "Red Horse Hill," published by Little, Brown & Co., have been acquired by Metro Pictures Corporation for the use of the celebrated star, Ethel Barrymore, and Miss Barrymore will begin work at once on the production of a multiple-reel photodrama based on the story. Mary Murillo has adapted the novel for Miss Barrymore's use, and Frank Reicher, one of the most successful directors of the present day, has been engaged to direct the star in her new production. He will be assisted by J. J. Dunne. The picture will be made under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Metro studio.

Miss Barrymore will have the part of Maris Alden, a young woman of strong character and splendid attainments. Frank Mills will play the part opposite her, that of Dwight Alden. J. W. Johnston will have the important part of Winch. Margaret McQuade has the part of Kate, "the other woman"

"Red Horse Hill" provides Miss Barrymore with a superb story rich in possibilities, and star and director may be counted on to make the most of the opportunities offered.

Strong Bluebirds Coming

Future List Shows Subjects and Stars Up to October 29.

BLUEBIRD directors have been supplied with an abundance of future material drawn from printed works and stories especially written for the individual stars. Particular care has been taken to provide Bluebird's newest stars, Mae Murray and Carmel Myers, soon to be presented on the program, with fitting vehicles for their introduction to the series.

Franklyn Farnum's appearance on Oct. 8 in "Anything Once" will be followed by "The Winged Mystery," which Director Joseph De Grasse is now producing. Rosemary Theby will play opposite Mr. Farnum, and Claire Du Brey, who is his leading lady in "Anything Once," will also have a prominent supporting role. O. D. Stuart is the author of "The Winged Mystery," with William Parker furnishing the scenario.

Herbert Rawlinson, who appears in "Flirting With Death" Sept. 24, is now busying himself under the direction of Elmer Clifton in preparing "The Flash of Fate," in which Mary MacDonald will be his leading lady, with Jack Nelson, Frank McQuarrie, Dana Ong, Madge Kirby, and Willis Marks in his support. The story was written by James W. Atchison, and was prepared for the screen by Waldemar Young.

When Carmel Myers makes her Bluebird debut Nov. 11 in "The Dynast," she will have Kenneth Harlan as her leading man, with Harry Solter responsible for J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton's story. This work having been completed, Mr. Solter has turned his attention to "One Clear Call," a story by Larry Evans, prepared for the screen by Harvey Gates. Miss Myers' leading man will again be Mr. Harlan, with Howard Crampton, Fred Schilling, Allen Sears, and Sydney Dean prominent in her support.

Mae Murray's introduction to the program having been arranged for in the completed production of "The Princess Virtue," to be distributed Nov. 5, Director Robert Leonard has put his own story into work under the title of "Face Value." The company now busy on the production includes Wheeler Oakman, leading man; Casson Ferguson, Katherine Griffith, Clarissa Selwynne, and Florence Carpenter. Fred Myton prepared the scenario of "Face Value."

Ruth Clifford, who will be starred in Rupert Julian's production of "The Desire of the Moth," to be released Oct. 22, with Monroe Salisbury, her new leading man, will next appear among Bluebirds as star of "The Savage," another Julian production made from a story and scenario by Elliott J. Clawson. Allen Sears, Arthur Travers, and Caroline Moore are principals in the support.

Dorothy Phillips, scheduled for her regular appearance on the program Oct. 15 in "Bondage," an Ida May Park production, is now busy on "Heart's Blood," written by Elaine Sterne, and prepared for her own direction by Miss Park. Miss Sterne wrote "Heart's Blood" under a direct commission to supply Miss Phillips with a vehicle suited to display her wide range of dramatic expression, and Ida May Park and Miss Phillips, herself, are expected to do the needful.

Violet Mersereau's appearance in "The Girl by the Roadside" has been scheduled for Oct. 29, and Director Theodore Marston is now selecting another work to be taken up forthwith at Bluebird's Leonia, N. J., studios. Varick Vanardy's "best seller" was screened for Bluebird executives last Thursday. Robert F. Hill, assistant director; Allen Edwards, Cecil Owen, and Ann Andrews are Miss Mersereau's principal supporters in "The Girl by the Roadside."

AMERICAN SOLDIERS PARADE LONDON STREETS.

If there be any pessimists among us who doubt the power of the United States to wield a decisive blow in the world war, their doubts will be dispelled when they see No. 143 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, which has its initial showing Sept. 26. One subject in this issue pictures the parade of American soldiers through the streets of London, where they are reviewed by the King and Queen, members of Parliament, and thousands of enthusiastic Britishers. Stranger sights may yet be seen, however, and with the utmost confidence the Gaumont Company promises its patrons that, if the Kaiser will only fight long enough, the Mutual Weekly will yet show victorious American troops parading the streets of Berlin. A scene showing King George saluting the Stars and Stripes is vivid proof that at last the two great nations with one tongue are allies indeed!

Another subject in this issue causes especial regret that, because of certain complications, Gaumont pictures are not now being exhibited in Germany. For, at Atlantic City, American business men representing a capital of twenty billion dollars—count them!—pledge their entire resources for the successful prosecution of the war.

TANGUAY PICTURE MAKES VAUDEVILLE JEALOUS.

Among the early releases on the Select Pictures list is "The Wild Girl," the picture in which Eva Tanguay is presented for the first time on the screen. On account of Miss Tanguay's enormous popularity as a vaudeville star, the Select Pictures' branches are being swamped with inquiries regarding the release of this new feature.

Harry Weber, who has been largely responsible for the remarkable showing which Eva Tanguay has made as a vaudeville attraction, is highly pleased over the splendid prospect for Scene from "The Wild Girl" (Selznick).

Tanguay's first picture. He is, however, in something of a dilemma, as the proprietors of vaudeville theaters feel that Eva Tanguay almost belongs to them and they are highly jealous of their eccentric star's popularity. They do not view with equanimity the loss of the "cyclonic comedienne" to the fans of filmdom. It is understood that Miss Tanguay, in order to allay their uneasiness has consented to sign a contract forbidding her from making any other moving pictures until the conclusion of her forthcoming vaudeville tour, for which Miss Tanguay has been preparing what promises to be the most satisfying act she has yet brought to the "two-a-day."

"ARMS AND THE GIRL" WITH BILLIE BURKE.

Plays and pictures dealing with the present great conflict are naturally of exceptional interest, because, generally speaking, nearly everything nowadays centers or hinges upon the war in one way or another. Thus "Arms and the Girl," in which Billie Burke will appear October 8, is a Paramount picture calculated to please the great majority of those who attend the photoplay. Even without the delightful personality of Miss Scene from "Arms and the Girl" (Paramount).

Burke it would still be a powerful, gripping story, as was proved when it was first shown in stage form on Broadway a few seasons ago. The support is wholly adequate, and includes Thomas Meighan in the role of Wilfred Ferrers; Louis Bates as the spy; Malcolm Dunn as Eugene; Geo. S. Trimble as the German general—a characterization, by the way, which is said to be remarkable in its fidelity; A. Bower, William David, Harry Lee and others.

Pathe Program

Frederick Warde, Mollie King, Pearl White and Harold Lloyd Featured for the Week of October 7.

FREDERICK WARDE, the famous actor; Mollie King, one of the most beautiful and talented girls on the screen; Pearl White, the greatest serial drawing card; and Harold Lloyd, as Lonesome Luke, one of the two most popular comedians, are the box-office stars on the Pathe program for the week of October 7.

Frederick Warde appears in "The Heart of Ezra Greer," a five-reel Gold Rooster play produced by Thanhouser, written by Phliip Lonergan and directed by Emile Chautard. "The Heart of Ezra Greer" is a story of today, full of interest, suspense and surprise. Frederick Warde has the title role, that of a kindly old valet, whose one treasure is his pretty daughter. The splendid cast includes the following well-known players: Leila Frost, as the pretty daughter; George Froth, as Jack Denbeigh, the wealthy student; Carey Hastings, as Denbeigh's housekeeper; Thomas A. Curran, as his guardian; Lillian Mueller, as Amy Devers, known on Broadway as "The Baby Vamp"; Helen Badgley, as a poor little girl; and Gerald Badgley, as the millionaire's baby.

Mollie King stars in the fourth episode of "The Seven Pearls" serial, entitled "Amid the Clouds," with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary. It is in two reels and was produced by the Astra Film Corporation.

The most thrilling feature of this chapter in which thrills abound is the chase of an airship by an aeroplane. Ilma (Mollie King) is being swiftly carried to her death in the balloon. Harry (Creighton Hale) rushes to her rescue in a dirigible, but Perry (Leon Bary) reaches her first in his swifter hydroplane.

Pearl White is seen in the fourteenth chapter of "The Fatal Ring," entitled "The Painted Safe," a two-reel serial episode produced by Astra Film Corporation under the direction of George B. Seitz, scenario by Bertram Milhauser and story by Fred Jackson.

This chapter is a thriller, in which Pearl is thrown inside the paddle wheel of a ferryboat, while Tom (Henry Gsell) and the Spider are pitched into the water. Pearl is saved by Tom's quick thinking and rapid acting.

Harold Lloyd is seen as Lonesome Luke in "Birds of a Feather," a two-reel comedy produced by Rolin. This is a great comedy, with Harold Lloyd as Lonesome Luke, heir to a cool million; Harry Pollard as his partner (nothing escapes him); Bebe Daniels, as "Dimples," known as "The Angel of Hottentot Hollow," where Luke first introduced the ham to the egg and a limousine creates more interest than a dog fight on a glass roof.

"Big Bear Lake" is a split-reel scenic produced by B. E. Loper, Jr. This subtitle gives a good idea as to the kind of picture it is: "For whatever ails you; fish, one basketful; contentment, one soulful; scenery, two eyesful; recollection, one memoryful. Get it at Big Bear Lake and take it as often as necessary.—Dr. Attaboy."

"St. Mary's Lake," Glacier National Park, is the other half of this split reel produced by Ralph Earle. This is another fine scenic of the series showing our national parks. It is well worth seeing.

An International cartoon and scenic split-reel subject and Hearst-Pathe News No. 82 and No. 83 complete a strong program.

"THE TROUBLE BUSTER" VIVIAN MARTIN'S NEXT.

Vivian Martin's next picture following "The Sunset Trail," which is a September 17 Paramount release, will be "The Trouble Buster," and the scenario was written by Gardner Hunting from a story by Mr. Hunting and Tom Forman, the well-known actor who appeared in many pictures supporting Paramount stars. A cast of well-known plaeyrs supports Miss Martin in "The Trouble Buster." Included in the list are James Neill, Paul Willis, Chas. West, Louise Harris, Mary Mersch, and Vera Lewis.

A SOLDIER BOY SINGS

"I want tobacco just as much as bandages and socks,
So drop your contribution in my old tobacco box!"

SEND 25 CENTS, and we will forward a "comfort package" of tobacco to some soldier or sailor at the front—enough to keep him in tobacco for a week. Or SEND $1—it keeps a fighting man happy for a month. Tobacco is the only thing that cheers the soldier boy through the dreary hours in the trenches. He'll probably send you a post card in acknowledgment—a war souvenir you will treasure. Send your "Smokes" at once—he needs them badly. Every cent contributed goes for tobacco for our soldiers and sailors abroad.

World Film Plans Fine Boston Exchange

Wants to Have Its New England Office the Best in the Country—Every Known Convenience Will Be Installed.

By Richard D. Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Contracts have just been closed by the World Film Corporation for the largest film exchange quarters in New England, if not in the United States, to be located in the heart of "Filmland City," as the film exchange center in the Back Bay of Boston is known. A dozen buildings, from No. 145 to No. 161 Pleasant street, will be razed, and on the site will come the corporation's New England film headquarters. Manager George M. A. Fecke has reason to be much elated over the fine location, one of the best in the entire district. Work will be started at once, and it is expected by Manager Fecke that it will be ready for occupancy by December 15.

In discussing his plans, Manager Fecke said to the World correspondent: "I have orders to spare no expense in making the finest film exchange in New England. The plans will be completed within a few days. The general outline of the building calls for our own individual theater, which will be used for the run-offs of our pictures. In every way this theater will meet the comforts of the exhibitors and give them a positive idea of just how the picture will look in their own houses.

"We are building with the idea of handling film as conveniently and expeditiously as possible. Our film, rewind and shipping rooms will be models of the latest inventions for handling film carefully and rapidly. It is a fine tribute to our New England business that President William A. Brady of the World Film has given his orders that 'Boston shall have the best film exchange that money can buy.'".

Manager Fecke is enthusiastic over the reception given the feature film "Rasputin" by the New England exhibitors. Starting the week of Sept. 24, the first showing of the film is at the Boston theater, the big Keith moving picture house and the largest theater in Boston. Mr. Fecke says the film is booked solid for three months. Daily run-offs of the film have been held at the World exchange for the past two weeks for the benefit of New England exhibitors.

David Dow Now Guides Modern Theater in Providence.

Providence, R. I.—The management of the new Modern theater in Providence, R. I., is now in the hands of David Dow, who so successfully exploited "Civilization" in the New England district. Mr. Dow showed "Civilization" in most of the cities and towns of New England. The Modern theater is one of the best in Rhode Island.

Rufus D. Marson Out of K-E-S-E.

Boston, Mass.—Rufus D. Marson, one of New England's best-known moving picture men, has resigned his position as manager of the Boston office of the K-E-S-E, and is to devote his energy to the buying and exhibiting of state rights pictures and to the United Theaters Equipment Corporation, of which he is a large owner. Mr. Marson has his eye open now for any big feature picture which may attract the New England public.

Mr. Marson started in the moving picture business in Worcester in 1907 as manager of the Pleasant Street theater. He came to Boston the next year in the George Kleine office, and when that organization became a part of the General Film he joined that concern in one of the first regular film exchanges in New England. He later devoted his time exclusively to the Kleine and K-E-S-E exchanges.

B. N. Moran New K-E-S-E Manager.

Boston, Mass.—B. N. Moran, a native of Vermont and a moving picture man with national experience, will be the successor of Rufus D. Marson as manager of the Boston office of the K-E-S-E at No. 14 Piedmont street. Mr. Moran takes charge of the office on Monday, September 24. Mr. Moran formerly worked as a roadman and special representative of George Kleine in New England. He more recently went to New Orleans and to Dallas, Tex., on commissions by Kleine. He now returns to his home territory to push the K-E-S-E features in this territory.

"Rebecca" Takes Boston.

Boston, Mass.—Mary Pickford has literally "packed them in" again with her latest picture, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." Record receipts were scored at the Modern and Beacon theaters, owned by the same interests, which booked the first run of the film in both its houses the week of Sept. 10 to 17. It is no press agent's "dope" to say that Mary Pickford is the biggest drawing card that Boston theaters have. This is with due respect to all the other great stars. The fact that at all times of the day, even between the hours of 4 to 6 p. m., when most moving picture houses are well-nigh empty, they were waiting in line at the Modern and the Beacon is an indication of Mary's drawing power. "It's the best thing Mary ever did" was the tribute paid to the winsome little movie queen by most of the audience as they came out of the theaters, some with their eyes still tear stained, for Mary, even over the death of her unloving aunt, drew the audience to tears, even as she brought them to laughter in the lighter parts of the piece. Both houses used George Beban in "Lost in Transit" along with the Pickford picture, and it went fine.

Grand Opening of New House at Lowell.

Lowell, Mass.—Harold Lockwood, Ethel Barrymore, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Viola Dana and Anita Stewart have been invited to attend and address the audience at the opening night of the new Strand theater in Lowell, Mass., on the night of Sept. 24. President Louis B. Mayer of the Metro is president of this new theater corporation, and F. James Carroll, formerly with the Poli interests, is the local manager. The theater is a handsome modern structure and seats 1,800 people, all on one floor. The general policy of the Strand and Rialto of New York will be followed in this new house. The opening week's program is: "The Bar Sinister" and Emily Stevens in "The Slacker." Robert Martell, formerly organist at the Modern theater in Boston, will preside at the organ and will be leader of the orchestra of 20 pieces. Many prominent officials, exchange men and exhibitors were invited to the opening.

Rialto in Charge of William White.

Brockton, Mass.—The new manager of the Rialto theater in Brockton, Mass., is William White, formerly a salesman for the Universal. The theater is one of the finest in New England, and with Mr. White's cosmopolitan experience in film handling should be one of the most prosperous.

James Greeko Building in Worcester.

Worcester, Mass.—A new theater is being built in Worcester by James Greeko, owner of the Bijou theater. The new house will seat 800 people and will be across the street from the present house owned by Mr. Greeko. Harry Campbell, of the Goldwyn Pictures, has already signed the Goldwyn pictures for the new house.

Boston Business Notes.

Boston, Mass.—Daniel O'Brien, poster clerk in the General Film Company's Boston office, has just returned from a two weeks' vacation spent in New York City.

Harry Decker, truck driver for the Boston office of the General Film Company, has been presented with a brand new machine with which to transport films to and from the railroad station, by Manager Jefferson D. Levine.

Ernest Warren, head booker for the General, has returned after spending two weeks in New York visiting friends.

A prominent visitor to Boston last week was Alfred Couture of Manchester, N. H., owner of the Crown theater in that city, the Scenic theater in Rochester, N. H., and an active worker in the New Hampshire branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. While in town Mr. Couture dropped in on Manager L. A. Watrous of the local Vitagraph exchange and signed up a contract for the new Greater Vitagraph serial, "The Fighting Trail."

Boston, Mass.—General Manager David E. Dow of the New England Film Distributors, Inc., of Boston, has been touring New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine, booking "Civilization" and "Somewhere in Georgia." He had excellent success and secured a record number of bookings. While on the road his efficient assistant, Miss Marion Naiherseg, who has a large acquaintance in New England film circles, looked after the Boston office.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Moncton Imposes New Seat Tax.

MONCTON, N. B.—Exhibitors in Moncton are very indignant over a seat tax of 4 cents each seat which has been imposed by the Moncton city council. This makes the tax 48 cents each year in Moncton, which is excessive, considering the size of the town, and much more in proportion than St. John pays.

F. G. Spencer Takes Two New Theaters.

Wolfville, N. S.—F. G. Spencer has taken over two more theaters in Nova Scotia. On his motor trip through the Annapolis Valley and that part of Nova Scotia, he decided to take over the opera house at Wolfville. A photograph of this theater was lately published in the World. The house seats six hundred people and has been renovated lately. A. E. Mason is the manager. Mr. Mason was well known as the chief operator at the Imperial theater, St. John, N. B.

The second theater is at Hantsport, a small town eight miles from Wolfville, N. S. This makes Mr. Spencer's theaters number eight, with the plans for a new one in St. John still in his mind.

Among Maritime Film Men.

St. John, N. B.—G. A. Margetts makes a trip to Halifax next week to show three episodes of "The Red Ace" and the first of the Alice Howell comedies. He will also have a trade.

"The Red Ace" (Universal serial) is to start soon at the opera house, following the finish of "The Voice on the Wire." "The Gray Ghost" follows "Gloria's Romance."

"Womanhood played for two days to splendid capacity houses at the Imperial theater. The streets were lined with people waiting their turn at the night show.

The Star theater, A. B. Farmer, manager, soon starts the Pathe serial, "The Neglected Wife."

"The Fatal Ring" started off with a great audience at the Unique theater. The Arlington orchestra is making things bright and lively at this cozy little house with tuneful popular music.

St. John, N. B.—J. E. Breadon of the General Film exchange is back from a trip to the Sydneys. He finds business quite quiet owing to the hot weather. However, he booked "The American Girl" at the Khattar theater.

"Tanks in Action" Taken by Stanley Company.

Philadelphia, Pa.—By special arrangement with the War Relief Fund, of which W. K. Vanderbilt is president, the Stanley company has secured the exclusive rights in Philadelphia for the presentation of the remarkable war films, "Tanks in Action," issued by authority of the British Government. They are authentic scenes taken on the battlefield. The rental paid for this privilege by the Palace theater, where the features will be shown next week, goes to the relief fund for the aid of the war victims and sufferers.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Benjamin Seligiman, widely known theater manager, has returned from Baltimore, where he was directing the destinies of the Lyric theater.

What Film Men Are Doing—Features and Programs at Leading Theaters—Business Notes of Interest to the Trade.

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—W. F. Yonker has assumed the management of the Fifty-sixth Street theater during the coming season. A particular feature will be the projection. The most competent and efficient projection men have been secured to operate the up-to-date motion picture machines, and very little complaint is expected.

Parting Banquet to George Meeker.

Philadelphia, Pa.—In honor of the occasion of George Meeker leaving the World film offices for the West, his friends, brother managers and the local prominent exhibitors arranged a farewell banquet at the Bellevue hotel on Thursday, Sept. 20th. Percy Block, of the General Film Co., Charles Segall of the Apollo and Jay Emanuel of the Park and Jefferson were on the committee in charge of the affair.

C. Schwartz Will Manage Exchange.

Philadelphia, Pa.—C. Schwartz, one of the pioneer exchange men of this city, has been appointed manager of the American Photoplay Company, with offices at 257-261 North 12th street. He announces that they have contracted for the Lillian Walker productions for this territory, and expects to handle only large and extraordinary film productions of merit.

Frank W. Buhler Buys a Home.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Frank W. Buhler, general manager of the Central Market Street Amusement Co., will start on his vacation Sunday, September 7, for a two weeks' well-deserved rest. He intends to go to Marysville in Missouri, where he will visit his mother. Mr. Buhler, whose phenomenal successes have been rapid, is noteworthy from a managerial viewpoint and is shown here standing upon the steps of his new home, a stone mansion in upper Darby, Pa., which he recently purchased.

New House of F. W. Buhler.

J. S. McSween Opens New Offices.

Philadelphia, Pa.—J. S. McSween, formerly manager of the Chestnut street opera house, is back in town, and has opened new offices here. He is controlling the bookings on D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" and the "Birth of a Nation," two well known productions, which were accorded a wonderful reception here last year. The first return engagement has been arranged with Frank W. Buhler, manager of the Central Market Street Amusement Company, who will make the first showing of "Intolerance" at his Victoria theater during the early part of October.

Prizes Offered for Best Essay.

Philadelphia, Pa.—William Fox is offering prizes of $500 to be distributed in five awards of $100 each, for the best written reviews on "Jack and the Beanstalk," billed for the Arcadia for two weeks, beginning October 1. Any boy or girl under fourteen years of age is eligible, and is invited to compete in the contest, which begins with the announcement in the newspapers. The reviews are to be sent to the Fox Kiddies Editor, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York city.

Italian War Films Go to Capital City.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The week of Sept. 17th will be the last for the showing of the Italian War Pictures at the Garrick theater. It has been long since a war film has aroused such tremendous interest. There are twelve reels in the showing of "The Italian Battlefront," and they are all of surpassing beauty even when the purpose is so grim. The pictures are really too good to miss. The heroes of the Allies are clearly shown, especially General Cadorna. P. A. Waxman, company manager of the show, announces that the next presentation of this picture will be at the Belasco theater in Washington, D. C. Clement Rizzo and Abe Greenwalt performed their duties of projection engineers to perfection, with their motor driven machines.

Picture Theaters and Programs.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"Parentage," a big seven-reel, out-of-the-ordinary film, presented by Frank J. Zeng, will be the unique offering by the management of the Stanley theater, beginning Sept. 17.

Prefaced by a delightful program the Broadway last week offered "Redemption," the picture which created such a sensation at the Forrest some time ago.

Pauline Frederick will be the star at both the Arcadia and Palace, in the new Paramount picture "Double Crossed."

Elsie Ferguson will make her Philadelphia debut at the Strand in "Barbary Sheep." During the last half of the week Wallace Reid will be seen in "The Hostage."

Alexandra Carlisle will be the feature at the Regent theater this week, in the newest World picture, "Tides of Fate."

"The Honor System" will be the attraction at the Victoria theater next week. This film has been characterized by critics who saw it as "The greatest human story ever told." It was written by Henry C. Warnack of Los Angeles, and it was staged by R. A. Walsh.

Interesting Business Notes of Trade.

Philadelphia, Pa.—R. E. Goldsmith, who recently arrived from the Bluebird exchange in Charlotte, N. C., has been having considerable success booking the K-E-S-E program for A. J. Buck.

Philadelphia, Pa.—P. Elliot J. Goldman of the Bluebird theater recently completed extensive improvements at his pretty house. The auditorium has been artistically decorated and painted and a new lighting system has been installed. His theater is situated in an exclusive residential section, and he supplying a high class motion picture entertainment equal to the taste of his refined clientele.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Earle Fort, of the Sherwood and Baltimore theaters, rejoined the Stanley Booking Company. He considers their service indispensable for his two up-to-date houses. Albert Brown, of the Overbrook theater, is another prominent exhibitor who also has returned.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Allen May, manager of the Bluebird exchange, is meeting with considerable success in booking "Mother O' Mine," an exceptionally splendid feature release which was shown at the Lincoln here, and the Broadway in Camden, N. J., to full houses.

World Film Keeps Tabs on Care of Film

World Film Has Record of Condition of Every Film Sent Out and Gives Prizes to Worthy Operators on Their Showing Every Month.

By Clarence F. Linz, 622 Riggs Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The World Film Corporation's local exchange is relieved of a lot of worry, according to Manager Robert Smeltzer, through the working of a prize scheme designed to lessen the destruction of salable film. The contest, open to the operators in the theaters handling World productions, is a monthly one, operated somewhat as follows:

When an operator enters the contest a card is made out bearing the name of the theater, its location, the name and personal address of the operator, the name of the inspector, etc., and there follow blanks for the name of the picture, play date, and notations as to condition going out, the date returned, the number of days used, and its condition upon being returned. On the back of the card are spaces for the insertion of penalties, there being given 100 points for a proper return. Improper conditions incurring penalties include scratched film, torn sprocket holes, poor splices or patches, oily films, unspliced or unpatched, and condition of rewinding. The first two named are, of course, the most heinous of the offenses, and if covering fifty feet or less there follows a loss of twenty-five points; if the footage is in excess of that amount, the penalty is one hundred points. Where the film comes in unspliced or unpatched, the loss is fifty points, while all other things call for a deduction of five points each.

A forty-page catalogue is furnished to each operator-entrant, showing the premiums offered to winners; operators who can turn back a set of films in exactly the same condition as it was when it left the exchange to go to the theater. There are all sorts of articles of cutlery, pipes, leather goods, sporting goods and toilet articles, jewelry, wearing apparel, linens and silverware for the home, furniture, toys, lodge emblems, kitchenware, tableware, tools and hardware, cut glass, cameras, musical instruments, and whatnot.

The one condition named by the film company is that every winner must have been with the same theater for the entire month. It states that it is necessary for it to make this condition because of the impossibility of otherwise keeping its records clear and correct. This one condition means that if a contestant leaves a theater in the middle of the month, he cannot win in that month, nor can the new man who succeeds him. To win the operator must be with the same theater on the last day of the month as he was on the first day of the same month.

Fifteen hundred points are allowed each month, and operators can take their choice of the articles contained in the catalogue up to the amount of the points awarded them. Deductions are made under the scale of penalties named above, but an operator can win on, say, 25 points, providing no other operator in the same territory has more. The higher score the better the gift, so it behooves the contestant to do his best and get the highest possible award.

The employees of the exchange, from Manager Smeltzer down, are enthusiastic over the scheme, for it saves them all so much work and keeps the films in much better shape. The operators are pleased with being remembered, and the offers serve as an incentive to them to pay more particular attention to the films they handle.

"War As It Really Is" Fills Casino.

Washington, D. C.—"War As It Really Is," at the Casino theater, was the thriller of the week. Staged by Sidney B. Lust, who has state rights to the production, it proved to be one of the best attended productions ever seen at this house. Each evening the floor of the house was well filled with officers of the Army and Navy, anxious to get a view of what has been going on in France; Congressmen and Senators, high officials from all of the Government departments, the representatives in Washington of the foreign governments, in addition to the great mass of people who had heard of the films and were anxious to see them.

The films, actually taken on the battlefields of Europe, created widespread interest, and, according to Mr. Lust, the box office receipts proved their worth. The War Department furnished a gun detail for the week and a field piece, with its crew, was the center of interest outside the theater. These are timely films, and will probably do equally as well wherever shown. They have the endorsement of many of the officials referred to above.

Putting Each Job Up to a Man.

Washington, D. C.—"If there is a broken seat down front, a little paint off the wall, or an electric light globe out of commission somewhere, it's ten to one it will remain unrepaired until there are enough jobs to warrant the hiring for a day or so of a carpenter, a painter or an electrician unless you have someone on the job all the time directly responsible for everything in these lines," said a well known exhibitor to the Moving Picture World correspondent.

This exhibitor was telling the writer how, with a string of theaters, he had found it worth while to put on the permanent payroll a man who is a carpenter and painter, and another who is an operator and electrician.

"These men will be kept busy all of the time," continues this able manager. "For instance, the carpenter will make a round of the houses for the purpose of tightening the chair bolts. It is planned to have him visit each house once in each week. It is his duty to see to it that the backs and seats are always in good condition.

"We intend adding a man who will look after all painting work. It will be up to this employee after we have signed him up to see that no bad spots appear on the walls, and that all paint work is in good shape.

"Our electrician is a very capable man. He is also head operator, and since his appointment he has brought about many reforms that have made for greater efficiency in the booths. He has a checking system that works well. If an operator wants a machine part, carbons, oil, or other parts or equipment or supplies, he goes to the head operator and is supplied, after signing a slip showing that he was given the material asked for. Later, if anything goes wrong the man cannot say that it happened because he had not been furnished with the thing in question.

"Of interest to the exchange managers, he will also look up complaints from the exchanges covering poor handling of films, and see to it that there are no repeats.

"Carrying these men twelve months in the year increases the payroll to a considerable extent, but when it is all said and done they represent a great saving—the proper upkeep of the houses is assured, and in maintaining their attractiveness we do just so much in retaining our patronage."

Many Theaters to be Built at Camp Greene

Five Picture Houses and Vaudeville Theaters Are Planned—Will Make a Miniature White City—Houses to Seat 3,000 Persons.

By D. M. Bain, Wilmingfon, N. C.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—No less than five motion picture and vaudeville theaters are to be built on the outposts of Camp Greene, two miles from the city, within the near future, according to plans of the Charlotte Cantonment Company, a corporation with large capital, in which the Southern Power Company, the local transit and power corporation, is interested, and just recently made public here.

The plans call for a miniature White City, with a midway boasting more than two hundred attractions and concessions, including the five theaters, the majority of which will be for motion pictures. Elaborate preparations are being made for furnishing entertainment for the 40,000 soldiers, who are daily pouring into Camp Greene, and the theaters will be solidly constructed and comfortable houses.

The plans for the building of the miniature carnival city are in the hands of Frank Montgomery, for many years the strongest power in the motion picture game throughout the South, but who gradually succumbed to other large interests, chiefly the Wells and Lynch organizations, who now hold almost all theater properties formerly controlled by Montgomery.

The picture and vaudeville theaters will be built on new plans, originated to meet the new situation which has developed at the southern training camps of providing suitable theaters of inexpensive construction but which will be comfortable and satisfactory. They will be immense structures, one of the buildings planned for this place to have a seating capacity of 3,012; another, 2,512 people; the former 112 by 137 feet auditorium, the latter 90 by 135 feet. Each of the buildings provide space for two ticket sellers; also office and store room. They will be of cheap but substantial frame construction.

F. H. Fleer Sells Broadway Theater.

High Point, N. C.—The Broadway theater, formerly owned by Frank H. Fleer, the chewing gum magnate, has been purchased by Arnold B. Hugg and is being remodeled preparatory to reopening with pictures about October 1. Fleer is interested in several theaters throughout the Piedmont section of North Carolina, and is a partner of Hon. Henry B. Varner in his motion picture business at Lexington, N. C.

Film Salesmen in Wilmington Last Week.

Wilmington, N. C.—Among the film salesmen in the city during the past week were Lee Crandall, of the World Film, Washington; Henry Randall, of the Famous Players Exchange, Washington; U. O. Melvin, of Fox Film Corporation, Washington; O. R. Browne, of Select Pictures Corporation, Washington; and Mr. Livezy, of Pathe Exchange, Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Crandall placed World-Brady Made Features in the Grand theater here, and Mr. Randall closed contracts for Paramount-Artcraft service for the same theater. Mr. Brown also closed several contracts for Select pictures for the Grand while in the city.

Ollie R. Browne Will Cover This Territory.

Raleigh, N. C.—Ollie R. Browne, one of the best-known theater men of the state and junior member of the Aronson & Browne Amusement Enterprises, owners of three of the local theaters, has accepted a position with Select Pictures Washington exchange to cover North Carolina and Virginia territory with the new Clara Kimball Young, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Eva Tanguay and other productions to be marketed through that organization. Mr. Browne is known personally by almost every theater manager in his territory, among whom he stands high, and he will no doubt make the most valuable road man that this new organization could have possibly selected for this particular territory.

E. V. Richards Pays Visit to Percy Wells.

Wilmington, N. C.—E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, in New Orleans, has been spending several days here on business, the guest of Percy W. Wells. Mr. Richards recently attended a meeting of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit held in New York and stopped in Wilmington on his return trip. Eleven years ago Mr. Richards was connected with the local Bijou theater, having come to Wilmington with Messrs. Howard and Wells when they established their theatrical business in Wilmington at that time.

Percy Wells on Business Trip.

Wilmington, N. C.—Mr. Percy W. Wells, president of the North Carolina Exhibitor's League and of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, of this city, left this week for an extended business trip south, touching at Charlotte and Atlanta, and from there to New Orleans, La. He will be accompanied by Mr. E. V. Richards, Jr., of New Orleans, and Mr. Joe Spiegelberg, of Atlanta, Ga.

Frank Harris Gets New Lease Here.

Charlotte, N. C.—Frank Harris, formerly manager of the Amuse-U theater here, has returned to Charlotte and has secured a lease on the property formerly occupied by the Dixon Motor Company, which will be remodeled into a motion picture and vaudeville theater of large seating capacity.

G. R. R. Hunt Will Reopen the Casino.

Gharlotte, N. C.—The building formerly known as the Casino, long unoccupied, is to be renovated and reopened as a first-class picture house with a seating capacity of 1,000 within the next sixty days by George R. R. Hunt, who recently secured a lease on the property .

Exchange Opened for Century Comedies.

Charlotte, N. C.—The Longacre Distributing Corporation has opened an exchange here for the handling of Century comedies throughout North and South Carolina and Virginia, located at 307 West Trade street. E. F. Dardine, manager of the local Universal and Bluebird exchanges, will be in charge of the distribution of this company's comedy productions featuring Alice Howell throughout this territory.

Eltabran Film Company's New Exchange.

Charlotte, N. C.—The latest addition to Charlotte's rapidly growing Film Row is the Eltrabran Film company, recently opened for the handling in adjacent territory of the productions handled by the Atlanta office of R. M. Savini, including "The Garden of Knowledge," "Victory," Chaplins and other productions.

Charlotte, N. C.—Manager R. V. Anderson of the local Pathe exchange reports all booking records broken on "The Fatel Ring," bookings already entered far exceeding even the record breaking business done with "The Iron Claw" up to the same time after release. The Pathe salesmen are now busy closing contracts on the latest Pathe serial, "Seven Pearls," which is also meeting with a warm reception throughout the Carolinas. Manager Anderson is supplementing the work of his two road men by a personal trip to leading cities and towns on his circuit. During his absence the office is in charge of Chief Booker E. E. Heller.

Pittsburghers Enjoy Picnic at Groveton

Film Men Have a Good Time and a Neat Sum Is Realized for the League's Campaigns Against Freak Legislation—Other Notes Worth a Glance.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6104 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The moving picture folk of the Pittsburgh district journeyed to Gazaza Camp, Groveton, Pa., on Sunday, September 16, and staged one of the most successful social gatherings in the annals of the local trade—namely, a big family outing and corn roast. There was an attendance of about three hundred exhibitors and exchangemen, together with their families and friends. Business cares were joyously laid aside, and the day was given over to an excellent program of athletic sports and other lively entertainment provided by the committees.

The feature of the day was a baseball game between picked nines called the McAleers, backed by John McAleer, manager of the Independent exchange, and the Greeles, backed by Harry Greele, manager of the Supreme Photoplay Productions. The Greeles won by a score of 11 to 6. The umpires were Hart, of Beaver Falls, and Bennett, of the Northside.

The athletic events resulted as follows: Exhibitors' 100-yard dash won by Frank Niggel; open 100-yard dash, Michael Ray; exchange managers' 100-yard dash, Harry Greele; women's 60-yard race, Mrs. Albert Greele; baseball throwing, Miss Greta Williams; broad jump, A. Simms; fat men's race, J. Krugh.

Leo F. Levinson Heads Pittsburgh Pathe

Pittsburgh, Pa.—George W. Fuller, manager of the Pittsburgh Pathe exchange for the past year, is being transferred to another office of the same company. He is succeeded here by Leo F. Levison, formerly manager of the Philadelphia office of the Supreme Photoplay Productions and a well-known figure in the trade here. Mr. Levison formerly was twice manager of the World Film branch in this city, and his return to this field after a year's absence is welcomed by a host of friends among the exhibitors and film men.

Although a change in management has been effected, the same efficient sales force remains at the Pathe exchange, namely, F. C. Bonistall, W. J. Fitzpatrick, E. M. Stuve, and J. D. Smith.

J. W. Lowenhaupt Buys Strand.

Washington, Pa.—The Strand theater, Washington, Pa., formerly operated by Wiley Clark, has been purchased by J. Walter Lowenhaupt, representing an Eastern syndicate. The house has been closed for remodeling and the installation of entirely new equipment throughout. It is announced by Mr. Lowenhaupt that the Strand will be conducted along the most up-to-date lines, and will set a high standard in its offerings. Paramount and Artcraft pictures have been contracted for. The house will be under the personal direction of Mr. Lowenhaupt, but it is likely that a local manager will also be employed. Plans are being laid for a formal reopening about October 15.

Phil Selznick Goes to Cleveland.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Phil Selznick, heretofore traveling representative of the Select Pictures Corporation, formerly the Selznick exchange, Seltzer Film Building, Pittsburgh, has been transferred to the staff of the Cleveland office of the same company. Mr. Selznick's home is in Cleveland, and he is glad to return, at the same time regretting to leave the local organization of which he was a popular and efficient member. He is a brother of Lewis J. Selznick, head of the Selznick Productions.

Among prominent houses which have contracted for Select Pictures during the past two weeks are the following: Liberty theater, Wheeling, W. Va., to be opened next month, all the Clara Kimball Young, Norma and Constance Talmage pictures; Temple theater, Oil City, Pa., Norma and Constance Talmage and Clara Kimball Young releases; Columbia theaters, Warren and Erie, Pa., O. A. Potter, manager, "The Lone Wolf" and "The Wild Girl," also the Young and Talmage releases.

Park theater, Franklin, Pa., Park, Moundsville, Pa.; Luna, Sharon, Pa.; Crystal, Braddock, Pa.; Princess, Jeanette, Pa; Penn, Uniontown, Pa.; Lyceum, Kittanning, Pa.; Iris, Vandergrift, Pa.; Majestic, Punxsutawney, Pa., entire output.

Manager Pete Antonopolis, of the Olympic theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, has signed a contract for Clara Kimball Young, Norma and Constance Talmage pictures, twenty-four in all, to be released during the coming year.

Pitt Theater Nearly Ready to Reopen.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—William Moore Patch, managing director of the Pitt theater, Penn avenue and Seventh street, Pittsburgh, states that the work of redecorating the house is going forward rapidly, and that all will be in readiness for opening for the Autumn season on October 1. While the initial offering has not yet been announced, it is planned by Mr. Patch to present only the finest and most spectacular photodramas obtainable this year, and they will be staged in the same lavish manner as during past seasons. The celebrated Pitt symphony orchestra of forty pieces will be retained.

Jefferson Theater Changes Hands.

Punxsutawney, Pa.—The handsome Jefferson theater, Punxsutawney, Pa., which has just undergone a process of remodeling, was purchased last week from James Triest by Cartney & Johnson, a well-known firm of exhibitors. The Jefferson is a spacious theater seating 1,500 persons, and has heretofore been used as a combination house, running road-shows and feature pictures. It is planned to continue the same policy. Cartney & Johnson also conduct the Majestic theater in Punxsutawney, and in their new acquisition will set the same high standard that has made their name popular with the picture fans of their locality.

J. A. McCullough Will Guide Foursquare

Pittsburgh, Pa.—J. A. McCullough, until recently traveling representative for the Goldwyn out of this office, has been appointed manager for the new Foursquare exchange in Pittsburgh. Offices have not yet been opened, but a location will be decided upon in the near future. Mr. McCullough is already securing some nice bookings, he reports.

"Doc" Aronson With Jewel Productions.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—"Doc" Aronson, formerly manager of the downtown Camera-phone theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, is now connected with the local branch of the Jewel Productions as traveling representative. Mr. Aronson has a wide acquaintance among the exhibitors of this section, and his acquisition by the new Jewel exchange is considered a valuable one.

George Moore Will Assist at Mutual Office.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—George Moore, formerly booker at the Independent exchange, Pittsburgh, the local office of the Universal, has become assistant manager of the Mutual in this city. He has been succeeded at the Independent by Kenneth Rapp, formerly assistant booker.

Victoria, B. C., Has a Revival of Business

City Gave Volunteers Almost to Its Last Available Man and Has Suffered Many Losses—Business Was Paralyzed, But Revives.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

VICTORIA, B. C.—The Seattle correspondent for the WORLD took a trip to Victoria, B. C., the latter part of August. He found business for the motion picture theaters in Victoria improving, but with plenty of margin to continue that improvement. When England sent out her urgent call for men at the beginning of the war 15,000 men volunteered from this city of not over 60,000. Victoria is composed largely of families who have come directly from England, and many of these English women went back to the old country when their husbands left for the front. Thus the population of the Canadian city was decreased by nearly one-half. Naturally this hit the theaters very hard, but it was worse when the casualty lists began coming in, and nearly every family in the city put on mourning. The city seemed to live in the horror of the trenches and nobody had the heart to try to lift the pall that hung over them by seeking amusement.

The wonder is that all the theaters did not have to close their doors, and the fact that none of them did reflects credit on the managers. Gradually people got used to reading long casualty lists in which their friends or relatives were reported killed or wounded, and they began to seek relief in amusement. Economically, however, the city was at a dead standstill, and there was very little money to be spent even on motion picture shows. This situation continued until this summer, when Victoria began to feel the benefit of some of the war industries. Shipbuilding, in particular, is furnishing employment to a great many of her people, but her greatest improvement comes probably from the big boost in business conditions in the neighboring city of Vancouver, which, to a large extent, handles Victoria's business interests. This holds true of the motion picture business, as well as of others; for all four of the leading motion picture theaters of Victoria are owned by Vancouver men.

At the Royal Victoria.

At the Royal Victoria I met J. R. Muir, president of the Dominion Exclusives, Ltd., which maintains offices in Vancouver, Calgary, and Winnipeg, to exploit the Fox and Metro service in Western Canada. This firm, together with the People's Theater Company, headed by W. P. Nichols of Vancouver, controls and operates the Royal Victoria, the Dominion, and the Variety of Victoria, the Dominion of Vancouver, and the Dominion and Bijou of Nanaimo.

The Royal Victoria is a splendid detached building of red brick, planned for the largest and best road shows. Only the big, special motion picture features are shown in it, and then only at advanced prices. Its stage is the largest on the Pacific Coast north of San Francisco, and its two huge motor-driven fans insure a plentiful supply of fresh air all the time. E. H. Denham is the manager. "The Ne'er Do Well" has been playing there to full houses recently.

The Dominion Theater.

The Dominion is the largest house in Victoria built exclusively for motion pictures. It seats 900. It is about three blocks away from the Royal Victoria, but both theaters are five or six blocks from Government street, the main business artery of the city. The town seems to be growing in their direction, however. The Dominion is a very attractive buildng of brick and stucco. It uses Fox and Metro service, "The End of the Tour," a Metro picture being the feature of the day. But J. M. Robertson, the manager, told me that the Billie Burke serial, "Gloria's Romance," had been a great help to summer business. Changes are made twice a week, on Mondays and Thursdays, there being no Sunday shows in Victoria. The admission price at the Dominion is 10 cents in the afternoon and 15 cents in the evening, boxes 25 cents. The music is furnished by a pipe-organ.

The Variety Theater.

The Variety is on Government street, but quite far up. It seats 650 and charges 10 and 15 cents, as does the Dominion. Paramount service and an occasional Mutual is used on its screen, Mary Miles Minter being a very good drawing card in Victoria, according to G. Murdoch, the manager. The feature then playing was "The Undying Flame," featuring Madame Petrova. Music is furnished by a six-piece orchestra.

Mr. Murdoch began in the motion picture business in Victoria as an usher and rose to his present position through study and application of advertising methods. When he took charge of the Variety it was going down, but he has made it one of the leading motion picture theaters of the city. He says that he could not get along without the MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

The Columbia.

The Columbia has the best location of any theater in Victoria, being on Government street near Yates. If it were remodeled and redecorated it would give the other theaters which are now more popular a hard race. In this house the chairs are so high that a short person's feet cannot touch the floor, and it is exceedingly uncomfortable. It has a seating capacity of 750. Ten cents is the admission price, and Vitagraph and World service are used. A four-piece orchestra furnishes the music. The theater is owned by W. P. Nichols, of Vancouver, and managed by E. Clark.

The Romano.

The Romano Theater is just a block or two up Government street from the Columbia. It is a ten-cent house, seating 450, and uses Universal, Bluebird, and Butterfly features. W. Brown, of Vancouver, is the owner, and Joe Deluca, the manager. This house did a record business during the summer with the serial, "The Voice on the Wire," and was repeating the success at the time of my visit with "The Gray Ghost." In fact, I was told by all the managers that serials drew unusually well in Victoria, and those houses which had not run them heretofore were considering putting them on. At the same time some of the stars who are considered the very best drawing cards acoss the border are not at all popular in the Canadian city.

The Empress.

A few blocks farther up Government street, but still some distance below the Variety, is the Empress, a five-cent house owned and managed by L. J. Quagliotti.

With business conditions at normal and motion pictures as popular as they should be, Victoria has not too many picture theaters. The past three years of business paralysis in the city have prevented owners keeping their houses in proper repair, —there is not one of the houses devoted exclusively to picture that does not need redecorating badly—but now that better times are coming, they are planning not only to redecorate, but in some cases to remodel them as well. There is one important feature lacking in all the motion picture theaters of the city, i. e., an attractive ladies' rest room. The Dominion has one built for that purpose, but it is neither decorated nor furnished properly All the houses, except the last two described have plenty of space to devote to such a room, and I believe it would pay every owner to fit one up in his house this winter.

Spokane News Letter

"Four Minute Men" Win Applause.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Members of the Spokane brigade of "Four Minute Men" were liberally applauded when they made their initial appearance in Spokane moving picture houses on the night of September 11 and also on the night of September 12. They are to continue their work nightly. The men spoke on "What Our Enemy Really Is." Acting as the mouthpieces of President Wilson during the present crisis and will follow this the latter part of the week with other topics to be sent out from Washington.

They are also appearing in thetaters which run both pictures and a vaudeville program. The theaters visited the first night were: Clemmer, Liberty, Class A, Majestic, Rex, Casion, Lyric and Pantages. W. S. Gilbert, an attorney, is chairman of the Spokane branch of the organization. The men appear about 8 p. m. nightly.

In discussing the work Mr. Gilbert said: "The organization is authorized and backed by the President. The men who will appear will speak on outlines, in general, provided by the government, putting them forth in their own words and presenting them as they see fit.

"We have been provided with slides from Washington which will, in a short score of words, tell the audience who the speaker is going to be, what his topic is, and as this fades out the speaker will step before the audience and launch into his subject. We have our own censors on hand to hear the speeches and to see that the men do not exceed their time limit. We expect them to put personality into their subject."

John Howard Joins Colors.

Spokane, Wash.—John Howard, former newspaper and theatrical man of Wenatchee, who organized the Columbia Theater company, visited Dr. H. S. Clemmer, who is to manage the Wenatchee enterprise additional to his local interests. Mr. Howard has joined the colors, but was permitted a short furlough to come here and arrange some details in connection with the enterprise he has started.

Spokane Newslets.

Spokane, Wash.—L. D. McDonald, manager of the Spokane Motion Picture company, made moving pictures of the Spokane Interstate Fair, which are to be shown in moving picture and vaudeville houses throughout this section. They are to be shown in forty towns. The pictures were made by Charles B. Dreyer, of New York City, under the personal direction of Mr. McDonald.

Spokane, Wash.—Members of the Moving Picture Operators, Local No. 185, won first prize for having the best float in the Spokane Interstate Fair Labor Day parade, September 3. Al G. Hayes was in charge of the float. On the night of the parade they mounted an electric spotlight on the float and, running through the downtown streets, flashed it on the crowds.

Spokane, Wash.—"Joan The Woman" was shown before large audiences in the Clemmer theater.

Buffalo Theaters Aid Patriotic Reviva

'Wake Up America" Campaign Launched With Marked Success—Talks in Picture Theaters by Four Minute Men.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 North Elmwood Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Buffalo moving picture theaters figured prominently in the "Wake Up America" campaign this week. "Four-minute men," whose crisp addresses were only four minutes long, spoke in several of the houses and roused the audiences to the highest pitch of loyalty. Their subject was "Renewed Patriotism." The orchestras played appropriate music, the patriotic and martial kind. The Buffalo celebration is part of a state-wide movement. These sessions in patriotic education grew out of the suggestions at the "Wake Up America" conference this summer at Chautauqua. Patriotic organizations there agreed to keep the people of the nation constantly informed of the war, its aims, their duties and tasks and the work they must be prepared to do when peace comes. In order to drive these facts home to thousands of citizens it was decided to have patriotic addresses at the theaters. Meetings held elsewhere and patriotic parades were other features of the campaign.

Sherry Feature Film Exchange Notes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The office and shipping and poster departments of the William L. Sherry Feature Film, Buffalo, have been enlarged. "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," Artcraft, has played to capacity at the Strand, Buffalo; Strand, Syracuse, and Regent, Rochester. Howard F. Brink, traveling representative of the Buffalo exchange, has signed up the new Liberty theater, Canaseraga, N. Y., with all the stars of the Paramount-Artcraft series. Mr. Brink was recently struck by a taxicab and worked vigorously on the road without knowing that two of his ribs had been broken. When he returned home at the end of the week his family physician made the discovery.

Select Picture Corporation Notes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A. W. Moses, better known to exhibitors as "Archie," is now covering the eastern and northern section of New York state for the Select Pictures corporation. He reports that the exhibitors are all in a happy frame of mind now that they know where they can obtain Norma Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, and Constance Talmadge.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Sherman S. Webster, representative for the Select Pictures corporation, is making a trip through Western New York in his new Overland. He is signing up exhibitors for the new Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge productions. Mr. Webster also reports a heavy business on the "Lone Wolf," "On Trial," "The Whip," "Deempster," "Even As You and I" and the "Barrier."

Buffalo, N. Y.—Charles R. Rogers has been appointed manager of the Select Pictures corporation, Buffalo. The Select has taken over the Selznick exchange. The Buffalo offices of the company are being very beautifully furnished and decorated.

Changes in Pathe Exchange Staff.

Strand at Nashville, Tenn. Again is Bright

Repairs Are Finished Ahead of Time and Theater Opens Earlier Than Expected—Is Resplendent in New Paint and Art Decorations.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Repairs to the Strand theater were completed ahead of the allotted time, and the house opened to the public on Saturday afternoon, September 1, at 4 o'clock. Capacity audiences filled the theater from the opening hour to view "The Car of Chance," a Bluebird subject starring Franklin Farnum.

The Strand is resplendent in its new paint, art pictures, and general tone of attractiveness, and reflects great credit upon Manager Bradford for the capable manner in which he has handled the renovating work.

The walls in both auditorium and corridor are finished in white and gold, with a strip of black and white art characters running around the upper section. A heavy velvet carpet the length of the large center isle is a feature which has greatly improved the effectiveness of the interior arrangement. Linen seat covers have been provided all seats in the auditorium. The ventilation of the Strand is very good, the house being cooled during the warm season by a number of ceiling fans, augmented by a battery of wall buzzers on each side. The lighting system is splendid, employing both the overhead indirect lighting and shaded wall lights to furnish the necessary illumination.

The ticket booth has been moved from the back portion of the corridor to the front, within a few feet of the pavement. The manager's office is located where the ticket booth was formerly placed, and the space occupied by the old booth proper is Power projection machines were ordered power projection machines were ordered for the opening day, but were delayed in reaching the city. The new screen has been installed which adds much to the clear projection of the pictures. Music is furnished under the direction of Leon Cole, who is assisted at times by a full orchestra. Mr. Cole came to Nashville from a Chattanooga house.

The Greater Vitagraph features form one of the important parts of the program service instituted by the Strand.

Advantages of News Reel Between Acts

Nashville, Tenn.—Vaudeville houses in this section have found the news weekly the most practical film service to be used before and between the vaudeville acts by reason of the fact that in the projection of a news picture, each subject is of only a few minutes duration, and in the period before the show, as well as during the intermission, the spectator arriving while the pictures are being thrown on the screen may immediately pick up the thread of the story without being disturbed by the audience's passing in and out. A number of theaters in this territory have employed this method with success, substituting this class of film service in many instances for single reel comedies or travalogues. Managers have adapted their release dates to conform with the semi-weekly change in the vaudeville programme, i. e., providing a reel both the first and middle of the week.

Sudekum Entertains Artillerymen.

Nashville, Tenn.—Members of Battery E. Headquarters and Supply Companies of the First Tennessee Field Artillery, were accorded a cordial farewell entertainment Saturday night, September 8, by Manager Harry Sudekum of the Princess theater. This courtesy was extended to the men of the local battery through the desire on the part of Manager Sudekum to express his appreciation of their continued patronage in a substantial manner and also out of a spirit of patriotism in giving the boys a pleasant send-off on their journey to Berlin, via Greenville, S. C., and France. The men marched into the Princess for the second night show where seats had been reserved for them by the management. Needless to say, the occasion was much enjoyed and Manager Sudekum received many grateful thanks at the hands of the big gun men.

Memphis Orpheum Opens Season.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Orpheum theater began its fall season on August 27, under the management of Arthur Lane, who has had active supervision of the house for a number of years. The Orpheum is controlled by the vaudeville circuit of the same name and operates as a combination picture and vaudeville house. The interior of the building has been made attractive through the means of new paint, upholstering, and draperies, and the house as a whole has an appearance of being ready to handle some big business during the fall and winter months.

Many Film Men Visit Metro.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The past two weeks has found a continual stream of exhibitors coming to and from the Chattanooga Metro offices. This city being in a central line between Atlanta and the northern exchange centers, a large number of theater managers have found it to their advantage to stop off in the Mountain City for their Metro bookings.

Dayton News Letter

By Paul J. Gray, Alhambra Theater Bldg., Dayton, O.

Benefit for Airmen at Dayton's Majestic.

DAYTON, O.—Dayton is the site of the Government aviation field. The camp has been opened about three months and is daily turning out aviators for Uncle Sam. Only recently the boys decided that a library pertaining to the science of aviation was needed. A committee was therefore elected from members of the 47th Areo Squadron. The committee decided on a benefit performance at one of Dayton's theaters. Through the courtesy of the management of the Majestic theater, which has been closed for repairs, they obtained the house for four days. No charge was made for the use of the house. Gil Burrowes, manager of the Auditorium, rendered his services in that he booked the Pathe feature, "War and the Women," for them at a very low figure. Sergeant C. J. Brodeur was largely responsible for the success of the evening, he being general manager of the entire affair, and it was due to his labors that the affairs went over. Sergeant Brodeur has made quite a name for himself in the world of aviation and it was he who granted Miss Ruth Law, the famous aviatrix, the right to use his famous aviation "Tonic," two double loop the loops. Sergeant Broduer claims "One Drop" of this will kill anybody.

Strike at Keith's Settled.

Dayton, O.—A settlement of the strike which has been in effect at B. F. Keith's theater has been effected and the contract between the striking men and the management was signed Sept. 16.

Organ at the Mecca Remodeled.

Dayton, O.—Taking advantage of the summer season being in progress the Mecca theater is having its Seeburg organ entirely remodeled for the winter season. The Mecca is one of Dayton's representative theaters and is one of the few exclusive neighborhood houses here. Mr. Kraft manages the house, which seats six hundred.

Homer V. Guy Will Conduct Majesitc.

Dayton, O.—The Majestic theater will reopen with the management in the hands of one of Dayton's most popular theatrical men, Homer V. Guy, who managed the Orpheum and also the Dreamland. The policy of the house will be first run states' right features and the opening is eagerly welcomed by Daytonians, as the Majestic before closing was one of Dayton's most popular theaters.

C. E. King Buys Johnsonia Theater.

Leesburg, Ohio.—The Johnsonia theater, Leesburg, Ohio, a house opened in 1911, has been recently purchased by C. E. King, who is installing new service and up-to-date methods. Paramount, Triangle and Mutual programs are being used with success, and Mr. King promises his patrons the best of service. King is not altogether new to the business, having been allied with the motion pictures for several years in various capacities. He has achieved encouraging success as an author and believes it possible to successfully ally both ends of the business, namely, the idea, or beginning, and the picture, or finished product. King says he has faith in three things as being essential to success: Good pictures, good service and the Moving Picture World.

Dayton, O.—The Columbia theater, which runs part of the Artcraft productions in Dayton, presented Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" to such large houses that Manager Gross found it necessary to obtain the picture for a return date within the next two weeks.

Louisville Theaters Face Sunday Closing

Warrants Are Issued Against Two Theaters and Many Shops—Object Is Solely to Test Validity of Blue Law—Higher Courts Will Uphold Law.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—For the first time in many years the Louisville theaters are confronted with Sunday closing troubles, warrants having been taken out against the management of the B. F. Keith vaudeville house, and the West Broadway theater. These warrants are of a friendly nature, however, and are filed to test the validity of the old Blue Laws under which the barber shops were closed some time ago through efforts of a few barbers who didn't want to work on Sunday. Since that time a row broke out among the tire dealers and auto accessory houses, a few being in favor of closing, while others have fought closing.

Warrants have been filed against all tire and accessory houses which stayed open, and these chaps have been unable to get the cases out of the hands of the magistrates and have retaliated by filing warrants against operators of drug stores, theaters, bakeries, confectioneries, and other organizations which operate on Sunday, feeling certain that some of the cases will be fought through to a higher court in some way or another. Unless the cases can be got out of the magistrates' courts merely a series of fines will be imposed every Sunday the old laws are violated. The backers of the present movement expect to carry the cases to the upper courts, if possible, and settle once and for all the status of the old Blue Laws.

Upper Courts Will Uphold Laws.

However, if the cases are carried to the upper courts there is no doubt but that these laws will be upheld until they are scratched from the statutes, as the courts have held that they were still valid in other cases. Out in the state cases have been tried relative to the theaters operating on Sunday, and the old laws have been upheld, and the proposition is taking on a dangerous nature. If the reformists get started and campaign to close the theaters in Louisville, through the publicity given to the movement, there is no doubt but what the theaters could be closed until the old law is repealed. If the Louisville theaters were compelled to close on Sunday the theaters in all of the small towns would meet the same fate, and the country town authorities would be quick to follow the lead of the big city, especially as there is much wrangling over the matter, and many of the small towns are not operating as it is.

May Close Up Everything.

Another Sunday fight has been going on for some time among the grocers, and practically all of the groceries are closed, those operating having to appear weekly in the magistrates' courts, and pay small sums, the fines not being made large enough to carry to higher courts. As the case now stands the magistrates are getting some nice rakeoffs, and no one is getting anywhere. It is feared that before the row is settled that things will be closed up so tight that it will be hard to find a newspaper on Sunday.

Jitneys Find Big Audiences in Louisville.

Louisville, Ky.—The Old Casino theater is now operating as a straight nickel picture theater, and is doing business. The Novelty theater, now the Rex, located a half block from the Casino, is also getting along nicely as a five cent house.

Committee Will Distribute Canada's Films

Federal Government of Dominion Appoints Film Men and Others to Show Special Appeal Pictures Through the Provinces.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street East, Toronto.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—The Federal Government of the Dominion of Canada has decided at last to make use of moving pictures as an agency for the dissemination of official information regarding the war, food conservation, war loans and other National details.

An organization to be known as the Moving Picture Distribution Committee has been formed to arrange and conduct matters incidental to the film propagation and this committee will work in conjunction with the Hon. W. J. Hanna, the Canadian Food Controller. The committee is composed of Clair Hague, Toronto, general manager of the Canadian Universal; Jule and J. J. Allen of the Famous Players, Toronto, and W. A. Willison, of Ottawa, son of Sir John Willison, of Toronto, former editor of the Toronto Daily News.

This committee will have charge of the distribution throughout Canada of all films which deal with the conservation of food and other subjects. It has also been intimated that many important plans are under way and the details will be supplied to Canadian exhibitors in due course.

Phil Hazza Heads Winnipeg Bluebird.

Toronto.—Announcement has been made at the Canadian headquarters of the Canadian Universal at Toronto that Phil Hazza has been placed in charge of the Bluebird department of the Universal's Winnipeg branch. Mr. Hazza has just returned from a successful trip in the Canadian Mid-West when he placed several very good contracts.

E. Cronyn to Head Strand and York.

Toronton, Ont.—E. Cronyn, a Toronto broker, is slated to become the president of the company which controls the Strand and York theaters, Toronto, in succession to the late Henry J. Brock of Buffalo. Mr. Cronyn has been the vice-president of the company. There will be no change in the management or personnel of the local houses, it is understood.

Exhibitor Fined After Fire.

Toronto, Ont.—It was rather adding insult to injury when a Toronto moving picture exhibitor was fined in the local police court for having a fire in his house which spoiled his business for two weeks. The manager is G. T. McNally, who has a small theater at 1035 Gerrard street East. On Saturday afternoon, September 1, a fire occurred in the operating booth during the absence of the licensed operator, it is declared. The crowd made its escape easily but the theater was badly damaged. McNally was prosecuted because he took charge of the booth when he was not licensed to do so, the case being pressed by Chief inspector Elliott. McNally, whose hands and face were burned in trying to extinguish the blaze, was fined $20 and costs "as a warning to other exhibitors."

Claims Exhibitor Resold Tax Tickets.

Toronto, Ont.—The prosecution of a well-known Toronto exhibitor on the charge of making illegal use of war tax tickets is another police court case which has been interesting local theater managers. At this writing the case has not been settled. The police declare that they caught this exhibitor with several spotters. It was claimed that the accused resold war tax tickets when they should have been destroyed in the chopper.

Penalize Operator for Intoxication.

Toronto, Ont.—An example has also been made of a Toronto moving picture operator by the suspension of his Provincial license for two months because he was in an intoxicated condition while in charge of a booth. The authorities claimed that he endangered the lives of citizens by his condition. And this in a bone-dry Province!

Globe Films Announces New Films.

Toronto, Ont.—President Cohen of the Globe Films, announces that he has secured the Canadian rights for the Ogden Special, "The Lust of the Ages," in which Lillian Walker is starred. He has also put over another big deal in obtaining the Canadian rights for "The Warrior" from General Enterprises, Inc., of New York and Washington. Mr. Cohen is not stopping at this, however, as he is on the track of several more big productions for the Dominion.

The Globe company is also doing considerable expanding, having opened two more branch offices in Canada. These are at Winnipeg and Calgary. Bert Lubin, formerly with the Metro, has been appointed Western general manager of the Globe with offices at Winnipeg while M. Rose will have charge of the Galgary branch. An office is also to be opened at St. John, N. B., in a few days.

Regal Films Gets "Fall of Romanoffs."

Toronto, Ont.—Regal Films, distributors in Canada for Goldwyn, World and other releases, have contracted for "The Fall of the Romanoffs" for the whole of the Dominion.

Cleveland Exhibitors Reject New Scale

Union's New Demands Considered Too High—Theaters Ask Operators to Reconsider and Submit More Reasonable Scale.

By M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Demands of the Cleveland operators' union for recognition of the new wage scale, which is scheduled to be effective October 1, have been taken up by the exhibitors.

A meeting between the exhibitors' committee and a committee from the union has been held, and the exhibitors rejected the scale and requested the operators to submit a scale without the sharp increases asked for. In other words, the exhibitors were willing to consider a scale which called for a more moderate increase.

The new scale in full follows: All theaters running a daily matinee and evening performance shall pay $40 per week, matinees not to exceed 4 hours and evening performances the same.

(a) All theaters running 10 hours per day shall employ two operators, each working half of the total time and each to receive $25.

(b) All theaters running 12 hours, 2 operators, each $30.

(c) All theaters running 14 hours, 2 operators, each $35.

(d) All theaters running 16 hours, 2 operators, each $40.

Special entertainments for Sundays and holidays, etc., and for shows less than one week shall pay $4 for each performance; said performance not to exceed 4 hours. Setting up machine for these performances shall be charged for at the rate of $3 for each performance. If taken down, the same charge will be made.

All overtime to be paid for at the rate of $1 per hour or fraction thereof. Overtime in connection with theaters running all day and evening shall be computed by adding the total amount of time per week and charged pro rata.

All overtime where said time is not taken to finish a performance and shall be used for rehearsals, trying out film, etc., shall be called broken time and paid for at the rate of $1.50 per hour or fraction thereof.

Two operators working at the same theater at the same time shall receive the same scale as when working alone, except where an assistant operator is required for special entertainment, etc.; and said assistant shall receive 75 cents per hour.

Operators engaged for road work shall receive scale as required by the wage schedule of the International Alliance at the time he is engaged.

Operators shall not be permitted to carry films, banners, posters, etc., to or from theaters or film exchanges either with or without compensation.

Cleveland's Hippodrome Fights Strike.

Cleveland, Ohio.—After just settling a six months' controversy with the Cleveland Plain Dealer, during which this newspaper did not print any advertising for the Hippodrome, Cleveland, the management of that theater is now in the throes of a strike and boycott of musicians and stagehands.

The theater, operated by the Keith interests, refused to pay an increase asked by the musicians of from $35 to $38 a week. The musicians worked two performances a day, afternoons and evenings. The Musicians' Union immediately hired a big truck and with appropriate banners and band of eight pieces drove through the downtown streets. The theater imported musicians from New York and secured a volunteer stage crew, and the shows went on throughout the week.

R. E. Brown in Charge at Columbus.

Columbus, Ohio.—The Columbus General Film has engaged R. E. Brown, formerly with Pathe, to handle its business in that territory. Mr. Brown is well known in Columbus and vicinity and expects to give the exhibitors the very best of service.

More Film Men Certify for Draft.

Cleveland, Ohio.—Among the film men of Ohio who have been certified within the last two weeks for the draft army are Jack Soglovitz, booker in the Cleveland K-E-S-E office; Scott Sultzbaugh, state rights film man; Manager Sennett of the Grand theater; Tiffin and Elmer Rauh, owner of the Auditorium theater, Dayton.

Garson & Gleichman Take Detroit Theater

Broadway-Strand Now Under New Management—Will Be Made More Attractive—Philip Gleichman the Resident Manager.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—After weeks and weeks of negotiation the Broadway-Strand is practically under a new lease to Harry I. Garson, the former managing director, with whom is now affiliated Philip Gleichman, a well-known and progressive pioneer in the film industry. Heretofore the theater was operated by the Broadway-Strand Amusement Co., of which the Stotts were the principal stockholders, Mr. Garson being the managing director, drawing a share of the profits.

Messrs. Garson and Gleichman have taken over the complete stock in the amusement company and have leased the house for a long term of years. Under the new arrangement, Mr. Garson is president of the company and Mr. Gleichman, secretary, treasurer and general manager. It means that Mr. Garson will spend most of his time in New York at the Aeolian Hall building and the studio of the Clara Kimball Young Co., inasmuch as he is now personal manager for Miss Young. Mr. Gleichman will have complete charge d'affaires of the Broadway-Strand theater, bookings, etc.

The coming season promises big things for the Broadway-Strand. First of all, $10,000 is to be spent in making the theater more attractive, enlarging the lobby, new stage setting, etc. It will also have a great array of motion picture talent. More than forty-two Artcraft-Paramount pictures have been contracted for, as previously noted in the WORLD. In addition, and for early showing, the first four William Fox-Standard Pictures have been contracted for.

Mr. Gleichman needs little introduction, despite the fact that he has been out of the film business for a few years. He was one of the incorporators of the Mutul Film. He was one of the organizers of the World Film, and he started the World Comedy Stars, featuring famous comedians in single-reel comedies.

Good luck to Mr. Gleichman, the Broadway-Strand, and, of course, Mr. Garson.

Regent Films and Vaudeville Succeed.

Detroit, Mich.—The new Regent theater policy is working out most successfully. Business the first week was tremendous at all performances, and C. H. Miles will shortly announce some innovations that give promise of increasing the matinee business considerably. "I find that the combination policy of vaudeville and pictures for a big theatre is ideal because where you have the capacity you can crowd your house as your patron is bound to like either the vaudeville or the picture, and he will come back because of the quantity of amusement you can offer him," said Mr. Miles. "People like pictures,—of that I am thoroughly convinced, and the pictures are just as much of a drawing card as the vaudeville." Mr. Miles was the first exhibitor in Michigan to run a continuous policy of vaudeville and pictures with increased admission price. Since he started the policy at the Miles, the Orpheum and now the Regent have followed suit.

Triangle Exchange Doubles Floor Space.

Detroit, Mich.—The Detroit office of Triangle is to increase its floor space 100 per cent. by using the entire sixth floor of the building. The new space will be added as soon as Bluebird, now occupying the other half of the floor, moves into the new film building.

Manager H. W. Pierson is exceedingly pleased over the way contracts are pouring in on the new Hart and Fairbanks reissues. The Majestic in Detroit will play most of them a full week, being the first time that this playhouse has shown anything but first-run features. Leading houses throughout the entire state have signed for them.

Three ex-theatrical advance agents and managers are now connected with the Detroit office of Triangle—Albert Hoogs, Dan Martin and H. Wayne Pierson.

I. J. Schmertz Wins Promotion.

Detroit, Mich.—I. J. Schmertz has been appointed manager of the program department of the Fox Film Corporation in Detroit, succeeding J. M. Erickson, who recently went with Paramount. Mr. Schmertz has been with the Fox organization for a long while in various parts of the country.

Rebuilding Without Interruption.

Ann Arbor, Mich.—S. A. Moran, of the Arcade theater, Ann Arbor, is reconstructing his theatre but it is not interfering with his business. Instead of tearing down anything, he is building right around his present theater, giving him a capacity of 1,000 on the main floor, and later when he installs his baloncy, he will add 400 seats, making a grand total of 1,400.

Mr. Moran engaged in the picture business in 1914—and what he did not know about the picture business would fill an encyclopedia—he says so himself. But he rolled up his sleeves and buckled in—losing money by the bucketful every week. He hung on—improved his shows—found out what the people wanted—and what's the result. His old house was not large enough to take care of the crowds, so he found it necessary to enlarge. When completed the Arcade will be the largest theater in Ann Arbor. Mr. Moran, by the way, is president of the new Michigan branch of the American Exhibitors' Association.

W. D. Ward Now With Pathe.

Detroit, Mich.—W. D. Ward, formerly manager of Unicorn in Detroit, and for many months with the Mutual, has become associated in the sales department of Pathe.

W. H. Arthur Takes Princess Theater

Marshall, Mich.—W. H. Arthur has taken over the Princess in Marshall, Mich., making him the only exhibitor in town, as he also operates the Garden.

Will Cunningham in Charge at Palace

Detroit, Mich.—Will Cunningham, of Chicago, is now in charge of affairs at the Palace theater, Detroit.

Personal Notes Heard in Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—Denver Dixon, the Vitagraph cowboy, is spending a few weeks in Detroit, breaking his jump to New York. He is appearing personally at many theaters showing Vitagraph pictures, and especially those who have contracted for the new Vitagraph serial, "The Fighting Trail."

M. S. Bailey, Peter Smith building, Detroit, the new state representative for Hertner products, has just disposed of a Transverter to the Highland Park and the Grande theaters, Detroit.

John H. Kunsky made a large contribution to the Tobacco Fund for U. S. Soldiers the week ending Sept. 22, during which time he sold copies of his house organ, The Weekly Film News, for one cent each.

Sid Mills, formerly Bluebird salesman, left Sept. 18 for Camp Custer, Battle Creek. The employes presented him with a Masonic pin.

Art Richardson is now covering Northern Ohio for Bluebird.

The Rialto Club, comprising leading exhibitors and exchange men, held a smoker Friday night, Sept. 21. About 300 persons attended.

One orchestra plays for both the Orpheum and new Wuerth theaters, Ann Arbor. Both theaters adjoin each other, although they play distinct and separate shows. The only thing the same is the orchestra.

A. J. Gilligham, of the Empire theater, Detroit, and operating a chain of theaters in Grand Rapids, celebrated his 50th birthday on Monday, Sept. 17. May he prosper for many years to come.

"Magda" is scheduled for October appearance at the Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit.

"Polly of the Circus" did a spendid business last week at the Madison, and John H. Kunsky was more than pleased. He looks for Goldwyn to be a tremendous factor in the film industry.

Cincinnati News Letter

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati.

Jewel Gives Its Debut In Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, O.—Jewel Productions, Inc., gave its Cincinnati debut before a large and unusual audience at B. F. Keith's theater on Saturday morning, September 15, under the direction of Ralph Peckham, who is in charge of the company's local office. Mr. Peckham, who is well known among exhibitors and film men, having been for some time manager of the Tri-State exchange, has taken quarters at 402 Strand building, and arranged the special showing referred to as the introduction of the Jewel releases to exhibitors in this section, "Come Through," the film dramatization of the great George Bronson Howard play, being the medium. Besides the numerous exhibitors who were present, there were many soldiers, as Mr. Peckham had extended a special invitation to the Army and Navy men to be at the exhibition. Leon Bamburger, the general manager of the Jewel, was in the city also, having come to Cincinnati to arrange for opening the office and get things started. The showing was highly successful.

Ralph Peckham.

"Nation" Film Ends Second Run.

Cincinnati, O.—The close of the recent two weeks' engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand opera house saw the completion of a record which will probably stand permanently, as far as Cincinnati is concerned. The run made a total of nine weeks for the great film at the Grand, taking the week ending Sept. 22 with the former engagement, and the management estimates that the attendance amounted in all to more than 200,000 persons. Prices were not reduced for this engagement of two weeks, remaining at the same high level as that established at the initial engagement. It is said that the film is not coming back, so that as far as the Grand is concerned the great run is over.

Second Run Paramounts at 10 Cents.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager Charles Weigel, of the Alhambra, announces that henceforth he will have the second run of Paramount-Artcraft pictures in Cincinnati, and that, at the same time, he will restore the ten-cent admission charge which formerly prevailed. Mr. Weigel believes that for all practical purposes the second run of the pictures will be fully as satisfactory as the first run, as the location of the Alhambra, on West Fifth street, is some blocks distant from the Strand and Walnut, where the first runs are had, and the Alhambra clientele, as well as the passing clientele, will undoutedly take to the new arrangement in a manner highly profitable to the house.

Near-Mary Pickford's Got in Free.

Cincinnati, O.—A local newspaper cooperated with the Walnut theater during the recent run of the most attractive "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," in a contest which aroused great interest and amusement. The idea was to obtain the attendance of girls resembling Mary Pickford, those who visited the theater with a convincing make-up being admitted free of charge. Later a group picture of all of the "Mary Pickfords" was taken, showing a striking array of curls and other indicia of youthful beauty.

Notes of Interest From Cincinnati.

While the new Goldwyn offices on East Fifth street, in charge of Manager C. C. Hite, are not supposed to be formally opened until October 1, Mr. Hite is getting things in splendid shape, and says that he has already signed up sixty-odd contracts for Goldwyn service.

Manager I. Libson, of the Walnut theater, refuses to let the "regular" houses have anything on him. The Grand and Lyric announce the opening of their winter seasons, and Manager Libson has done likewise with the Walnut, although there has been no perceptible change in the season. At any rate, the opening was celebrated with the film featuring Evelyn Nesbit Thaw and her son in "Redemption."

"Perfection Pictures" sound good to Manager Sidney Hatch, and he believes he will do even better with films under that name than under the former cryptic initials, K-E-S-E. The new plan of a release a week appears to be working out nicely, according to Mr. Hatch.

A recent gift to the Fox Film Co. by an admirer, consisting of a pair of genuine Virginia foxes, was turned over to the Cincinnati Zoo, as the animals, while highly appreciated, did not take to office life very well. They were gladly received at the famous Zoo, and are doing well in their new home.

Prospects Bright for Season in Indiana

Picture Theater Men See Evidences of Prosperity—Attendance at the Newly Opened Houses Shows Steady Increase.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Although two of Indianapolis' three legitimate theaters have already opened and the others, and also B. F. Ketih's vaudeville nouse, are scheduled to begin their winter season Monday, September 23, the moving picture exhibitors of the city are not anticipating any falling off in attendance with the coming of cold weather. In fact they are all of the opinion that the road shows and not the moving pictures are likely to suffer materially in the 1917-1918 season from the war and its consequences.

Although the Murat and the Park, the two theaters playing big stage productions, have been open for two weeks, the box receipts at nearly all the downtown motion picture theaters continue to increase, showing that the legitimate attractions are not so far affecting the exhibitors.

Along this line it might be added that judging from the crowds attending the downtown motion picture theaters for the first few days of this week the exhibitors will no doubt "make a cleaning," financially speaking, when the week is ended. All indications are that they will do better than they did last week, when business, on the whole, was splendid.

The showing of George M. Cohan's picturization of "The Seven Keys to Baldpate"—with Mr. Cohan himself in the role of McGee the novelist—at the Circle; the showing of Elsie Ferguson in her first screen production, "Barbary Sheep," at the Alhambra; the appearance of Alice Joyce in "An Alabaster Box" at the Colonial; George Walsh at the Isis in "The Yankee Way"; Ethel Barrymore at the Regent in "The Lifted Veil" gives some idea of the number of stars that have been obtained, and no doubt accounts for the forecast from the exhibitors that "business is better than usual."

The week that just ended was productive of profits for the managers of the various houses, for everyone had a splendid program, and houses that were more than comfortably filled were the rule and not the exception. In addition to the activities in motion picture circles in the downtown district the neighborhood houses are manifesting marked activity in attendance lines.

Julius Lamm Will Manage Orpheum.

Elkhart, Ind.—Announcement was made recently of the leasing of the Orpheum theater in this city by the owners, Allardt Brothers, of Chicago, to Julius Lamm and S. Abrahames, of Chicago, both experienced theatrical men. The lease is for five years, and carries with it an indefinite extension privilege.

The lessees expect to change the policy of the theater in a few weeks, but for the present will present vaudeville shows on Saturdays and Sundays. The policy will be changed as soon as the interior of the house can be renovated and redecorated, the change including the presentation of high class moving picture productions and legitimate attractions.

Two modern motion picture machines will be installed at a cost of $1,500, according to Mr. Lamm, who is to be resident manager, and the stage will be rebuilt and redecorated. The office personnel of the house under the new management will include Mrs. Artilla Harris, who has been in charge of the box office since the theater was first opened, as treasurer.

S. Abrahames, who owns the controling stock in the theater expressed himself as being especially well satisfied with prospects for doing an excellent business. "There is no doubt that moving pictures are affecting the legitimate productions," he said, "and in view of this we have decided to present both—good motion pictures and good legitimate attractions. All you have to do is to treat the people right, keep your house at a high standard all the time, and the patronage will come to you."

Cleve Kincaid Says Road Shows Are Doomed.

Indianapolis, Ind.—That moving pictures are rapidly sweeping the legitimate theater out of business was the declaration made Saturday, Sept. 15, by Cleve Kincaid, author of the Broadway success, "Common Clay," who is a candidate for an officers' commission at the training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, a few miles north of here.

"It is only a question of time," said Kincaid, "until there will be no field left to the legitimate theater except Chicago and New York. This doesn't mean that there is no longer interest in the theater, but means that road companies can no longer take in receipts necessary to their maintainence. In other words the moving picture theaters have shaved away the margin of profit.

"Of course, art for art's sake is all very well," he continued, "but actors must eat and pay railroad fare. Just what the effect eventually will be on the legitimate drama no one can exactly foretell. Moving pictures seem to be satisfying the great majority of people, so what are you going to do? This situation will not keep men and women from writing plays, however. Once you get the bug in you its got to come out, but I firmly believe the day is approaching when play writing will be solely an art and not a means of earning a livelihood. This will be a good thing for plays, but not for authors, who will be forced to get jobs on the side and write in their spare time."

Notes of Interest in Indiana.

Brazil, Ind.—Frank Kattman, of this city, who formerly was press agent for the Triangle theater at New Orleans, has been chosen manager of the Palace, a new theater on the Orpheum circuit in that city.

Frankfort, Ind.—Beginning last week the Royal theater, on South Main street, will be closed, excepting on Saturday and Sunday nights. This policy has been determined upon by the new management, which is also operating the Princess and Blinn theaters. The arrangement, it is understood, will only be for the remainder of the summer months.

Sunday Shows Popular at Goshen, Ind.

Theaters in City Open on Sabbath for the First Time and Play to Packed Houses—No Arrests Made at This Writing.

GOSHEN, IND.—The moving picture theaters of this place gave Sunday performances Sunday, September 9, for the first time in the history of the city, and the patronage was so satisfactory that other performances were given last Sunday, September 15. Although the Goshen Ministerial Association, which stands opposed to Sunday shows, threatened to prosecute the managers of the theaters, it has not yet taken any action in the matter.

The Jefferson and the Lyric were the two theaters that decided on Sunday opening, the lattter presenting Alice Joyce in "The Question," and the former showing the Paramount production, "The Daughter of McGregor," a Bray cartoon, and a South American travel reel at the initial performances. Both places played to packed houses, the crowds indicating that the majority of Goshen residents are in favor of the Sunday shows.

The shows given by the two theaters mark the first attempt to have motion pictures in Goshen on Sunday since the theaters have been in operation. All plans were set for opening the theaters last winter at the time of the session of the Indiana legislature, when the act legalizing Sunday motion pictures passed both houses by a good majority, but through an error of an engrossing clerk the bill was vetoed by the governor, and the plans were upset.

The managers of the Jefferson and the Lyric say they believe the working people of Goshen are entitled to Sunday motion pictures, as nearly every city of any size in the state now has this form of entertainment. They point out that the morals of the city will be benefited rather than harmed, and say that in their attempts to keep open on Sunday they will look to the people of Goshen to approve their actions.

The Goshen Ministerial Association is opposing the Sunday shows on the ground that they will interfere with church attendance, and announced prior to the opening that it would prosecute the managers who gave exhibitions. If arrests come later the cases will be fought in the courts, as the theater managers have retained counsel and are prepared for a long and bitter fight.

Prices in Kansas City Show Upward Trend

Seven Five-Cent Theaters Went to Ten Cents Last Month—Only Three Jitney Houses Left in City—Rise Not Affecting Attendance.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Beet Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—That the price of admission to Greater Kansas City moving picture theaters is tending to steadily increase is a fact now appreciated by the local exchanges as well as the patrons of the theaters. Within the last month, seven 5-cent theaters have gone to the 10-cent price, leaving only three out of approximately eighty-five theaters at the 5-cent price. These theaters are widely separated, some being in the down town districts, others in far parts of Greater Kansas City.

The theaters spoken of as having raised prices are the Idle Hour, the World in Motion, the Palace, the American, the Queen, the Sapphire, and the Eastern. Nearly all of the theaters are charging fifteen cents for their big feature pictures, although some have refused to make any advance at all and make the low price a prominent feature of their advertising. One down-town theater, the Royal, has set a minimum price of fifteen cents, while another, the Columbia, which was recently opened, has set twenty-five cents as the lowest price of admission.

It is readily seen that the increased admission price has not affected the attendance in any way, as local managers have already expressed great satisfaction from making the change. This change is practically parallel to the change in the time which pictures are now being run, as houses, which have been having a daily change, are now running big pictures for several days at a time, and quite frequently at advanced admission. So it is seen that the two changes work into each other, the lengthened run of pictures with the increased admission price.

Standard Film Plans for Big Features.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Standard Film Corporation is planning the distribution of several super-pictures. Although the company has about twenty-five of the Art Dramas pictures on hand, this source of pictures will not be handled by the Standard Film Corporation from now on. The company will continue to handle the Cristie comedies, Billy West comedies, and big states rights pictures. This exchange is strictly an independent exchange, thus the regular program conflicts with the principle upon which the exchange is operated.

Paralta Pictures Received by Triangle.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Southern Triangle has received the first release of the Paralta pictures, "A Man's Man." The local office is planning an active advertising campaign for this picture and is now making plans for its exploitation in this territory.

Frank Newman Designs Marquise.

Kansas City, Mo.—A marquise costing $4,100 will be built over the sidewalk in front of the Royal theater. It will be three feet nine inches in height and will be 14 feet long, extending the entire fronting of the theater. The underneath part will be furnished in mahogany, and will have many squares which will be set in with beveled mirrors. There will be 150 lights and two paddle fans also. It was designed by Frank Newman, manager of the theatre. It will be finished by October 1.

Improvements at the Apollo Theater.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Apollo theater is remodeling and redecorating to the extent of $10,000. An airdome has been run in connection with the theatre during the summer and the work both inside and outside of the theater has been going on for some time. The theatre will soon have a big electric sign in which the name of the theater is placed in three-foot letters. The sign will also have three lines for the changing attractions.

G. B. Howell Back with Universal.

Kansas City, Mo.—G. B. Howell, formerly connected with the Kansas City office of the Universal Film and Supply Company, has returned to that company, after having worked with the Fortified Manufacturing Company, at Chicago, Ill. He held the position as credit man at the Universal here.

Theater Notes from Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Regent theater has been undergoing redecorating and remodeling for the last few weeks. The front of the theater has been changed from gray to mahogany, and the inside has been changed to old rose from gray.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Auditorium theater here will be opened with moving pictures September 16 under the management of Rupert A. Donnan. This theater has been closed for the last two years, being last occupied by a stock company.

Tulsa, Okla.—A new theater to be owned and managed by McCarty and Rosstein, of this city, will be opened October 1. It will seat about 1,500.

Tulsa, Okla.—William Smith, manager of the Empress theater here, will build a fine new theater in Tulsa.

Bartlesville, Okla.—The Odian theater here has been bought by Joseph Gilday.

Bartlesville, Okla.—The Oklah theater which has been closed for remodeling and redecorating, has been opened for business with Mr. Flynn as manager.

El Reno, Okla.—Elaborate changes and improvements have been made in the lighting system of the Star theater here.

Eldorado, Kan.—The McGinnis theater will open October 1 with moving pictures and four acts of vaudeville. It will be owned and managed by Shippin and Hill.

Washington, Kan.—J. D. Kite, of this city, has bought Harper, Kansas, theatre.

Washington, Kan.—The Majestic theater of this place, has been bought by A. E. Adams, of Waterville, Kansas.

Caldwell, Kan.—The opera house will be converted into a moving picture theater. Vaudeville will also be shown. The theater will be remodeled by Dial and Scribner, the owners.

Newton, Kan.—The Pearl theater has been purchased by H. E. Herbert, former owner of the Royal theater at Newton. He is one of the pioneer moving picture men of the town.

Tonganoxie, Kan.—J. W. Evans has purchased an expensive new moving picture machine for his theater.

Southern Triangle Shifts Salesmen.

Kansas City, Mo.—The salesmen of the Southern Triangle have been shifted about within the last week. E. W. Hinson, formerly on the Missouri territory, is now working the territory in Eastern Kansas, and E. W. Green, who formerly had the Eastern Kansas territory, goes to take the Northern half of Oklahoma.

Kansas City Business Jottings.

Kansas City, Mo.—E. O. Gurney, general auditor of the Universal, spent ten days in the Kansas City office. He left Kansas City for Detroit, Mich., Sept. 15.

George Bowles, manager of the Kansas City, Mo., Bluebird, spent three days at Bethany, Mo., this week.

E. E. Reynolds, office manager of the Southern Triangle Pictures Corporation at Kansas City, Mo., will make a trip through Oklahoma that will last about three weeks.

Ghost Walks at Camp and City Thrives

Sidewalks Swarm With Soldiers and Visitors—Much Money Comes Into Circulation When Army Men Get Their Pay.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

AUGUSTA, GA.—The entire division of the Pennsylvania national guard—thirty thousand strong—are now under canvas at Camp Hancock. The city streets from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until midnight, are congested with pedestrians such as they have never before been in the history of Augusta.

The ghost walked at Camp Hancock last week, with the result that hundreds of thousands of dollars were released to the channels of trade. Tradespeople keep their shops open until way into the night in effort to supply the wants of the soldiers who crowded every emporium on Broad Street to purchase wares of various kinds. Cafes, soda water stands and amusement houses are unable to adequately care for the large increase in their business.

Moving picture theaters are packed for every performance, great crowds being turned away unable to gain admission, and it is a common occurrence for restaurants to lock their doors by 9 o'clock at night to prevent people from coming in, their places then being sufficiently crowded to keep them busy for two hours.

E. and H. Film Moves to 73 Walton Street.

Atlanta, Ga.—The E. and H. Film Distributing Company of Atlanta, has moved from 65 to 73 Walton street. The firm has purchased all the fixtures of the Artcraft office, which was formerly at this address, and at the same time has taken over all the films controlled by the Strand Film Company, consisting of around twenty state right features, including the "Ne'er-Do-Well."

The E. and H. Film Company was originally organized to distribute "The Crimson Stain Mystery" serial in the South, which was handled by Mr. Engler, with success.

"Rebecca" Wins Fresh Laurels.

Mary Pickford, in times past, may have appeared in better productions than "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," which opened a week's run at the Rialto theater Monday morning, but it would have been hard to convince moving picture lovers of that fact after seeing her in the delightful role of the little girl whose verses helped to pay off mortgage and save the farm of her aunts.

Louis Hasse Now in Charge.

Atlanta, Ga.—Louis Hasse arrived in Atlanta last week and assumed the management of the Atlanta theater. Mr. Hasse comes to Atlanta from Seattle, Wash. Mr. Hasse will make very few changes in the home staff of the Atlanta.

New Theaters and Changes in the Dakotas.

SANISH, N. D.—An opera house probably will be erected to replace the Savoy theater which was destroyed by fire.

Canton, S. D.—The Empress theater has been leased by J. C. Marsh.

Kimball, S. D.—Frank Reynolds has sold his moving picture theater.

Tower City, N. D.—S. F. Sherman is having a new opera house constructed.

Theaters and Exhibitors in Nebraska.

Broken Bow, Neb.—The moving picture show has been leased to C. W. Wright.

Upland, Neb.—An opera house is to be constructed here.

Clay Center, Neb.—Archie Leopold has purchased the moving picture theater from Guy Kirchner.

Central City, Neb.—C. E. McDonald has taken over the Empress theater which has been conducted by Kerr Bros.

Nebraska City, Neb.—The Empress theater will be under the management of Manager Stapleton this fall.

York, Neb.—The Dean theater of this town is being remodeled and beautified by Earl Y. Dean, owner of the building. New equipment is being installed. Mr. Dean intends to take over the active management of the theater.

Theater Jottings From Illinois.

HAVANA, ILL.—A timely program for the Lawford theater was the showing of "The Little American" the day the town was holding big ceremonies for the departing drafted men.

Morris, Ill.—M. J. Hogan, Jr., and R. R. Davidson, of Seneca, who have secured possession of the Roy theater, plan a number of improvements to the interior.

East St. Louis, Ill.—The Majestic theater had its fall opening September 13, when souvenirs were given. The house has been redecorated.

Theater Notes From Michigan.

Marcellus, Mich.—The Virginia theater has been closed because of lack of patronage.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Adolph S. Davis, proprietor of the Lyric theater, 315 Monroe avenue, is dead.

Business Men Feel Need of Theater.

Milwaukee, Wis.—East Side business men do not regard a moving picture theater as a device that lures the dimes away from their coffers. On the contrary, they think that a photoplay house showing good films brings people into a trading district. H. A. Kraft, proprietor of the Willis Building Drug store, and other East Side business men, are contemplating organizing a stock company to establish a theater in their neighborhood.

New Theaters and Changes.

Monroe, Wis.—R. T. Holcomb and Joseph Collins have opened a moving picture theaterin the Syndicate block.

Boyceville, Wis.—H. L. Boch has been making plans to open a moving picture show in the opera house.

Monticello, Wis.—James Hancock has purchased the interest of his brother-in-law, Casper Blum, in the moving picture theater here.

Chippewa, Wis.—Marguerite Clark in "The Amazons" was the picture attraction at the opening of the new $60,000 Rex theater.

Twin City Exchanges Have Two Brand New Managers—Trade Notes Gathered Along Film Row—Business Notices.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—With competition keen at practically every downtown Twin City house, the week of Sept. 16 two new exchange managers were announced. Of course there was no connection between the exchange managers and keen competition, but the combination looks good as a lead for this column.

As to the competition, Twin City first run houses showed the following the first half of the week:

At Minneapolis: The New Garrick, "Baby Mine," Pathe News; the Strand, "Joan the Woman," special choir; the New Lyric, "The Honor System"; the New Aster, "Les Miserables."

At St. Paul: The Alhambra, "A Tale of Two Cities"; the Starland, "Skinner's Baby"; the New Garrick, "Polly of the Circus"; the Blue Mouse, "The Spy"; the New Majestic, "The Tanks at the Battle of Ancre"; the New Princess, "Mother o' Mine."

As to the exchange managers, Harry Cohen, of New York, decided to do away with many inquiries and much talk of politics, and instead of appointing any of the "expected" permanent exchange managers for the local Metro exchange, chose to fill the position himself. Cohen also announced that George W. Malone, one of the "possible," would cover the Wisconsin territory for Metro, and George did it, beginning Monday, Sept. 17.

Fred S. Meyer, who, though not restless, has changed about some himself, switched from the manager's desk at the General exchange to the sales manager's office at the Universal-Laemmle exchange. And there were other changes too.

For instance, L. O. Maas left the local Pathe exchange road staff and went to Denver to work for H. E. Friedman at the Colorado Pathe branch; Lee Horn jumped to Fargo and opened the Supreme's Dakota branch, and F. C. Remington, former Wisconsin Paramount representative, went out of the road through Wisconsin for the Barnett exchange in the interests of "Joan the Woman."

L. C. Larson Heads General Exchange.

Minneapolis, Minn.—L. C. Larson has succeeded Fred S. Meyer as manager of the local General exchange. Mr. Larson has been assistant manager at the General for some time, and has a host of friends among exhibitors of the Northwest.

New Road Men Join Friedman Film.

Want a 1917 Bowling League.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Efforts are being made by several members of the 1916-17 Minneapolis Film Men's Bowling League to form a like organization this season. A meeting to decide on the number of teams to be taken into the organization and just what film men are eligible to membership is scheduled for one night the current week. "Amusements" team won the championship last season.

Oscar T. Olson Honored at Banquet.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Members of the staff of the Lochren Film Corp. tendered a banquet to Oscar T. Olson, a salesman at Schiek's cafe, Friday evening, Sept. 14, to show their appreciation of Mr. Olson's work and friendship. Mr. Olson leaves Wednesday next for Fort Dodge, Iowa, to join the National Army.

Minneapolis.—Manager Branham, of the Strand, Minneapolis, has booked "The Slacker" for a return engagement the last week of September.

O. H. Dutton Made Assistant Manager.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager George A. Rogers, of the new United Theater Equipment Co., on Seventh street, North, Minneapolis, has appointed O. H. Dutton, formerly with the American Theater Equipment Co. here, his assistant. Mr. Dutton will have charge of the repair department.

Baby McAllister to Be at Strand.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager E. C. Davies, of the Saxe exchange, upon returning from Chicago announced that little Baby McAllister, of the Essanay company would, in all probability, appear in person at the Strand here shortly in connection with the first run showing of "On Trial," National Exhibitors' Circuit picture.

John Elliott Gets Right to "Crisis."

Minneapolis, Minn.—John Elliott, of the Elliott and Sherman exchange has secured the right to show "The Crisis" in Wisconsin, Minnesota, and the Dakotas from the Sherman-Elliott exchange in the McKnight building.

Eclipse Exchange Opens Office.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Eclipse exchange has opened offices at 4 South Ninth street, and has secured territorial rights to "The Soul of a Child" and "Corruption," produced by Jack Gorman, who spent several days in Minneapolis last week.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Benjamin Friedman, manager of the Friedman Film Corp., has booked "A Mormon Maid," featuring Mae Murray, in the Strand theater here for the week of October 7.

Minneapolis.—Manager Dan Michalove, of the Triangle exchange, has returned from Asheville, N. C., where he went last week to take his physical examination for the National Army. Mr. Michalove has announced that he is ready to show J. Warren Kerrigan's first Paralta release, "A Man's Man," to exhibitors in his projection room.

Minneapolis.—Manager Newton Davis, of the Bluebird exchange, spent two days in Duluth, Minn., last week on business, and returned with several contracts.

Minneapolis.—Manager Charles Stombaugh, of the Standard exchange, has booked Billy West comedies in the New Aster, Minneapolis and New Princess, St. Paul, Ruben & Finkelstein theaters.

Minneapolis.—William Seitzler, a former Dakota exhibitor, and Tom McCoy, former Minneapolis Butterfly picture salesman, are now covering the two Dakotas with the Supreme's "Civilization" companies.

Minneapolis.—M. R. Dick, of the Barnett Attractions exchange, has gone out on a tour of the Dakotas in the interests of "Joan the Woman."

Minneapolis.—Tom Burke, of the Westcott exchange, has booked the Rex Beach travel pictures in the New Lyric, Minneapolis. Mr. Burke has also announced that "Intollerance" is doing a good business on the road according to reports.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager J. George Feinberg, of the Theater Equipment Co., has returned from a business trip lasting six weeks, and which carried him into Washington and Oregon. Mr. Feinberg reports film conditions throughout the West unusually good despite the war.

Minneapolis.—"Amusements" issued its annual fall special number on Saturday, Sept. 15, which contained a full page about the merits of the Moving Picture World among its forty eight pages.

Texas Fall Business Shows Healthy Vigor

Coming of Cooler Weather Brings Good Patronage to Picture Shows—As Theaters Reopen Bank Accounts and Cotton Market Revive.

By Douglas Hawley, Times Herald, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEX.—With the coming of the first cool weather things have begun to look up a bit in the motion picture world of the Southwest. Breaking of the drouth in many sections of Texas which have heretofore suffered from dry weather, is also having its effect, in a better feeling among theater men and the amusement loving public. It is noted that a number of towns record the resumption of theaters which had been closed because of the gloomy aspect of things. Aside from those spotted sections where a plethora of sunshine had done more harm than good, there's full prosperity in the state. Bank statements up to the close of business Sept. 11, showed big increases in deposits, a satisfactory condition due to high prices for cotton, wheat and other commodities which agricultural Texas produces in plenty.

The facts, all drouth reports considered and discounted, "all's well with the world" in Texas and there's no reason for recrimination.

Henry Putz Will Teach Projection at Camps.

Dallas, Tex.—A Dallas man is to teach rookies in southern army cantonments how to operate motion picture machines for the edification of the boys who've answered the call to arms. The Y. M. C. A. has arranged to install eighty-five machines at various cantonments. Henry Putz, dean of machine operators in Texas, and chairman of the local examination board, has been named for the place by Samuel Jones Smith, in charge of the work for the Y. M. C. A. in the southern department. The department embraces Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma and New Mexico.

Why Isn't There a Censor of Censors?

Dallas, Tex.—In Dallas theaters during the last week there has been one awful demonstration of how a valuable film may be ruined from the artistic standpoint, by the comstockian cutting by carping censors. Norma Talmadge's "Poppy" was—the word is used advisedly after it has been shown here—an excellent picture. As Dallas audiences saw it, it is a succession of scenes, very few of which have the least connection. One sees a pair of lovers on a rough promontory, high up on a mountain side. Without explanation, oral, in script, or any other way, he is transported to a gorgeous ball room, with hundreds of gayly clad women and conventionally garbed men. The transition is so sudden one finds oneself rubbing eyes and performing brain evolutions that would put an acrobat to shame, in the effort at readjustment. There are several such throughout the film, the result of indiscriminate cuttings.

In justice to the local censor it must be said that the work was done before the film reached Texas. Texas may still retain some of her wildness and wooliness, but her artistic education has kept pace with her moral development, and moral censorship in the Lone Star State is tempered with at least a modicum of regard for the artistic.

A censor of censors wouldn't be bad at all.

Texas Delights to Claim O. Henry.

Dallas, Tex.—Considerable interest is expressed and keen anticipation is felt for the first showing in Texas of the O. Henry series, announced by Broadway Star Features and distributed through General. Henry was a Texan. So versatile was the gifted son of Texas, that picturization of his full roster of stories would run the whole gamut of motion picture possibility—from ghetto to Western stuff. He knew his Texas prairies no better than his East Side, and he knew them both perfectly.

"Polly" Holds Crowds at Old Mill.

Dallas, Tex.—"Polly of the Circus," with Mae Marsh was the first Goldwyn offering in Dallas territory during the week ending Sept. 15, playing to big business at the Old Mill theatre amid a real circus atmosphere. For the offering Manager Stuart had dressed the Old Mill in circus garb, cap-a-pie.

"Rebecca" Queens It at the Queen.

Dallas, Tex.—Simultaneously with the Marsh picture, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" with Pickford, opened at the Queen, dividing honors with the former. It followed Harold Lockwood in "Under Handicap," which also played to excellent business. George Cohan in "Seven Keys to Baldpate" also proved highly popular at this theater just prior to the Lockwood picture.

Louise Millet Gets Her Union Card.

Dallas, Tex.—Louise Millet, girl native of Lyons in la belle France, is the first woman member of the motion picture machine operators' union in Texas. She has been admitted in due form and as this is written is to take her examination for qualifications before the local board within a day or so. Under the local electrical code machine operators are required to stand a rigid examination.

Announcement is made by the Washington Theater and the local Triangle branch, that Triangle releases will hereafter be shown exclusively at that theater for first runs.

Des Moines Filmdom Doings Last Week

"Polly" Opens at Garden Theater With Enthusiastic Houses—Big Theater May Be Built Near Camp—Other Notes of Interest.

DES MOINES, IA.—Richard Robertson, representative of Goldwyn in Kansas City, came to Des Moines for the opening of the Garden's showing of "Polly of the Circus." Dan Bergman, manager of the Garden, had constructed a circus wagon around the box office in the center of the lobby, scattered saw dust all over the floor and with flags and gaily decorated lengths of canvas had made the lobby into a veritable entrance to the "big top." The house was jammed for three days. It will be brought back for a long return showing.

Rumor of Big House at Camp Dodge.

Des Moines, Ia.—With the equipment all purchased and arrangements being made for several series of pictures, an unknown company is rapidly advancing plans for the erecting of a large motion picture theater as near as possible to Camp Dodge. Government regulations will prevent the house from being placed within certain bounds. No definite news of the owners or location of the house could be obtained.

A. H. Blank Buys Hart Super Feature.

Des Moines, Ia.—A. H. Blank has purchased the four states rights of Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri, for the big Ince-supervised William S. Hart picture, "The Cold Deck," and will show the picture at the Garden in the near future. The prints are already at the Mid-West office in Des Moines and bookings can be arranged for.

Jake Schlank Out of Interstate.

Des Moines, Ia.—Jake Schlank has disposed of his interest in the Interstate Film Company of Des Moines, but he was in town last week arranging for service for his big Princess of Sioux City. The Princess seats 1,200 people, and Mr. Schlank has an eight-piece orchestra all the time. He has arranged to show the Metro All-Star Pictures and Blank's Super Pictures at a steady price of fifteen cents admission.

Overt the State with Exhibitors.

Clarmont, Ia.—W. R. Blake has taken over the Clarmont opera house, formerly owned by Frank R. Frisbie.

Shelby, Ia.—W. C. Howland has purchased the picture house in Shelby from Charles Albertus.

Fayette, Ia.—T. J. Leahy has purchased the Princess in Fayette from Chas. Helverson.

Allerton, Ia.—A Mr. Lane has opened the Majestic in Allerton.

Council Bluffs, Ia.—Peter Steenhusen is the new owner and manager of the opera house in Council Bluffs.

Spencer, Ia.—H. B. Gray has purchased the Fraser theater in Spencer. Mr. Gray formerly operated the Royal in Carroll, Ia.

Pomeroy, Ia.—Geo. Hockschwender has sold his picture house in Pomeroy to Richard Moore.

Onawa, Ia.—Fairchild and Payne have sold to Krigston and Wonder.

Burlington, Ia.—Martin Bruhl has reopened the Grand opera house in Burlington.

Kamrar, Ia.—L. A. Miller has sold the picture house in Kamrar to H. E. Hyland and wife.

Milo, Ia.—J. G. Tharp is the new owner of the Star in Milo.

Oskaloosa, Ia.—E. M. McCray of the Lyric theater in Oskaloosa took a big chance when he rented the big Metro picture, "The Slacker," for a week showing in a town of not quite 10,000 people. However his success with this long run has been wonderful—the picture having taken the town and the surrounding country by storm. McCray is a wise exhibitor and he advertised the picture in advance and when it was showing in a big way.

A Reel of Camp Dodge Film a Week.

Des Moines, Ia.—Guy Woods, one of Des Moines' foremost photographers, has realized the tremendously big thing that Camp Dodge is and how interesting to every body in the four states, whose friends and relatives are in training there. So he has taken some 10,000 feet of film, showing every interesting phase of the camp life with accurate statistics. He, with the aid of a corporation known as the Dodge Film Company, is releasing a reel of this interesting film a week, and fenting all over the territory of Iowa, and the some five other states contributing men to the camp.

The first reel was exhibited at the Royal theater in Des Moines Friday and Saturday, Sept. 14-15, and proved to be a big drawing card. The Evening Tribune, always awake to anything alive, has given the reels a big boost and the pictures are going forth as under the supervision of the Tribune, with the slogan, "Read it in the Tribune and See it at the Royal in Dodge Films." The Tribune and Mr. Woods with the Dodge Film Company have a big thing when consideration is taken of the many people interested vitally in the Camp Dodge life.

Lobby Looks Like a Dime Museum.

Albia, Ia.—M. J. Frisch, district booker of the local Pathe exchange, just returned from Albia this week. He reports that J. E. Benton, of the Comet theater, has turned his lobby into a veritable museum, containing one monkey, a couple of cats, a couple of coons, one 'possum and some thirteen white rats. The kiddies all flock to the theater to see the array of animals and naturally the grownups follow in their wake and incidentally Mr. Benton gets much business. He persuaded J. E. Benton that "The Fatal Ring" and "The British Tanks at the Battle of Ancre" were the only pictures on the map.

Visitors in Des Moines.

Des Moines, Ia.—William Hemsky of the Crystal theater in Cedar Rapids was in town renewing his contract with the Metro. Mr. Hemsky is a firm believer in sticking to the same brand of pictures.

Mr. Matlock of Matlock and Clarke, managers of the Princess in Boone, were in town last week.

T. J. Acklin of the opera house in Swan, Ia., was in town on business the latter part of the week.

NEW ORLEANS NOTES.

Al G. Shear Out of Consolidated.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Al G. Shear, who for nearly seven years has been the local manager of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, has resigned in order that he may devote all of his time to his rapidly increasing personal interests in the motion picture field. During his management of the Consolidated interests here he has established a fine business for the company and extended its profitable territory to very large proportions. Recently he became identified with the Sobel - Richards - Shear enterprises engaged in the operation of high-class suburban theaters and already three first-class houses are supplying public entertainment and other houses are being projected.

Al G. Shear.

Every one of these suburban theaters are modern and commodious in every particular and they are being managed with the sole idea of efficiency. Naturally this requires the time of a man who is well versed in the motion picture business and Shear was regarded as the logical man for the place. He is secretary of the organization and the position involves real work. In addition to this Mr. Shear is at the head of the Rialto Film Company, which makes a specialty of the distribution of state right productions, hence his determination to resign. Harry T. Peebles, who has been in charge of the Dallas, Texas, branch of the Consolidated, has succeeded Mr. Shear as manager of the New Orleans office.

Harry Leonhardt in Town.

San Francisco, Cal.—Harry Leonhardt, western division manager for Goldwyn, has returned from a tour of inspection of exchanges in the Northwest and in the Mountain states, coming home by way of Denver. He reports that the Goldwyn branches are getting well established throughout the territory.

St. Francis Theater at San Francisco Open

E. C. Mix Reopens Recently Built Theater—Former Management Had to Close on Account of Financial Embarrassment—Fine Projection Room.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The St. Francis theater, at 345 Geary street, opposite the great hotel of that name, has been reopened under the management of E. C. Mix, following extensive alterations. This house was opened last October and attracted wide attention through some of its unique features of arrangement and its artistic design and decoration. It has been closed for some time, however, owing to the financial straits in which the former owners found themselves, but is now in strong hands, with every prospect of becoming a successful institution. Additions have been made to the big organ, a ladies' orchestra has been installed and Paramount and other feature pictures will be shown. The prices are 10 cents for matinees and 10 and 20 cents for evening performances.

One of the innovations inaugurated by Mr. Mix is a morning matinee commencing at 10 o'clock, when a program designed especially for children but one that will also appeal to adults will be presented at a uniform admission price of 10 cents. The Conquest Program will be featured at this morning show, the first one given on September 15 consisting of the Richard Harding Davis story, "Billy and the Big Stick," "Two Kentucky Boys," "Climbing Mt. Washington" and "Gathering Bananas and Cocoanuts." An added attraction on this program was the Motoy comedy, "Goldie Locks and the Three Bears." Mr. Mix is devoting much attention to this Saturday morning program and has received much encouragement from men and women interested in educational work and clean entertainment for the young folks.

Starts Live Campaign for Perfection Pictures.

San Francisco, Cal.—The George Kleine System, distributors of Perfection pictures, has started an active campaign throughout this territory with a new manager at the helm and a new sales force. Charles I. Luntz, formerly the Bluebird manager here but more recently with the All Star Feature Distributors, and one of the most successful film salesmen in this field, has joined the local staff of George Kleine and will cover the territory south of this city. J. J. Moore will visit exhibitors in northern California and Nevada, while Miss Irene Miller will act as special representative, devoting special attention to the Conquest Program. First run Perfection pictures have been booked at the Liberty theater, Oakland.

New Manager for Branch Exchange.

San Francisco, Cal.—Marion H. Kohn, head of the Consolidated Film, has returned from a visit to the Los Angeles branch and has transferred Morris Epstein, of the home office, to the southern city to take charge of that branch.

Nat A. Magner Moves Offices.

San Francisco, Cal.—Nat A. Magner, who recently disposed of his film interests, with the exception of a few productions, such as "The Bar Sinister" and "Beware of Strangers," has closed his offices on the upper end of film row and has taken space at 114 Golden Gate avenue, where his interests are being taken care of by Ruben Cohen. Mr. Magner is making a business trip to Chicago and expects to leave upon his return for an indefinite stay in the Orient.

Sol Lesser Announces New Theaters.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sol L. Lesser has sent word that he is rapidly rounding out into his former form and that he plans to return home about the 1st of October. He has purchased the rights for this territory for "Today" and "The Mad Lover," and these will be offered to exhibitors upon his return. Frank Hill, formerly of Los Angeles, is now associated with the home office of the All Star Feature Distributors, and Harold Hotchner, for some time in the poster department, has been promoted to manager of the Art Drama Program division.

Strand Books "Garden of Allah."

San Francisco, Cal.—The Strand theater has completed arrangements to show the "Garden of Allah," and Manager Sid Grauman plans to present this on a scale of magnificence not frequently witnessed in connection with the presentation of a moving picture.

Color Film Company Incorporated.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Douglass Natural Color Film Company, Ltd., has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $1,050,000, by Leon F. Douglass, Peter Bacigalupi, Thomas P. Boyd, Henry A. Melvin, Thomas J. Lennon and Frank H. Kerrigan. The new color pictures and stereoscopic motion pictures on which Mr. Douglass has been experimenting were shown recently at a dinner given in honor of the inventor at the Union League Club.

"Four Minute Men" Speak in Oakland.

Oakland, Cal.—The "Four Minute" campaign has opened at Oakland, and practically every moving picture house in the city was covered on September 15 by a committee of speakers under the leadership of W. R. Wheeler, who is chairman of the movement for Alameda County. The four-minute talks were on the subject, "What Our Enemy Really Is."

Producing Company May Move.

Corte Madera, Cal.—The Rainbow Film company, which has been located here for some time, is considering the proposition of moving to Sacramento and has taken the matter up with the chamber of commerce of that city.

Alexander Pantages in Town.

San Francisco, Cal.—Alexander Pantages, who conducts a chain of vaudeville houses on the Pacific Coast, dropped into town a short time ago for a few days' stay. While he is still considering plans for featuring one of his comedians in a series of moving pictures, the matter has not been definitely settled. Harry E. Cornell, for some time manager of the Oakland house, has been transferred to Los Angeles, succeeding Carl Walker, and in turn he has been succeeded at Oakland by Charles Niemeyer.

"Jack and Bean Stalk" Runs Two Weeks

San Francisco, Cal.—The Rialto theater concluded a two weeks' run on "Jack and the Bean Stalk" this week, having shown to capacity houses almost every day, despite the inconvenience of the street car strike. A special matinee showing for the benefit of the children was made on the morning of September 8 and also two days later, when Admission Day was celebrated, giving the children a school holiday.

California Notes.

Patterson, Cal.—Fred Miller has reopened the Patterson theater.

Bakersfield, Cal.—The Rex theater has been enlarged and a style 40 Fotoplayer installed.

Atascadero, Cal.—A Westinghouse motor-generator set has been purchased from G. A. Metcalfe, of San Francisco, for use in the Atascadero Colony theater.

Oakland, Cal.—Alterations to cost about $6,000 are being made in the Orpheum theater.

Portland, Oregon, Fall Season Opens Well

Picture Theaters Announce Plans for Coming Attractions—Two Big Pictures Are Shown—Majestic Charges 25 Cents and Has Big Business.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The leading photoplay theaters here have put their business on the same basis as the legitimate houses by making a pretentious opening of the autumn season, and the public has taken kindly to the innovation. The trend of photoplays to big productions has made the situation possible.

The schedule of plays at the Majestic is a fair example of the way the seasonal plan is being carried out. During the hot summer months this popular showhouse was content to run regular program pictures and did a minimum amount of advertising. Beginning September 7, however, Manager-Owner J. J. Parker changed his exhibition tactics and only the biggest offering obtainable will hereafter be shown at the Majestic.

On this date "The Honor System" opened and played a full week to big houses, at 25 cents. The usual price of admission is 15 cents. Following "The Honor System" came "Polly of the Circus," the first Goldwyn offering in this territory, and other big Goldwyn and Fox specials are on the Majestic schedule.

The Liberty opened the fall season with "The Whip," and the big house was crowded to overflowing at all performances. On the opening Sunday crowds that were record breakers for Portland attended. Manager E. J. Myrick reports a big line-up of winter shows, including "The Ten of Diamonds," "The Woman God Forgot," "The Cold Deck," "Come Through," and others; also the Paramount releases, except Pickford and Fairbanks.

The People's big picture for the fall opening was "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," with Mary Pickford. Manager J. C. Stille is assuring his patrons of a big winter program. "Pay Me" will show at the People's in the near future.

Portland General Film Branch Opens

Portland, Ore.—Portland's newest film exchange, the branch of the General Film Company, opened its doors September 17. The office is in the exchange building at Ninth and Burnside streets and adjoins the Pathe exchange on the east. The new quarters are equipped with a film vault and an exhibition room on the balcony in the rear. The office is in charge of W. E. Matthews, who has the title of branch manager. Mr. Matthews came from San Francisco, where he has been traveling for G. F. about six months. He was formerly owner of the Oriental theater in the heart of San Francisco's Chinatown.

Standard Shares General Film Office.

The Standard Feature Film company, E. M. Simonton, is occupying the room with the General Film company. In fact, it was Mr. Simonton and his associate in some film deals, B. J. Sperry, who negotiated this desirable film exchange lease.

Kofeldt Takes His First Vacation.

Portland, Ore.—W. W. Kofeldt, manager for the Portland Pathe exchange, took his first vacation since beginning work for this concern three years ago. It was not all vacation, however, because he stayed pretty close to the picture situation at Seaside, Ore. He reported nice business at the Seaside theaters during the latter part of the season just passed. The Warrenton showhouse is now operated by a corporation, the Arcade Theater company, and C. L. Lynch is manager.

Relief Show for Sumpter Fire Sufferers.

Prairie City, Ore.—Fred Clift has donated the use of the Electric theater for a benefit to be given September 24 to raise funds to relieve the fire-swept town of Sumpter, near here. The film will be donated by a Portland film exchange.

Cap. Davies, the owner of the Sumpter Electric theater, is one of the grittiest of the Sumpter residents and has great faith that the town will come back to its former glory.

Theaters Aid Four Minute Men.

Portland, Ore.—Plans have been perfected by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon for its co-operation with the Four Minute Men, working under the direction of National Chairman George Creel. The plans call for speakers to lecture on national questions in each theater once or twice a week. The state chairman of the Four Minute Men, Sherman R. Hall, is appointing local chairmen throughout Oregon who will confer with local theater managers regarding the appearance of the four minute speakers.

Pretty Star Theater at Weiser.

Weiser, Idaho.—Considered by traveling film men one of the prettiest little moving picture theaters in the West, the Star at Weiser, Idaho, owned and operated by A. C. Gordon, has established a policy of showing only the best in photoplays that is in keeping with the high class character of the theater.

The Weiser Star was completed July 28 and opened with Baby Marie Osborne in "Told At Twilight." The general opening was had on July 30 when "Sleeping Fires," with Pauline Frederick, was the feature. The house was crowded on both days.

The plans for the Star were drawn by a Salt Lake architect and special attention was directed toward real metropolitan features in the theater. The lighting, which is semi-indirect, is controlled by dimmers. There are no open side lights. The stage is of good size and equipped electrically and otherwise to handle vaudeville acts.

There are no steps in the theater and all inclines and aisles are fitted with cork carpets. The ceiling is decorated in plain cream color, the side walls being old rose with panel work. The auditorium seats 450.

The projection is taken care of from a modern lamp room 10 by 14 in size, equipped with two Simplex machines and one Motiograph. The throw is 90 feet to a 12 by 16 screen.

Manager-owner A. C. Gordon entered the picture field January 1, 1917, when he bought out the old Star theater, since closed, from Sullivan and Meek. He had in mind the building of his new house when he made the purchase and broke ground for it May 1.

Star Theater at Weiser, Idaho.

Mr. Gordon's success is undoubtedly due to his study of the photoplay industry long before he became engaged in it. "I have been a subscriber for the 'World' for three years," says Mr. Gordon, "and you know that helps a fellow some."

Star at Oregon City to Fifteen Cents.

Oregon City, Ore.—W. A. Long, owner of the Star theater, has raised the price of admission to his theater to 15 cents on all days of the week. For several months he has charged 15 cents for his Sunday shows. The raise is due to the increased cost of film service.

Charles Schram, who owns the Grand theater here, has been charging 15 cents for nearly a year.

Portland, Oregon, Operators Get New Scale

Union's New Wage Scale Goes Into Effect on October 1—Twenty Per Cent. Increase Expected—Officers of the Union.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Commencing October 1, a new wage scale will be put in effect by the Portland local of the Operators' Union. The new scale calls for a 20 per cent. increase. The downtown theaters are now getting $25 per week, and the suburban men are getting $15. By the new scale they will get $30 and $17.50, respectively. The suburban scale is based on 30 hours a week.

The new scale was presented to the Theatrical Managers' Association, which includes the managers of vaudeville shows as well as picture theaters. No formal consideration has been given by the photoplay theater men up to the time of this writing, but it is not anticipated that the demands of the operators will be vigorously opposed. This is the first demand for an increase by the union since its organization several years ago. The officers of the union are J. A. Dilg, president; H. H. Moyer, recording secretary; J. S. Haughey, financial secretary and treasurer; and Frank Biers, vice president.

Random Northwest Notes.

Joseph, Ore.—Plans are being prepared for a new theater to be operated by Richmond and Vergere.

Nez Perce, Idaho.—G. M. Martin, Arctic theater, is fighting hard to give Sunday shows. His success is problematic.

Uniontown, Wash.—J. A. Grief has taken over the management of his theater again.

Boise, Idaho.—Herman J. Brown recently showed "Intolerance" at the Majestic, at 25 and 35 cents.

Asotin, Wash.—R. R. Belcher has reopened his theater.

The Dalles, Ore.—A. Bettingen is running both of his theaters every day in the week.

Seattle Film News Letter

By J. S. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

Film Men Ready to Move Into New Exchange Building.

SEATTLE, Wash.—Nearly every film office in Seattle was topsy-turvy last week preparing to move into the big new exchange building when it is finished this week.

B. R. Kellar, manager of Selznick, persuaded the contractor to finish his offices first and has already moved in, but he was far from settled at this writing. At the Metro office the new manager, E. R. Redlich, was attending to business in Portland; but H. L. Lustig, special representative, was trying to keep things straight at the old office and supervise the finishing of the new.

The Goldwyn forces had not spread themselves out comfortably in their temporary quarters, so the task of moving was not to be so great for them as for others who have been in their present location a long time.

Most of the managers have been living the last year just to get into a properly equipped building, but one or two, who are very comfortable in their present quarters, hated to go so far uptown as Third and Virginia streets. This will undoubtedly soon be the center of the shopping district, however, as the business part of the city is moving up very fast.

De Luxe Manager Returns from New York.

Seattle, Wash.—Mike Rosenberg, president of the De Luxe Feature Film, returned from New York this week, where he took a leading part in organizing the state rights buyers called to New York by Sol Lesser.

Upon his return the De Luxe manager immediately got busy signing contracts for his two new pictures, "The Cold Deck," featuring Wm. S. Hart, and "Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbit. Jensen and von Herberg have taken the former picture for their entire Northwestern circuit, and "Redemption" goes to the Clemmer.

Seattle to Have Third Orchestra for Interpreting Pictures.

Seattle, Wash.—When the Strand theater opens with its first Goldwyn picture, "Polly of the Circus," on September 22, the house will be all dressed up with new carpets and new paint; and the picture will be interpreted by a new orchestra of twelve expert soloists led by the famous violinist, M. Cherniavsky, one-time teacher of Mischa Elman. With these improvements in his house and in his policy Mr. Smythe expects to capture his share of the increased business that is coming to Seattle theaters with better general business conditions.

With so many added expenses the Strand manager has found it necessary to raise his admission price in the evening to 20 cents, the matinee price remaining at 15 cents. He is the second theater manager to raise to 20 cents, James Q. Clemmer having made the same change on August 25.

Big Publicity for Opening of American Theater.

Walla Walla, Wash.—When A. W. Eiler opened the new American theater on August 25 the entire motion picture section of the leading paper of the town was devoted to his house. The six pages which made up this section had nothing on them that did not pertain to the American theater. The feature of the opening day was Norma Talmadge in "The Law of Compensation," handled by the De Luxe Feature Film Company of Seattle.

Goldwyn Trade Showings in Seattle and Spokane.

Seattle, Wash.—C. F. Hill, manager of the Seattle Goldwyn office, held a trade showing of "Polly of the Circus" on Sept. 4, at the Mutual headquarters in Seattle. He is now in Spokane holding showings of the same picture and "Baby Mine" and "The Eternal Magdalene."

Trade Showings of First Paralta Release.

Seattle, Wash.—J. L. Paine, special representative for Triangle, announced a trade showing of the first Paralta release, "A Man's Man," in Seattle for Sept. 13 at 10 a. m. at the Orpheum theater, and one in Portland at the Globe theater at the same hour on Sept. 14.

Tacoma Theater Turns to Pictures.

Tacoma, Wash.—The Tacoma theater, a legitimate house in which pictures have been tried out several times with no success, is soon to be reopened as a motion picture theater by M. Rosenberg, president of the De Luxe Feature Film Company of Seattle. The boom brought to Tacoma by the National Army Cantonment at American Lake, 18 miles distant, has encouraged Mr. Rosenberg to try to overcome the hoodoo. He will show only the biggest attractions at the house.

Vancouver Censor Gives Up His Job

"Damaged Goods" Seemed to Him Too Bad to Pass and He Steps Down When Overruled—Walter Hepburn Succeeds Him.

By Charles S. Thomson, 645 Burrard St., Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—No small excitement has been occasioned by the resignation of C. L. Gordon, British Columbia's moving picture censor. The bone of contention which led to Mr. Gordon's voluntary withdrawal from office was the well-known photoplay, "Damaged Goods." The censorial ban was placed upon this production several months ago on grounds of immorality. Since then a continuous agitation has been going on to get the picture passed for exhibition. An appeal was made to the attorney-general, M. A. Macdonald, but he refused to reverse the decision of the censor, saying that Mr. Gordon's rulings were final, and that no appeal could be made against them.

That did not stop the campaign to get the picture before the public. Several private showings were given in various parts of the province, and clergymen, teachers, and other influential people publicly stated their conviction that nothing but good could result from the showing of "Damaged Goods" to the people. In the meantime, Attorney-general Macdonald vacated his office, and his place was taken by the Hon. J. W. Farris. A second appeal was made to the authorities, and the picture was viewed in Victoria by Mr. Farris and other government officials. As a result, Mr. Farris wrote to the censor, advising him to pass the picture and make it a condition that nobody under eighteen years of age should be admitted. Mr. Gordon replied to the effect that "Damaged Goods" was the worst picture he had ever condemned, and if he were to pass it now, he would feel it his duty to give his sanction to every other production that he had ruled against. Rather than take such a step, he would tender his resignation.

To this, the attorney-general replied that Mr. Gordon's attitude left no way open for an amicable discussion of the difficulty, and the censor's resignation was thereby accepted without further comment. A successor to Mr. Gordon was found immediately, in Walter Hepburn, an alderman of Vancouver, well known throughout the community for his activities in the civic and business life of the city. Mr. Hepburn has no easy task before him, and if he is able to hold on to his thankless position as long as Mr. Gordon has done, he will have cause for congratulation. The experience of this province with "Damaged Goods" is really a strong demonstration that the position of censor is not only a thankless one, but an impossible one as well.

Theater Men On Outing Mid Leafy Scenes

Big Party from Vancouver Goes Up Indian River and Has Day of Thorough Enjoyment—Athletic Events and Merriment.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—As a relief from the gloomy atmosphere of operating room and orchestra pit, Vancouver's projection artists, musicians, and other theatrical workers took a trip to the Wigwam Inn, Indian River, one of the famous beauty spots in Canada. The outing was arranged by the Theatrical Federation, who did its best to make the occasion worthy. There were about two hundred in the party, and two large launches were chartered for the twenty-mile journey up the beautiful Burrard Inlet. A full band and orchestra were in attendance, awakening echoes from the towering mountains which rise sheer up from either side of the inlet. On arriving at Indian River, lunch was partaken of, and then the party wound its way up the beautiful Cathedral Canyon to view the historic falls known as the Spray of Pearls. Then the fun began in earnest.

Committee for Indian River Picnic, August, 1917.

Some donned their bathing suits and were soon splashing and swimming in the water; others made a dive for the canoes and paddled around under the shadow of the overhanging rocks and trees, while a goodly number adjourned to the dancing pavilion, from which the strains of the orchestra could be heard sending out an invitation to glide over the polished floor. A program of sports followed later, and great regret was expressed that a movie photographer had not been taken with the party, for some of the athletic events would have made a screen comedy that would have put Chaplin in the shade as a laugh producer. There were events for Operators versus Musicians, Pianists versus Drummers, Violinists versus Cornet Players, and so on throughout all the various occupations of those present.

The starters of the races hit upon the original idea of handicapping the players of wind instruments on the theory that the windy nature of their occupation gave them an advantage in lung power over the rest of the competitors. Like many other excellent theories, this one fell to the ground when put into actual practice, for there were operators, violinists, and others who put it all over the blowers of trombones and bassoons, even when the latter were not handicapped.

As the shades began to gather, an attempt was made to get the crowd together for a photograph, but it was found impossible to round them up on account of the innumerable by-ways, leafy lanes, and cosy corners with which the place abounds, and which had tempted so many away from the bunch. A group was taken of the committee, but even that lacks the smiling face of Ed Harrington, who could not be found anywhere. Of course immediately the shutter had clicked on the last plate in the camera, Ed emerged from the heart of the bush with a story of having been to view a piece of gorgeous scenery. A smile went round the company as he told of the distance he had been able to see, but for lack of evidence against him, the genial Ed was given the benefit of the doubt. The return trip was made by moonlight, and everybody was agreed that the Federation had more than succeeded in their efforts to make the day one never to be forgotten.

JAXON COMEDY.

DEVILLED CRABS (One Reel).—Pokes, a hod-carrier, has been discharged by Jabs, the contractor, and on his way home he stops at the saloon to drown his sorrows and partakes freely of devilled crabs and beer. When he arrives home his wife seats him before the fire to rest while she prepares supper. Strange sights appear to Pokes. The devil, with Jabs' face, comes out of the fireplace and Pokes signs a bond selling himself to Satan for a rousing good time.

His clothes immediately change and money rains on him. Pokes has a great time, but the devil is always at his elbow. Finally, he decides to rid himself of Satan or Jabs, whichever it is, and hides under the haystack, but it immediately catches fire and Pokes wakes with a wild cry to find that he has poked his feet into the blazing fire. His wife puts out the flames and says, "Come to supper, we have nice devilled crabs." Pokes' reply is left to the imagination, but there are a lot of broken dishes in the yard the next morning.

THE JOLLY TARS (One Reel).—Pokes and Jabs ship with Captain Bates as first-class seamen. When the captain wants his bearings they are both asleep but are soon aroused. Up aloft Pokes is amazed at the sights that greet his eye through the telescope. Jabs takes the telescope and wonderful things appear, among them some dancing girls at the county fair. They decide to take French leave, and are soon at the fair. The captain's wife and two daughters are there also, and while the girls accompany their gentlemen friends about the grounds, mother decides to have her palm read.

In her haste she leaves her handbag on the bench and Pokes and Jabs discover it, and their joy is supreme when they find in it a roll of bills. They proceed to the fair, and Pokes gives a wonderful exhibition of archery. Mother and the girls witness the arrow shooting and recognize the handbag. Pokes takes to his heels, and just as Jabs is about to be taken off by a policeman the wild animals break loose. Jabs is singled out by one of them and a race for life begins, ending at the hatchway of the ship. Jabs is about to give up when he gets the surprise of his life. "Did the bear eat Pokes or did Pokes eat the bear?"

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE LONESOME ROAD (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Buck Caperton (S. R. Jennings); Perry Roundtree (Chet Ryan); Marianna (Frances Parks); Bartender (Daniel J. Duffy). Directed by David Smith.

Buck Caperton and Perry Roundtree were inseparable companions, but when Marianna appeared on the scene and Perry fell for her, Buck, to whom woman was a sphinx, hied himself to parts unknown.

Six months later he wandered back and accidentally came upon Perry completely "Willieized" and busily engaged in watering a rose plant. Filled with scorn he tries to taunt Perry into returning to the way of a man. Perry admits that he would like just one more rip-roaring time, and as his wife is away for a few hours, he consents to join Buck, saying, however, that he must be home by seven. Buck nearly faints when Perry appears dressed as his wife had taught him to dress and carrying an umbrella. In the saloon Perry orders sarsaparilla and suggests a game of checks, and Buck, now feeling thoroughly disgraced, threatens the barkeeper with instant death if he allows it to leak through his hat that he (Buck) was ever found "fraternal" with sarsaparilla and checkers.

In the back room they are in the midst of a wild and exciting game of checkers when the Trimble gang arrive at the saloon and proceed to fill the place with lead. Perry calmly continues playing until it nears seven o'clock when, despite Buck's pleading, he arms himself with a table leg and fights his way through the bar-room. They reach Perry's house five minutes after seven and Mrs. Perry is waiting at the gate. Buck declines their invitation to come in. Plodding down the lonesome road he recalls the look the little woman gave Perry when she saw him coming back safe—and concludes that the fool in the game isn't Perry Roundtree after all.

THE LAW, NORTH OF 65 (Two Parts).—The cast: Pierre (Wheeler Oakman); Jeanne (Bessie Eyton); Niklo (Joe King); Ralph (Tom Mix). Directed by Colin Campbell.

Pierre, away in the Northland, loves Jeanne. His love is returned and they are engaged to be married. Pierre leaves for a trapping expedition, and in the meantime the girl is enamored with the tales told by Niklo, an itinerant trapper, and becomes infatuated with him. The girl's father becomes suspicious and drives the man from the cabin and orders his daughter to go with the stranger.

Pierre never forgets Jeanne and one night, while near Niklo's cabin, he hears a woman's screams and discovers that the man is mistreating the girl whom he, Pierre, yet loves. He rescues Jeanne from the brute, her husband, and is about to punish the man when Niklo accidentally meets his death. Pierre later continues his wooing of Jeanne as in the days of yore and happiness come to them both.

VENGEANCE VERSUS MERCY (One Reel).—The cast: Bob (Guy Oliver); Ralph Gunter (Ray Watson); Annie Sharp (Stella Razetto); Hed Daughter (Stella Razetto); Mr. Sharp, Annie's Father, (George Hernandez); Constable (Mr. C. E. Rogrs).

Bob, a country lad, loves Annie, daughter of the village's richest man. Ralph Gunter, a gentleman crook, enters into the village life. He wins Annie. Ralph is threatened with exposure by a city pal unless he comes through with $500. The man plans to rob Annie's father. Bob detects Ralph trying to break into the house.

In the excitement Ralph escapes and Bob is mistaken for the would-be robber and is given a term in prison. He vows to slay Ralph. In later years Bob traces Ralph, covers him with a rifle and is about to pull the trigger when he sees a girl with the man. The girl is Ralph's daughter and closely resembles her dead mother. On seeing the girl's face a flood of memories loosens Bob's grip on the trigger and he allows his long-cherished vengeance to pass him by.

KICKED IN THE KITCHEN (One Reel—Rel. Week of Oct. 1.).—The cast: Sir George Gravy (Max Asher); Sir Henry Spoon (Dave Morris); Miss Van Hillside (Gladys Tennyson). Written by C. B. Hoadley. Produced by Craig Hutchinson.

Sir George Gravy and Sir Henry Spoon, lounging on park benches, decided to take in the party at the Hillsides. They strolled up to the grounds of the Hillsides' estate, and heard splashing sounds coming from the distance. They followed the noise, and come upon a select swimming-pool party, which was being given for Gladys, the Hillside's pretty daughter. The two well-dressed strangers were welcomed, and escorted to the pool. Here Sir George had the good fortune to save Gladys, by hauling her out of the water as she was going down for the last time. He was greeted by the guests as a hero.

After their experience, the two gentlemen returned to their accustomed duties, which were none other than cook and waiter at a local beanery. Here they pursued their duties, chopping up the whiskbroom when a guest called for shredded wheat, and cutting the heel off a rubber boot to make a beefsteak sandwich.

As luck would have it, the Hillsides decided to come to their restaurant for supper. The waiter pretended to have the mumps, and tied up his face in a napkin, but the cat was out of the bag when the Hillsides asked to see the cook personally to compliment him on the dinner.

Cookie, snatching time to put up on his good coat and his silk hat, sauntered out to their table and tried to get away with the statement that he was a social uplifter, studying the conditions of cooks.

"Bring the gentleman a chair!" cried Mr. Hillside, when Gladys had again thanked her preserver.

"Gentleman my eye!" remarked the heartless waiter he addressed. "He's the cook!"

Back to the kitchen he went.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE NO. 39 (Oct 5).

The testing and bottling of milk is the first subject of the Screen Magazine, Issue No. 39. Milk is valueless as food unless it contains the proper proportion of fat. A scientific test is necessary to determine this proportion. The process af pasteurizing milk is a long and complicated one, and is interestingly shown.

Menhaden fishing on the coast of North Carolina is seen next. Billions are caught every year, and used to furnish the best grade of oil. When a school is located, the boats go out after the fish with immense purse nets. The nets are drawn in to shore, and with the ship as a base and two boats as sides, forming a triangle, the nets are gradually brought to the surface. A scoop net of three-barrel capacity hoists the fish and dumps them into the ship. In an oil-press plant the oil is extracted by an intricate process.

More "Better Babies" pictures are shown this week. Exercises arranged and directed by Bernarr MacFaden, show how children can be developed in the back yard by the use of simple apparatus, which any one who has a little ground, can erect. One of the little girls demonstrates her progress. She is only ten, but has the strength of a boy of fifteen. She can chin herself fourteen times.

New inventions are illustrated by a demonstration of music by wireless. Music can now be sent through the air the same as a message, by a new attachment. One phonograph can serve hundreds of homes, provided they are equipped with receiving apparatus. We see people dancing to its music, heard over a distance of one hundred miles.

A "Miracle in Mud," by Willie Hopkins, the noted sculptor, completes the issue.

JOKER.

HER NAUGHTY CHOICE (One Reel—Rel. Oct. 1).—The cast: Lizzie (Gale Henry); Hector (William Franey); The Fox (Milburn Morante); Pete (Charles Haefli). Scenario by Tom Gibson. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Lizzie is reading again the will of her uncle, by which she came into the possession of the only department store in town. Lizzie loves Hector, her assistant in the store, and they have been intending to marry over since Uncle passed away, but they have always put it off.

According to the will, Lizzie has to marry within three months of the date of her uncle's death. There is only one day left, and Hector hurries for the minister.

But the Fox has been waiting his opportunity. He has it all framed with Hector to make him think that he committed a crime of the deadliest nature. He approaches his victim, shows him the evidence he has collected, and threatens to have him arrested unless he writes a note relinquishing all claim to Lizzie, and saying that he has eloped with another.

The Fox takes the note to Lizzie, who is perturbed beyond measure. The Fox proposes to Lizzie, and she accepts him. The Fox leaves her to frame a fake marriage with one of his pals for the minister.

With every intention of getting out of town, Hector finds it impossible. He has left the only money he possesses in the ticking of his bed, over the store. Nothing for it, but to return. He sneaks into the store, in deadly fear of capture. He has just time to hide in the ice-box, when the Fox and the fake minister come in. From the chilly interior of the ice-box Hector has to watch another man wedding his Lizzie and her millions. Circumstances move in Hector's favor, and the end shows Lizzie and her lover rushing to the nearest church.

THE MASKED MARVELS (One Reel—Rel. Week of Oct. 1). The cast: Gale (Gale Henry); Milt (Milton Sims). Scenario by C. J. Wilson, Jr. Directed by Allen Curtis.

The quarrel between the cook and the butler concerning the fitness of women as detectives progresses at such speed that dinner is delayed until the mistress of the house, tired of waiting, fires both of them.

The police are baffled by a series of unexplained burglaries. They are open to argument, when Gale appears at headquarters and tells them that she can catch anything from a mouse to a man. They give her the address of the house most lately robbed, telling her that the burglars will be sure to return to the scene of their crime.

Soon after, Milt enters, and is given the same assignment. Under cover of darkness, both sleuths set out for the house, carrying a large assortment of disguises. They meet each other, and each thinks the other a crook.

Gale hurries to the owner of the house and tells him that she has a burglar shut up in a clothes closet. The owner grabs Milt, who explains that he is from headquarters, and that Gale is the crook.

Then the owner goes after Gale. The two sleuths jump on each other, and roll downstairs together. Their wigs fall off, and they recognize each other. When the police arrive to have their laugh at the expense of the amateurs, they find the two sleuths tied up and a note from the owner saying that he was the real crook.

STAR FEATURETTE.

A PRAIRIE ROMEO (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 1).—The cast: Billy Bones (George Hernandez); Priscilla Duff (Martha Maddox); Harvey Campbell (George Chesbro); The Sheriff (Jack Curtis); Night Agent (George Pettie). Written and produced by Lynn F. Reynolds.

Billy Bones was in love. The object of his affections was Priscilla Duff, cook at the boss's house. The boss was the owner of the Lazy W Ranch, and he was a hot-tempered young man named Harvey Campbell. That night Billy took his banjo and went out to sit under the kitchen window and indulge his soul in song. Harvey, who had taken a headache to bed with him, failed to appreciate Billy's musical efforts. He stole down-stairs into the kitchen, and was in time to hear Priscilla say, leaning out of the window as she spoke:

"Wait a minute, Billy. I've got something for you." She turned away to get a pie she had baked, and Harvey, snatching up a pan of potato peelings, emptied it on the singer's head. The shock to Billy's tender sensibilities was great. Nothing would soothe it but liquor, and he rode to town to get it.

The night agent at Ratchita, twenty miles away, while napping, is suddenly attacked by a number of bandits. He is forced to open the safe. The money taken, the bandits leave him bound in a chair. The day agent releases the bound man and they notify John O'Keefe, sheriff, who starts out, after appointing seven deputies. Billy wants to go with them, but the sheriff refuses to let him, saying that Billy is too fat and too drunk. When he insists, O'Keefe has two deputies to put him in a cell.

Meanwhile, Campbell and the cowboys are amused by a note left by Billy, asking the boss to leave his pay at the Oasis Bar, as he has quit. Billy manages to escape from jail, goes to the saloon and hears the sheriff saying that they lost the trail at Cactus Flats, but have wired Dobie to head the bandits off. Billy returns to the cell and is allowed to leave by O'Keefe. He comes into the jail again and holds up the sheriff and his deputies, disarming them. He phones the bartender, who rushes to talk with Campbell, and they hurry to the jail where Billy shows them some eye pieces cut out of bandannas that he found underneath his cell and suggests that they will find the money in the safe. At first O'Keefe refuses to open the safe, but Billy forces him to, and the money is there.

Billy tells Campbell that there never was a woman who could be trusted with an honest man's love. Campbell tells Billy that Miss Duff has been crying her eyes out because he, Billy, left and that somebody else must have thrown the peelings at him. With sudden comprehension, Billy whirls out of the door and starts to the ranch, playing his banjo and singing at the top of his voice.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE GRAY GHOST (Episode No. 14—"At Bay"—Two Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 1).—The cast; Morn Light (Priscilla Dean); The Gray Ghost (Harry Carter); Wade Hildreth (Emory Johnson); Marco (Eddie Polo); Arabin (Howard Crampton); Jerry Tryon (Lou Short); Cecelia (Gypsy Hart); Commissioner (Sidney Dean).

"Search the ruins, quick!" cries the Commissioner, as the House of Mystery goes up in the smoke of the explosion. Tryon and Marco, with the rest of the police officers, search the ruins for the bodies of Morn Light and Hildreth, for they are convinced that both must have been killed. They discover an underground chamber, where Morn Light and Hildreth are found safe. In the confusion, however, The Gray Ghost, Cecelia and two of his confederates have escaped. The others are safely in handcuffs.

At last it seems Hildreth and Morn Light will be married. Hildreth is with Morn Light, making arrangements for the ceremony that night, and after cautioning her to have everything ready, he leaves to prepare for the event.

Cecelia has hastened to the crook's room, and realizing that The Gray Ghost is lost to her, determines to kill him. She hears the others coming, and sees The Gray Ghost is in the lead. Slipping behind the door, she holds a knife poised ready to strike. One of the crooks enters, however, and her attempt is again frustrated. The Gray Ghost enters, and as he is determined to marry Morn Light that night, he gives his confederates instructions.

Marco leads the Commissioner, Tryon and Arabin to the crook's house. He enters alone, telling them that should he not return within a short length of time to follow him. The Gray Ghost and the two crooks are just leaving when Marco comes to the door. They overpower him and throw him down the elevator shaft. One of the crooks sees the other members of the party entering the house, and they are successful in overpowering the whole party. They are tied up and the crooks leave with Cecelia. Before leaving, The Gray Ghost arranges a device on the telephone bell so that when the telephone rings a bomb will be exploded and destroy the party. He tells them that he will call up just before the marriage that night, and tell them good-by. He and the crooks then set out for Morn Light's.

Hildreth, having made final arrangements and secured his license, is with Morn Light, and they are waiting the arrival of his minister. The Gray Ghost knocks at the door and, thinking it is the minister, Morn Light admits him. Both she and Hildreth are overpowered, and The Gray Ghost displays another license, and says that he intends to marry Morn Light himself. Two of the crooks take Hildreth behind a screen and hold a knife against his heart. The Gray Ghost tells Morn Light that unless she follows his instruction Hildreth will be killed.

The preacher arrives, and while surprised at not finding Hildreth, has his suspicions allayed by Morn Light, who, fearing Hildreth's death, agrees to everything The Gray Ghost suggests. Marco has finally revived and after several attempts climbs up the walls of the shaft and reaches the upper floor. The Gray Ghost thinks of his promise and, going to the phone, calls up his own apartment, believing that when the bell rings the explosion will take place. Marco finds the door locked, but hearing a scuffling inside, breaks his way in as Tryon indicates the telephone.

GOLD SEAL.

THE STORM WOMAN (Three Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 1).—The cast: The Woman (Claire McDowell); The Cub (Henry Hathaway); The Older Reporter (Joseph Girard); Nina Martelli (Violet Schramm); Her Father (George Pearce); Guy Trumbull (Morris Foster). Scenario and production by Ruth Ann Baldwin.

Over a plate of beans in a cheap restaurant an elderly reporter in reply to a question from a cub, asking about a mysterious woman in black and her fortune-telling parrakeets, relates the following story:

"Fifteen years ago Maria and Nina Martelli lived with their old father in Italy. Maria, the older girl, had known care but not tragedy, and Nina, a gay child of sixteen, was wholly irresponsible. Guy Trumbull, supposed by his wealthy parents to be touring Italy, but held in the village because of a chance meeting with Nina, had fallen in love with the child, and she was in love with him. He bought her a pair of parrakeets and Nina adored the birds because he bought them. The days flew into the past, and Guy transferred his affections to Maria. One day he told her that he loved her, not Nina, and pleaded with her to go to America with him. Maria repulsed him, but he grabbed her into his arms and was kissing her when Nina came upon them. Nina screamed and fought her sister. Then throwing herself on Guy's neck, she told him he couldn't go away and leave her. The father heard, and understood, and later the truth dawned upon Maria. Maria snatched the whip from her father, and as he threatened her with his fist, he clutched his heart and sank to the ground—dead.

"That night Nina slipped from the house and before Maria could stop her, threw herself over a cliff. She did not die, but her body was broken past help. Then the desire for vengeance grew in Maria's heart, and after years of saving, they came to New York, where Trumbull lived. Maria set herself to haunt Trumbull. Everywhere he went he saw her—a ghost of his own cruelty—and at last his body was found, with Maria gloating over it. The coroner's verdict was heart disease, so they could not hold Maria for the murder, but the truth was that Trumbull had died of fear."

As the two men went out of the restaurant they saw that it was raining heavily. The cub went across the street and asked the woman in black if he could go with her and meet her invalid sister. The woman thought the young man was joking with her and told him that she was going home to her husband and children. She pointed to a huge umbrella, which lifted, showing four lusty youngsters, and a large and husky Italian.

"What's the idea?" demanded the cub, crossing over again to the older man, who was laughing.

"Well, I thought that was a pretty good story for a cup of coffee and a plate of beans."

COUNTING ON THE COUNT (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 1).—Lucille was playing with her kitten in the yard. Breakfast was ready and papa was looking for her. He found her in the yard and as he approached her the kitten ran up his back under his coat. Papa took Lucille in, and breakfast went on. The kitten crawled out of his coat and into his cereal dish, and in putting her out of the room he dragged the electric toaster onto his chair and then sat on it. Papa received a letter from his cousin, telling him of the arrival in town of the Count de Fromage. Soon after the Count himself appeared. Father and mother looked high and low for Lucille, for the idea of making her a Countess appealed to them. But she had run away to the farm, where lived her uncle and aunt and her cousin Bill.

Lucille dressed herself in a suit of Bill's overalls, and just as she was changing, one of the farmhands burst into her room. Bill heard her scream, and came to her rescue. In the meantime, father and mother had set out in their car to the farm, with the Count in tow. Bill had just found a nest of eggs in a corn field, and after sitting on it for a few moments, the chicks were all hatched. Lucille had a lovely time with the chickens, but the arrival of the Count spoiled everything. She called Bill to her aid, and they pushed the poor man into the haylift, and hauled him up into the loft. Then they let go suddenly and he fell plunk into the horse-trough. The Count had a horrid time, but it didn't help Lucille much, for her parents accepted him for her, and the wedding was announced.

The guests were all assembled, and the unwilling bride was dressing upstairs. At last she had an idea. Calling one of the powdered footmen, she made him change clothes with her. Bill, in the meantime, had met the Count and made him his own. He tore off the nobleman's mustache, and pasted it on to his own face. Then he took the groom's place at the wedding. The ceremony is in progress, when a detective arrives to arrest the Count. Lucille, standing by the footman-bride, is chuckling over the deception about to be practiced on the Count, when she suddenly recognizes the feet of Bill. She shrieks, and tears the veil from the footman-bride; the right man is arrested, and Bill and Lucille are married.

THE LOST EXPRESS (Chapter Four, "The Oil Well Conspiracy"—Two Parts—Oct. 8).—Valquez, diplomatic crook, orders Helen, unconscious, conveyed from the Valquez property. He insists that no member of the family of General Thurston must be about his plant. Valquez fears discovery of "The Lost Express."

Pitts makes arrangements for Helen's removal to the Thurston home. Medical examination displays no serious injury. Helen puzzles the doctor. Her eyes open and close. Is she shamming?

Valquez pays "The Baron" and "The Leech" for the stolen duplicate. They are shadowed by the railway secret service men, who watch them count the $100,000 they have received from Valquez. Murphy is on the trail.

Valquez discovers that something is missing from the blueprint of the combustion chamber. He determines not to trust "The Baron" or "The Leech" again. He seeks out "The Lost Express' to solve the mystery.

Pitts, alias "Harelip," decides the safest thing is to make Helen marry him and end his plotting. Helen refuses.

"Harelip" decides to aid Valquez and he is first to reach the hidden train. He finds the missing part of the machine, hiding himself in a deserted shack.

Helen trails Pitts. She finds him as "Harelip." She enters the shack when he is away and smashes the model he has hidden there. Helen escapes from "Harelip" when a wild oil car jumps the track and wrecks the building just as she has left it.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

QUEEN X (Five Parts—Oct. 1).—The cast: Janice Waltham (Edna Goodrich); George Evans (Hugh Thompson); Miriam Evans (Lucille Taft); Mrs. Evans (Miss Dora Adams); Arnold Summers (William Wolcott); Nippo (Jack Hopkins); Togo (P. Tamato). Directed by John B. O'Brien.

"Queen X" is the story of a courageous district attorney's drive against smugglers in the notorious Pell Street district, in which his men capture "Queen X," known among Chinese and the white members of smuggling gangs as "The Queen of Chinatown."

From this important capture begins one of the most sensational stories of underground intrigue ever developed. "Queen X" is recognized by the United States district attorney as a woman of position, formerly prominent in New York society, who has become a drug addict. In her blind pursuit of the black smoke she becomes familiar with secrets of the smugglers, and they, fearing that she may recover and betray them, keep her imprisoned in underground dens, steeped in the fumes of opium.

During trial of "Queen X" for complicity in a plot to defraud the government, she is seen and recognized by Mary Stone, sister of John Stone, the assistant district attorney, as a former schoolmate who saved her life in a convent fire. Mary is successful in having sentence suspended in the case and she takes "Queen X" to her brother's summer home upstate in an effort to restore her to health.

Stone's purpose in assenting to this arrangement is to secure information of the opium ring from his visitor. During the process he is much attracted by the girl's beauty and it is apparent that she is attracted by him.

Much interested in the young woman, Stone endeavors to develop her will power in order that she may definitely conquer the drug. In this he is successful, and then, on the suggestion of his chief, proceeds to make love to "Queen X," with the plan of inducing her to reveal secrets of the smugglers. This ruse is successful but it results in unlooked for complications.

The intimacies necessitated by this plan cause Stone to be caught in his own trap, for he soon discovers that the love he is simulating is no longer make-believe. Convinced that "Queen X" loves him, he confesses his affection for her and becomes her protector for life.

HER COUNTRY'S CALL (American—Five Parts—Oct. 1).—The cast: Jess Slocum (Mary Miles Minter); Captain Earle Neville (Alan Forrest); Jim Slocum (George Periolat); Colonel Tremaine (Harry A. Barrows); Marie Tremaine (Margaret Shelby); John Reynolds (Ashton Dearholt); Miss Neville (Nellie Widen); Dr. Downie (Spottiswoode Aitken).

Jess Slocum, a mountain elf, lives with her dad, Jim Slocum, in a cabin high on the mountain side. She has been reared without companions. Old Jim holds a bitter hatred of the flag and the soldiers who drill in the valley town of Flagstone. Finally Jess makes him admit that he is embittered over the fact that fifteen years before he had been drummed out of camp on the charge of being a bootlegger.

Jess meets young Captain Earle Neville. She begins to show an immediate interest in pretty clothes and coaxes her dad to buy her a new dress. She is happily trying it on when a bullet enters the cabin and wounds her in the shoulder. It had been fired by a member of Captain Neville's squad of secret service men who were pursuing Jim Slocum for "moonshining."

Jess is taken to Captain Neville's home and nursed by his sister. The captain teaches her to love the flag and to sound the bugle calls. She is shunned as the daughter of a jailbird by the girls of the town.

Jess starts back to the cabin and on the way meets John Reynolds, who has been fomenting border trouble. She sees him tear down the flag and shoots him. She mounts a horse and hurries back to town, sounding the "call to arms." The home guards turn out to defend the town against the outlaws.

Jim Slocum, in prison, confesses that he is not Jess' father. He had stolen the child as a baby from the home of Colonel Tremaine as revenge for being drummed out of camp. She finds a father and a sister and a handsome husband.

STRAND COMEDY.

SOME NURSE (One Reel—Oct. 2).—Billie is the girl of Jay's dreams, but the fickle creature leaves him on the curb while she goes to ride with Jack, another suitor. Jay wanders down the street in dejection when he suddenly spies an item in a newspaper telling how a young heiress has just married a man whom she injured with her automobile. He spies Billie and Jack coming down the street with Billie at the wheel of Jack's car. He steps off the curb just in time to be struck by the machine. He is carried into the doctor's house and put into bed.

Jack, sighting a clipping which has fallen from Jay's pocket, and realizing what his rival has done, gets himself into a similar predicament and is carried into the room with Jay. Billie discovers the scheme and organizes a conspiracy with the doctor. The medic orders Jay steamed and Jack put into an ice pack. The hospital huskies have just got the treatment well started, the patients have just begun to suffer, when the doctor announces that a mistake has been made and orders the treatment reversed. The patients are finally released, and as they jump out of bed they see Billie speeding down the street in Jack's new car with the doctor at her side.

JERRY IN YODEL LAND (Oct. 4).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); The Major (Joe Hazelton); His Daughter (Claire Alexander); Bandit Chief (Geo. Gebhart); Chief's Lieutenant (H. M. Lindley); High (Fernando Galvez); Low (G. M. Morong). Directed by Milton H. Fahrney.

Jerry arrives in Tyrol with a wallet stuffed with "moving picture money" and riding a "trained and educated" bicycle. He is held up by bandits and robbed of his wallet and bicycle. He succeeds in creeping away from his captors and whistling to his trusty wheel. It comes to him and he makes good his escape.

He meets a gouty, retired army officer riding in a wheel chair pushed by a surly attendant. The officer is accompanied by his daughter. The attendant, through carelessness, injures the old man's gouty foot and is discharged. Jerry is engaged to take his place.

The bandits have, in the meantime, gone to the nearby inn to spend their ill-gotten gains and are having trouble over Jerry's bogus money. He arrives on the scene on an errand and routs the bandits. They fall in with the rascally attendant, and guided by him, make the old officer and daughter prisoners. Jerry outwits and defeats the bandits and rescues them. He then takes the bandit chief prisoner and ties him in the wheel chair. The path is a steep one. The chair breaks away and runs off the edge of a high cliff. The chair is utterly demolished by the fall, but the chief rises unhurt from the wreckage.

BEHIND THE MASK (U. S. Amusement Corp.—Five Parts—Sept. 3).—The cast: Margaret Stanton (Catherine Calvert); Lord Strathmore (Richard Tucker); Mark Harrold. (Kirke Brown); Stanton (Charles Dungan); Helen Harrold (Flora Nason); Larrabee (Charles Holton). Written by Charles T. Dazey. Directed by Mme. Alice Blache.

Margaret, daughter of Stanton, who was ruined by Harrold, determines to revenge her father's memory. She decides to strike at his enemy through the man's daughter, in whom his happiness is tied up. Lord Strathmore is engaged to the daughter, Helen, and Margaret realizes that the greatest blow that she can strike the family is to win him away from her, thus depriving her of the title and position she craves, and humiliating her before society. She gradually wins Strathmore's attention, and one day, while wandering in the mountains with him, contrives to lose the path, so they are forced to spend the night alone.

Strathmore, rather than have her compromised, offers to marry her the next morning, and she accepts gladly. Later, however, she tells him she does not love him, and leaves him, fleeing to the south. After her child is born she is stricken by an illness which leaves her blind. Strathmore, after a weary search, finds her and seeing her state, does not disclose his identity. On account of her blindness his deception is made possible and he helps her financially by pretending to be an old friend of her father's. An operation restores her sight, and she sees for the first time that her benefactor is the man she deceived. A reconciliation takes place, and the two start their wedded life again on a basis of love and trust.

KIDNAPPED (on Conquest Program No. 9—Edison-Perfection Picture—5 Parts—Sept. 8.)—The cast: Ebenezer Balfour (Joseph Burke); David (Ray McKee); Ransome (Ray Haller); Rankeiller (Wm. Wadsworth); Alan Breck (Robert Cain).

Ebenezer Balfour, a miser, leads a solitary existence on the estate of Shaws, which he occupies through the generosity of his older brother, Alexander. Ebenezer receives a letter from Rankeiller, the lawyer, telling him that Alexander is dead and that his son, David, is on his way to claim the property, though he is as yet ignorant of his good fortune. Ebenezer determines by fair means or foul to keep possession of the estate, and when David arrives he receives him with scant courtesy.

Before the erstwhile Laird of Shaws formulates a plan to rid himself of the lad, David discovers from lines written by his father when he was a boy that his uncle is the younger brother and he himself the heir to Shaws. When he demands a reckoning, Ebenezer sends him after a chest of papers in an ancient tower. As David ascends the staircase, guided only by flashes of lightning from the storm raging without, he narrowly escapes death from a step Ebenezer has hewed down and propped up with a loose board. Returning to Ebenezer, he demands an explanation, and announces that they will go to see the lawyer next day.

On the morning comes a message from Hoseason, the unscrupulous master of the trading ship Covenant. Ebenezer pays him to take David aboard and sell him as a slave in the Carolinas, whither the brig is bound. Rendered unconscious by a blow on the head the boy is carried aboard and awakes at sea, dazed and ill. When Ransome, the cabin boy, is killed by the brutal first mate, David is made to serve in his place.

Two nights later, off the Highland coast, the brig runs down a rowboat and there climbs aboard Alan Breck, an adventurer, an outlaw, and a gentleman, an adherent of the exiled Stuart king. For thirty guineas Hoseason agrees to put him on the Scottish shore, and then plots to rob him of his money belt. David overhears and warns Alan, offering to help him against the villainous crew. A one-sided fight follows, in which the two heroes, far outnumbered, barricade themselves in the roundhouse, where all ammunition is stored. After killing half their adversaries they outwit the remaining ones and escape to shore in the ship's boat. Arriving again at Shaws, David goes directly to the home of Rankeiller, the lawyer, and relates to him the happenings of the past few weeks. By a clever ruse on the part of Alan Breck, who represents himself as Hoseason's messenger, Ebenezer exposes himself as the unscrupulous rascal that he is, and is forced to make reparation to David. The new Laird of Shaws offers to share all he has with his friend, but Alan elects to remain an outlaw in the service of the king he loves, and after an affectionate farewell the two comrades part.

LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD (On Conquest Program No. 9—500 feet).—A novel and clever interpretation of this well beloved nursery tale in an animated silhouette.

QUAINT PROVINCETOWN (On Conquest Program No. 9—500 feet).—The scenic starts with a panoramic view of Provincetown, taken from the top of the Pilgrims' Monument. Situated on the tip end of Cape Cod, Provincetown is the favorite rendezvous for artists and fisher-folk. Crooked, narrow streets, lined with ancient shade trees and quaint old houses, zig-zag through it. Life is almost primitively simple and bears many survivals of olden times. Such symbols of civilization as dashing, crashing motor trucks and brass-buttoned cops are considered as myths. "Ye Olde Towne Crier" is still wandering through the streets, calling out the news of a sale, a death or a scandal. Life is an unceasing round of amusements for kiddies and artists.

FRIENDS, ROMANS, AND LEO (On Conquest Program No. 9—1000 feet).—The cast: Mulius Caesar (William Wadsworth); Myria (Juanita Fletcher); Liarus Bunko (Harry McDonough); Plento Morpheus (Ray McKee); Leo (William Fables).

Mulius Caesar, a great Roman Emperor, owes an odd number of millions to Liarus Bunko, the royal soothsayer and money-lender. He could pay off his debts by selling the royal garage, but this is too desperate a means to be given a moment's thought. Bunko is willing to content himself with Myria, the emperor's beautiful daughter, and call it "square." Myria hates Bunko, but is willing to sacrifice herself if she can save thereby the royal garage. At the betrothal banquet Bunko presents her with a lazy slave, called Plento Morpheus. Plento falls at once in love with Myria, and flirts with her in the presence of Caesar and Bunko. He is sentenced to be eaten up by Leo, the terrible lion. Cast into the arena, he succeeds in outwitting his tormentors, and in substituting Bunko for himself as food for the MISROSCOPIC POND LIFE (On Conquest Program No. 9—350 feet).—In this film our eyes gaze uupon a stagnant pool of water, the embodiment of lifelessness and decay, and it strikes us as wilder than the most preposterous figments of a dream to consider it as something that is in reality teeming with life. It is difficult to conceive of millions upon millions of animals inhabiting every drop of water in that immobile mass, animals that move and eat and breathe and struggle just like humans. The fault is our own. What we do not see we consider as non-existent. But let us place a tiny drop of this inert liquid on a misroscopic slide and place our eye to the lens of the microscope, and we make the discovery that there are numberless varieties of living forms floating around in it, each so infinitesimal that myriads of them placed side by side or end to end would hardly equal the width of a needle's eye, yet each provided with a full set of organs that carry on the complex processes of life.

A CONTENTED WOMAN (Selig-Hoyt Comedy—Two Parts—Sept. 17).—The cast: Uncle Todie (Wm. Fables); Benton Holme (James Harris); Helena Wrangle (Amy Dennis); Aunt Jim (Mrs. Jule Walters); Theatrical Manager (Fred Eckhart); The Sheriff (James West). Directed by J. A. Richmond.

Aunt Jim becomes peeved when Uncle Todie, her husband, and Benton Holme, their nephew, read the morning newspapers and pay her no attention. An argument ensues in which Uncle Todie and Benton Holme assert that man is woman's superior in everything. Aunt Jim states in that case they may remain home and get dinner while she presides at a suffragette's meeting.

While Aunt Jim is making a scathing speech at the meeting and denouncing the attitude of mere man, Uncle Todie and Benton attempt to prepare a meal and, after messing everything up in the kitchen, decide to patronize a caterer and then go to a show.

At the theatre, Benton Holmes discovers that Helena Wrangle, leading lady, is an old acquaintance, and they both go "back" to visit with her. Uncle Todie is completely dazzled by Helena and the girls. When the Sheriff and four irate landlords from four small towns arrive and threaten to tie up the show unless $13.36 is forthcoming, Uncle Todie proves an easy victim and, with Helena Wrangle, he hotfoots it to rob his penny bank. But Aunt Jim arrives and there is a terrible time trying to stall her and get Helena out by disguising her as a chair. When success comes and Uncle Todie is giving Aunt Jim the lecture of her life about the superiority of man, the caterer comes in with the dinner and spoils the situation.

THE AWAKENING OF RUTH (Edison—Perfection Picture—Five Parts—Sept. 17). The cast: Robt. Winthrop (Donald MacClennan); Ruth Hoagland (Shirley Mason); Reuben Hoagland (Joseph Burke); the Rev. Josiah Arbuthnot (Wm. Hayes); Dr. Wm. Strong (Donald Hall); Fay Harrington (Sally Crute); Mrs. Greer (Jessie Stevens); Joseph Ulrich (Edward Elkas). Written by Lucien Hubbard. Directed by E. H. Griffith.

Robert Winthrop and his friends, seeking fun and adventure aboard his yacht, "The Skylark," cruise through the Florida Keys. As they near Hoagland's Island, the captain remarks that pirates used to bury their treasures there years ago. Bob decides to go in search of treasures. He sets sail alone in a small sail boat.

As Bob sails along the coast of the island, the rudder of his boat is jerked from his hand, and as he sets about to repair it, is startled by the appearance of a girl known as Ruth Hoagland, daughter of the owner of the island. In the course of passing weeks, Bob makes many trips to see Ruth, always sure to avoid her father, who has a gun ever ready for the reception of trespassers, for the old man is demented and spends all his time searching for treasures.

A great love between Bob and Ruth develops, and as the season draws to a close, he comes with the news that he must return to the city. A year passes and Bob does not return, for he has forgotten the little girl. One day, while roving about the island, Ruth comes upon two chests. She hurries to get her father to assist her to open them, and finds him lying unconscious with blood streaming down his body. He had fallen down a ravine. Ruth makes him as comfortable as possible, and hurries to the mainland for aid.

On the mainland Ruth encounters the Rev. Doctor Arbuthnot, who listens to her story, and goes with her in search of Dr. Strong. They go to the aid of her father, but it is too late—Fate decreed that he die. Rev. Arbuthnot and Dr. Strong are in a quandary as to what to do for Ruth. Strong, from the bigness of his heart offers to marry Ruth. She refuses his kind offer, feeling certain that Bob will some day return.

After calm is maintained, Ruth tells the Reverend and Strong of her find, and offers to share her fortune with them. As they approach the spot, Strong is the first to notice the word "dynamite" written on the chests. He suggests that the Reverend and Ruth take a walk until he gets the tools to open them.

Strong and Rev. Arbuthnot decide that Ruth must not know that the chests are worthless and arrange to send her to New York to realize her life's ambition to become a singer, telling her that the money they have given her to pursue her studies is what they received for the contents of the chests.

In New York, Ruth's and Bob's path cross as she goes to him, as manager of a show (not knowing it is Bob), for an appointment. While at his office she encounters Fay of the Follies, who has Bob much under her control, and who influences him not to give Ruth an appointment. Ruth returns to Mrs. Greer, the woman Strong had sent to chaperon her.

Ulrich, New York's greatest theatrical manager, who sent Ruth to Bob, is angered at his refusal to engage Ruth, and he gets her another appointment, and gives her several weeks to rest prior to her long engagement, during which time she returns to the island.

Meanwhile, Bob learns of Ruth's whereabouts, and hurries to atone for his action, but Ruth's faith in him is shattered, and she bids him leave her. It is later discovered by Ruth that the chests she found were worthless, and she then realizes Strong's supreme sacrifice and his great love for her. It takes but little time for her own love to awaken for Strong, who enjoys the just reward for his self-denying devotion. While he holds her in his arms, Arbuthnot is regaling himself in the telling of the unusual love affair to Mrs. Greer.

FOOLS FOR LUCK (Essanay—Five Parts—Oct. 8).—The cast: Philander Jepson (Taylor Holmes); Brunhilda (Helen Ferguson); Papa (Bobbie Bolder); Mamma (Frankie Raymond).

As an accountant Philander Jepson was a corking good gambler. He knew Dame Fortune has cast her optics on him at the start of his career and played his hands with corresponding confidence. After plucking a select bunch of cronies for a considerable wad he caressed his rabbit's foot and started on the annual two-weeks' tour of the summer resorts. Enter Brunhilda, a young lady of quite some appearance, whose parents regard her as the family jewel and stood watch accordingly. In the eyes of Philander this surveillance was nothing more nor less than a dare. The result was romance.

Unfortunately, at just this time Madame Fortune took a much-needed rest and trouble suddenly planted itself squarely in young Jepson's path. Brunhilda's pater discovered all there was to know about his gambling proclivities, and the gamblers suddenly proved that a bartender's foot on a victim's chair out-jinxes the strongest combination of horseshoes and four-leaf clovers. When Philander realized what he was up against he determined to make a fresh start.

Rather, he commenced to start for, after leaving his former job by request, the best he could land was fifty dollars a week work for ten per. He cast tokens, signs and omens to the winds, and strange to relate, found things were actually breaking right for him. And then, when he took the annual outing and discovered Brunhilda knew all about his changed circumstances—had been watching him all the time from a distance and thought more of him than ever—well, he could only feel thankful that good sense came to him as soon as it did.

NATIONAL MAZDA

THE WAY TO BETTER LIGHT

Nothing to Watch but the Film

New Lamp Requires No Attention

For practically every important application of light there has been developed a NATIONAL MAZDA lamp especially suited to the purpose—as, for example, for the lighting of homes, theatres, stores and factories; for streets, street cars, trains and automobiles; for lighthouses, search lights and electric lanterns; and so on through a long list.

It has been certain from the beginning that there would one day be a NATIONAL MAZDA lamp with which motion pictures could be projected at a practical cost.

Here it is.

It reduces the cost of operation.

It gives an absolutely flickerless light. It sharpens and steadies the pictures. It requires no attention or adjustment. It leaves the operator "nothing to watch but the film." It reduces the fire hazard. It does not contaminate the air in the operator's booth.

It has been thoroughly tested by more than a year's use. Its working efficiency and operating cost have been determined.

If you will describe the size and projector-equipment of your theatre, we can state what results you may expect from this lamp—or any motion picture supply house can give you the information. Nela Specialties Division, National Lamp Works of General Electric Co., 137 Nela Park, Cleveland, O.

the refugees. The Austrians follow. By a spectacular leap, Maciste unseats one of the enemy and rides off pursued by his would-be captors, while his companions escape. The giant warrior fells a horse with his fist and using one Austrian as a human club, routs the entire band. After many thrilling adventures he reaches Italian headquatrers and becomes an Alpino. He decides to capture the Austrian captain, Fritz Pluffer, single handed. Scaling sheer mountain walls and crossing narrow ledge high in the air, Maciste makes the dangerous ascent. Encountering three Austrians, he places one under each arm and the third on his back, proceeding on. Using one for a sled, he drives the other two in team, in this manner making a steep and dangerous descent. In camp he places his prisoners under guard. The slippery Pluffer escapes. Maciste induces his captain to attack the Austrian stronghold. Led by an Alpine guide they scale the mountain heights with men, artillery and supplies. Working hand over hand by ropes up the sheer walls, dangling thousands of feet over gaping space, these scenes are the most inspiring and thrilling war views ever taken and have been preserved in the archives at Rome by the Italian Government. Maciste carries a five hundred pound gun carriage on the entire journey. The heights gained, a battle follows. Maciste rescues the old count's nephew. In the castle two officers are fighting a duel for possession of the girl when the Italians attack. Led by Maciste, they storm the castle and the giant hero hurls man after man off the balcony, the Austrains fleeing in terror before the superhuman efforts of the battle-crazed warrior. Rushing into the great dining room he encounters the two officers. Seizing a flaming fire brand from the grate he gives battle to the enemy, completely routing the pair. Brandishing the blazing log, he clears the balcony of the invaders. The sweethearts are reunited and mounted on the broad shoulders of Maciste, happily embrace.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

SUNLIGHT'S LAST RAID (Five Parts—Sept. 24).—The cast: Janet Warned (Mary Anderson); Jack Conway (Alfred Whitman); Captain Sunlight (V. Howard); Bill Warned (Fred Burns); Pedro (A. Garcia). Directed by William Walbert.

Kidnapped by outlaws from the train in which she is riding to her brother's ranch in the far West, Janet Warned, an Eastern society girl, is carried into the hills and held prisoner until rescued by her father and a rancher, Jack Conway. The resemblance between Captain Sunlight, the outlaw leader, and the rancher, is strong, and the girl confuses the two, so that later on, meeting Conway she turns him over to a posse at the point of her pistol. While still believing him a bandit she falls in love with the rancher, and when his real identity is known, she promises to marry him.

NORTH OF FIFTY-THREE (Five Parts—Sept. 23).—The cast: "Roaring Bill" Wagstaff (Dustin Farnum); Hazel Weir (Winifred Kingston); Andrew Bush (William Conklin); Jack Barrow (Edward Alexander); Joe Brooks (Rex Downs); Nig Geroux (Frank Lanning). Story by Bertrand W. Sinclair. Directed by Richard Stanton.

"Roaring Bill" Wagstaff's troubles begin when he finds his partner, Joe Brooks, murdered in the snow, but a ray of sunshine comes into his life soon afterward with the arrival of Hazel Weir, in the little village of Cariboo Meadows, where Bill is living in lonely state.

Hazel has made her way west to teach, but just before she reaches the town she finds that she herself is sorely in need of information, for she is lost in the woods beyond which Cariboo Meadows lies. Bill discovers her and learns of her plight. Under the guise of leading her to the place she seeks, he conducts her to his cabin and pleads his love for her. Secretly, Hazel is fond of the big stranger, but his "caveman" methods do not find favor with her, so she cries out that she hates him. Bill receives her abuse in silence, takes her to the village at the end of her tirade, and leaves her without a word.

He does not know that Hazel has been a stenographer in the East and has come to the coast because an affair in which she was guiltless attached itself to her name back home. The scandal follows her to Cariboo Meadows, yet Bill believes in her. He goes to tell her of this belief. En route, a noise in the local saloon attracts him. Bill peers inside and sees upon the wall the snowshoes of the murdered Joe Brooks. At the point of his gun Bill forces the saloon-keeper to admit that Nig Geroux left them there. Bill swears to get vengeance, and he does. He also gets Hazel.

THE PENNY PHILANTHROPIST (Five Parts—Sept. 24).—Peggy keeps a newsstand on Halsted Street, the income from which enables her to care for a younger brother and sister; so she hasn't much money for "philanthropy," but she gives away a penny every day.

Andrew Kimbalton, millionaire manufacturer, who stops at Peg's stand, and knowing of her philanthropy—her penny philanthropy—offers her a dollar a day to give away for him. She declines, telling him that the pleasure of giving lies in giving yourself.

Mr. Kimbalton has an only and motherless child, a daughter who is destined to inherit his vast wealth. This daughter wants to do good with her money, but she doesn't know how. Her father believes Peg can teach her how and Peg says she is willing to try.

Peggy explains to Ann that dollars should not be given away until one learns all there is to know about giving away pennies.

Ann, however, has a hard time following Peggy's plan, for people who know her mistrust her efforts. Peggy's philanthropy finally prevails and then a policeman calls at Peggy's newsstand to tell her to go over and see the captain.

Arrived at the police station, she learns her sweetheart, Tom Oliphant, is under arrest, charged with trying to dynamite Kimbalton's mansion. The police have woven a strong circumstantial case around Tom in an effort to prove a motive for the crime. Kimbalton, the millionaire, begins now to mistrust Peggy, but the little philanthropist proves equal to the task.

The friendship of Kimbalton and his daughter is retained, and Peggy, winning in a battle of wits with the police, frees Tom, and then, having made everyone else happy by her penny philanthropy she is made happy herself.

THEIR COMPACT (Seven Parts—Sept. 17).—The cast: James Van Dyke Moore (Francis X. Bushman); Mollie Anderson (Beverly Bayne); "Ace High" Horton (Harry S. Northrup); Robert Forrest (Henry Mortimer); Verda Forrest (Mildred Adams); "Pop" Anderson (Robert Chandler); Peters (John Smiley); "Pay Dirt" Thompson (Thomas Delmar).

James Van Dyke Moore goes West to forget the havoc an evil woman has wrought in his life. A silver mine has been bequeathed to him by his father, and he begins to operate it. "Ace-High" Horton has been stealing ore from the mine. In bringing the camp bully to task Moore attracts the favorable notice of Mollie Anderson. In the night battle which ensues for possession of the mine, Mollie warns Moore and then saves him from the hands of the desperate bullies whom Horton has employed. Moore is wounded. On his recovery he thanks Mollie for what she has done for him.

Moore's friend, Robert Forrest, brings his bride from the East, and Moore is horrified to learn that the woman he came West to forget is now the wife of his best friend. Verda Forrest begs Moore to keep her secret and he consents.

Forrest goes away to inspect various mines. He decides not to take his wife nor to leave her alone, and asks Moore to protect her while he is away. Moore reluctantly agrees, and the two men shake hands as a token of their compact. Verda and "Ace-High" Horton meet often. She has just agreed to run away with him when her husband returns. She tells him she is running away to escape the attentions of Moore, and that he annoyed her in the East.

Forrest asks Moore one question: "Did you know my wife in New York?" Moore's hesitating answer is interpreted as an evidence of guilt, and Forrest strikes him. Moore holds himself in check. His former friend, seeing in his restraint only the cowardice of guilt, gives him until sundown to leave town. That night, Verda and Horton steal quietly out of the hotel, only to run into Forrest. Thinking the husband knows all, Horton shoots him from ambush. Moore is suspected and, captured by the sheriff's posse, is led away to pay the penalty of a crime he did not commit.

ert. Horton, realizing that both cannot be saved, determines to sacrifice the woman to save his own life, but Verda forestalls him. She wrests Horton's pistol from him, shoots him, and then sinks, half crazed, into the sands. There Moore, who has been saved by the timely interference of Mollie, finds her and takes her back to make easier the last moments of her husband. He still believes in her.

When Moore's innocence has been thoroughly established, Verda is escorted by the citizens to to the edge of the desert, and her horse's head turned toward the East. Her baneful influence is removed forever from the lives of Moore and Mollie, and together they face a future filled with love and happiness.

TRIANGLE FILM CORP.

BROADWAY, ARIZONA (Five Parts—Sept. 30).—The cast: Fritzi Carlyle (Olive Thomas); John Keyes (George Chesebro); Uncle Isaac Horn (George Hernandez); Jack Boggs (Jack Curtis); Press Agent (Dana Ong); Old Producer (Thomas S. Guise); Indian Squaw (Leola Mae); Doctor (Robert N. Dunbar). Directed by Lynn F. Reynolds.

The cleverness and beauty of Fritzi Carlyle, star of a Broadway musical comedy, attracts John Keyes, a Westerner "doing" New York. The manager of the show sees in Keyes a good newspaper story, so he arranges for him to meet Fritzi. A sharp flirtation ends with Fritzi's promise to marry Keyes.

The newspapers give the affair enough publicity to satisfy even Keyes. Later that day he reads that Miss Carlyle has denied the engagement. Keyes, humiliated, leaves for his ranch after telling her that some day she will be glad to come to him.

Eight months later her health fails, and Keyes, accompanied by his foreman, Uncle Isaacs, an eccentric woman-hater, go east, and, disguised as hospital internes, they kidnap the little actress.

Detectives trace her to Keyes' Arizona ranch, where she has been regaining her health under protest. Her improved condition compensates Keyes for his certain arrest when the posse arrives, and there are times when she seems to enjoy her abduction.

When the officers try to arrest Keyes, Fritzi declares that she intends to marry him and that she arranged the kidnapping for a publicity story.

THE TAR HEEL WARRIOR (Five Parts—Sept. 30).—The cast: Col. Dabney Mills (Walt Whitman); Betty Malroy (Ann Kroman); Paul Darrell (William Shaw); James Adams (James McLaughlin); Anna Belle Adams (Dorcas Mathews); Uncle Tobe (George West); Aunt Tillie (Clara Knight); Lemuel L. Burke (John P. Lockney); John Mason (Wilbur Higby. Directed by Mason E. Hopper.

Threatened by foreclosure of a mortgage on his Red River plantation by Silas Peters, a loan-shark of the North Carolina village of Milford, Colonel Dabney Mills is brooding over his financial difficulties when Paul Darrell, a keen young Northern business man, arrives with an offer to buy the property. The Colonel, poor, but proud, refuses to sell. While they are sipping juleps, Miss Betty calls. Darrell is fascinated by the Colonel's charming neighbor.

Colonel Mills receives a letter from his granddaughter, wife of a rich New York broker, James Adams, and decides to go to the money-mad metropolis for funds to save his home. He finds Adams involved in a market coup without any free money, as are other financiers to whom he appeals. Meanwhile Betty and Darrell are rapidly being enmeshed by Cupid.

While the Colonel is alone in the Adams home, a business partner of Adams entrusts him with $5,000 belonging to Adams. The Colonel takes a flyer in cotton on the tip of an old comrade and loses Adams' money. Conscience-stricken and crushed by his first dereliction, he leaves a note telling of his dishonor and desire to die and returns to Milford. His comrades turn out en masse to welcome him home.

Adams wins his market drive, and finding the Colonel's note, starts south to lift the mortgage. Just as the Colonel is cocking his duelling pistol to end all troubles, Adams and Darrell break down the door. The Colonel then learns through Darrel that valuable coal deposits underlie his plantation.

KING-BEE FILMS CORP.

THE CHIEF COOK (Two Parts—Oct. 1).—The cast: The Star Boarder (Billy West); Hotel Proprietor (Budd Ross); Heavy (Babe Hardy); Leading Lady (Ellen Burford); Ham (Leo White); Slavey (Blanche White); Soubrette (Ethlyn Gibson). Directed by Arvid E. Gillstrom.

The Palace Hotel in Bingville is a losing proposition. Boggs, the proprietor, is unable to meet his payroll, and his employees, the chef, the waiter, and the porter, strike. No sooner have they left than Boggs gets a wire from a theatrical troupe, engaging rooms for the troupe, to arrive that day. He runs out to find the striking servants and sees Billy, the star boarder, climbing out a window with his suit-case in an attempt to beat his board bill. Boggs nabs him and solves both his problems by forcing Billy to work out his board bill.

In a porter's cap, Billy meets the afternoon train and brings the troupe's baggage to the hotel. As a bell-hop, he shows them to their rooms, and then, as chef, he prepares the dinner, serving it as the waiter. He is fascinated by Dolly, the leading lady, and incurs the jealous enmity of Babe, her husband, the "heavy" of the company. He also incurs the wrath of the strikers whose jobs he is filling. They place a bomb in the soup which Billy serves and almost wreck the dining-room.

In his work as bell-hop he draws a bath for Dolly, and when Babe returns to find Billy and Dolly in a compromising position in the bath-room, Billy is forced to run for his life. Evening comes and Billy watches the troupe start for the "Opera House." Billy slips in through the stage door, finds a comfortable seat behind the wings on the far side of the stage and drops off to sleep while waiting for the play to begin.

The show starts—a rank melodrama—and Babe is seen abusing Dolly. As the scene progresses he seizes Dolly by the throat and her scream wakes Billy. Out of a sound sleep he rouses to see the villain strangling the girl of his dreams, and he dashes out across the stage to the rescue. A battle follows in which the whole troupe and stage-hands join.

Billy gets away from the theater, makes the hotel, and hides in one of the rooms. Dolly returns to the hotel, and going to her room starts to undress. This is the room in which Billy is hiding under the bed, and when Babe comes and finds Billy, his worst suspicions are seemingly confirmed, and he starts in to annihilate Billy.

A chase through the hotel follows, at the end of which Billy is left in the kitchen, victorious, but with his fondest dreams shattered. He turns to Maggie, the little slavey who is scrubbing the floor. She has been his ardent admirer from the first and now gets her reward as Billy takes her in his arms.

BUTTERFLY.

"THE EDGE OF THE LAW" (Five Parts—Sept. 24).—The cast: "Spider" (Ruth Stonehouse); Nancy Gleen (Lloyd Whitlock); His Mother (Lydia Yeamans Titus); Pop Hoagland (M. W. Testa); Pliny Drew (J. Webster Dill); Stella Farnsworth (Betty Schade); Spike, Detective (Harry Dunkinson). Adapted from story by Maud Pettus. Produced by L. Chandel.

"Pawn Tickets!" cried Pop Hoagland. "What's the use of bringing pawn tickets to a pawnbroker? You get out and rustle some real coin." He grabbed the urchin's arm, twisting it cruelly until Drew interfered. Drew was a graduate of Pop's school of pickpockets.

Spider, or Nancy Glenn, went out, and in front of a tenement stood a handsome machine, in which sat Mrs. Farnsworth and her daughter, Stella, and Ralph Harding, the wealthy young Westerner whom Mrs. Farnsworth was trying to catch for her daughter. Spider, passing the auto, saw a chance in the bag lying beside Stella. Spike O'Neill, a detective, grabbed the pickpocket, who had barely time to stick the bag where she had found it. Ralph saw the "boy" in the man's grasp and demanded to know what he had done.

"He had his hand on that handbag," said Spike.

"Oh, let him go," begged Stella, and Spike loosened his hold on Spider, who made a wild dash for freedom.

She returned empty-handed to Pop, to find clothes Drew had sent for her.

"One fine-looking dame, all right," said Drew.

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM
TYPHOON FAN COMPANY 1544 BROADWAY NEW YORK CITY

"Come on, kid, I'll take you to a swell dump for supper."

They entered a fine apartment, and Nancy was astonished to hear it belonged to Drew. At first she was delighted, but presently the part that she was expected to play began to dawn upon her. Drew's voice went on, explaining: "We can pull off some fine deals together. You'll get onto the society stuff."

Suddenly she jumped to her feet and made a dash. Down the street she ran, looking over her shoulder to see if Drew was following. Crash! A swerving auto struck her, and she knew no more.

"She'll do well, now, I think," a professional voice was saying, "but it is possible that when she comes to she may not remember anything about the accident."

Nancy opened her eyes cautiously. She was lying in a wonderful white bed, and an elderly lady, a young man and a doctor were discussing her in low tones. She grasped the significance of what the doctor was saying.

"Who are you, my dear?" asked a kind voice.

"I don't know," she answered.

"Don't tease her, mother," said the young man, and, with a start, Nancy recognized Ralph Harding.

Her pretty clothes induced them to think that she came of nice people. The result was that Mrs. Harding and Ralph became fond of her, and asked her to share their home.

Drew, by his good appearance, had succeeded in being admitted into the most exclusive clubs. He was engaged in engineering a mining swindle, and wanted Ralph for a victim. Harding fell for his proposition.

That night there was to be a reception at the Harding home. For some time Mrs. Harding had been missing articles of value, and she thought it advisable to have a detective present. The man sent was Spike. Drew also was present, and recognized Nancy. Ralph had just received word that the proposition was worthless, and he called the man into the library to tell him so. Nancy heard Drew threaten Ralph. As Drew came out Nancy confronted him. She allowed him to make love to her, and stole the list of dummies and other papers. She then wrote to Ralph, disclosing her indentity, and saying that she was going away. Spike came upon her just as she gave it to a maid for Ralph. He had seen her relieve Drew of the papers, and recognized her. She tried to elude him, but he held her.

After delivering the papers to Ralph, the maid happened to see the butler stealing a piece of jewelry. She at once went to Mrs. Harding. Ralph was in the midst of a hand-to-hand encounter with Drew, and was rapidly reducing the man to submission, when Spike entered, dragging Nancy. Explanations followed, and when all the others had gone Ralph took Nancy in his arms and asked her to go back to the West with him.

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 75 (Sept. 15).

A Western Port.—Hundreds of apprentice seamen, recently graduated from a naval training station, leave for duty in unknown waters. Subtitles: Their favorite mascot is a miniature cannon. Off to action at last. Their chance has come and they welcome it.

Del Monte, Cal.—The opening round in the golf tournament is a nip and tuck contest, with Douglas Grant winning by the score of 75-74. Subtitles: Judge Gary, the steel magnate, is an interested spectator. Between games the players can refresh themselves in the large swimming tank.

Thann, Alsace.—Liberated Alsace is French once more, and it celebrates with great rejoicing the third anniversary of its reunion. Subtitles: The people don their best attire to greet their heroes. Veterans of 1870 are happy. Their cause is vindicated at last. Honoring the emblem of the Division which swept autocracy from these lands.

Buenos Aires, Argentine.—Fifty thousand people take part in a great demonstration of sympathy for America and her Allies, now struggling for the freedom of all nations. Subtitles: Visiting U. S. Jackies place a wreath on Washington's statue. The Americas are united in their common cause—LIBERTY.

New York City.—The metropolis mobilizes its forces for military duty in an emergency. The street cleaners' corps drills frequently. Subtitle: They shoulder arms as well as they shoulder brooms, these guardians of the city's health. Receiving their colors.

America's Air Forces.—Huge dirigibles will soon be a feature of the U. S. aero service and pilots are being trained at the balloon school. Subtitles: Starting the propeller from the operating car. Gracefully it sails through the air to "reconnoitre the enemy's position." The spherical balloon is also used to accustom the students to the upper altitude.

Ready, Uncle Sam.—The call to arms has sounded. Throughout the land the boys who will form the National Army, leave for their camps. Subtitles: The departure is everywhere marked by good cheer. A farewell scene in New York City. A contingent of drafted men arriving in camp. They go with enthusiasm to their new tasks. What a cantonment looks like. View of Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass. General Martin giving the men at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., a short talk on their new duties as America's soldiers.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 76 (Sept. 19).

Sacramento, Cal.—The patriotism of the West is fittingly symbolized in the annual pageant of the Native Sons of California. Subtitles: Beautiful floats depict the history of the Golden State. The fairest of the fair.

Boston, Mass.—Practical lessons in railroad engineering are given to the cadets of the 101st Regiment on the car lines in this city. Subtitle: They will soon lay the tracks for Pershing's army to Berlin.

Washington, D. C.—"Daring" is an essential requisite for the air service, and one applicant scales a tall building to prove he has it. Subtitles: Higher and higher he climbs into the aviator's realm. If this is not enough proof of "nerve," here's some more.

Dannemarie, Alsace.—Large quantities of toys, gift of the children of France to the children of Alsace, are distributed among the little folks. Subtitles: Anxiously they wait their turn; they had almost forgotten what a gift means. Proud of the big soldier man. General Hirschauer, commander of the "army of liberation."

On the Flanders Front.—The great offensive continues. Miles of territory have been regained and General Petain reviews the victorious troops. Subtitles: France honors her valiant army, which has brought Democracy another step nearer its goal. Their Majesties, the King and Queen of Belgium, visit the French aviation field.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The members of the Japanese Imperial War Mission visit the city where the Independence of America was dedicated. Subtitles: Viscount Ishii, head of the party. Department store girls give a demonstration of their preparedness for military service.

Boston, Mass.—The submarines built here for the Chilean Navy, undergo their trial tests and are ready for duty in Southern waters. Subtitles: Speed is the characteristic feature of these new undersea boats. Southward bound.

Camp Mills, L. I.—The eyes of the Nation are focussed on the Rainbow Division, which will lead the new army. Subtitles: Great activity reigns as the men eagerly prepare for their duties. With vim and vigor they do their calisthenics, for each day brings them nearer the fray. Mess-time is welcome; the food is wholesome and plentiful. Composed of regiments from all over the country, the Division represents the entire Nation. Lead on, "Rainbow," to France, Victory and Humanity's Freedom."

THE FATAL R.NG (Episode No. 14, "The Painted Safe"—Two Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 7).—Tom Carlton and the Spider rescue Pearl from her dangerous situation on the paddle-wheel of the ferryboat. They jeopardize themselves in the engine room of the ferryboat. Pearl pluckily continues the chase of Carslake, the villain, in the police boat which speeded to her rescue. Pearl, Tom and the Spider, with the police, overtake the outgoing tramp steamer and the Captain, to save himself, attempts to capture Carslake. The wily villain outwits him and dives overboard. They find no trace of him in the water, for he has safely concealed himself under the police boat. Reaching shore Carslake manages to get dry clothes and then takes the Violet Diamond to a notorious fence, who puts it in his vault for safe-keeping. Pearl gets on the trail of Carslake, and with the Spider, traces him to the fence and resolves to get the Diamond. She and the Spider in the dead of night break into the pawnshop where the Diamond has been put for safekeeping and manage to break into the vault. They recover the Violet Diamond, but as they are escaping "policemen" capture them. One of the "finest" is Carslake, who in mock politeness, raises his hat, smiles at Pearl and says, "I am afraid, Miss Standish, I will have to trouble you for the Violet Diamond."

UNDER FALSE COLORS (Five Parts—Rel. Week of Sept. 23).—Jack Colton, son of John Colton, the money king, in Petrograd making arrangements for a big loan to Russia, secures a passport for an unknown lady, who takes refuge from the Secret Police in his apartment. On the trans-Atlantic liner, the Countess Olga finds a stateroom companion in a young girl who, with her home in danger from the advancing enemy, is on her way to America to live with her father's friend, John Colton, Sr. The boat is torpedoed, the little girl perishes from exposure, and the Countess cannot resist the temptation of appropriating her identity.

Events happen with lightning speed from then on. The suspense is sustained up to the last scene, in which John Colton, the elder, puts the girl to the test and finds her tempered steel, and John Colton, Jr., asks and receives her hand in marriage.

WHITE A. C. SPECIAL CARBON

For Motion Picture Work

Pure White Light—Noiseless Operation
Requires No Change in Lamp Fixtures
"The Carbon That Changes A. C. to D. C."

All that the operator of A. C. apparatus has long desired is realized in the new White A. C. Special motion picture carbon. Noiseless operation, pure white light, and steady burning combined with simple adjustment and elimination of expensive transforming apparatus have caused A. C. operators to regard this new carbon as the last word in A. C. practice.

The noiseless operation of these carbons has justified their title of "the carbon that changes A. C. to D. C." The remarkable change from the old roaring A. C. arc to the quiet burning, steady, white light has given alternating current a new lease of life in the motion picture industry.

Moreover, changing to these new carbons is as simple as filling a pipe. Take the old carbons out, put the new White A. C. Specials in, and you have a strong, pure white light that insures perfect definition on the screen. No more eye fatigue, no more roaring noise. Everyone in the audience satisfied.

It will pay you to investigate the possibilities of these new carbons. They have shown conclusively that alternating current is still a live issue in those localities where D. C. cannot be obtained.

Write for our new booklet describing these White A. C. Special Carbons.

FOR D. C. OPERATION

The National-Silvertip combination is the standard everywhere. Silvertip means perfect projection the country over.

With these two carbons, both unique in their fields, and designed especially for use with A. C. and D. C., we can fill every requirement in the motion picture industry!

ALWAYS THE SAME

When you ask a wideawake, prosperous exhibitor from what source he gets his information, it's always the same: "From the MOVING PICTURE WORLD."

We have bundles and bundles of letters from prominent exhibitors, not in any particular locality, but from all parts of the globe, telling us "We just couldn't operate our show without the WORLD." In a letter received this week from far-off Shanghai, a reader and subscriber says "the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the most complete of all the trade papers that we are receiving regularly."

Exhibitors who are not already subscribers to the representative trade paper of the motion picture industry should send in their subscription NOW. Make a study of the likes and dislikes of the people you are serving. Study the business you are in. Improve your house. Increase your patronage by studying YOUR TRADE PAPER,

At Your Service!

You have known for years that the Spanish-speaking countries—and more particularly the countries of Latin-America—represented a tremendous market for all kinds of American-made wares.

CINE MUNDIAL

Printed in the Spanish Language and Circulated Wherever Spanish Is Spoken entered the trade publication field more than a year ago to introduce American-made moving pictures, moving picture accessories, and other requisites in the amusement field to prospective Spanish-speaking buyers. It has already proved of great value to many manufacturers who have used its advertising columns.

Its circulation has grown by leaps and bounds. Its readers are not only numbered in the thousands, but represent the highest type of buyers in the broad field it covers.

You Can Use It in Your Business!

We'd like to tell you more about CINE MUNDIAL and what it has already accomplished. Won't you drop us a line?

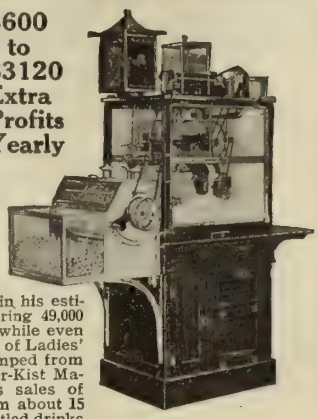
Brought 49,000 Cash Patrons Into This Live Man's Place

EXHIBITORS—Take Notice!

YOU can do what W. O. Hopkins, of the Evansville, Ind., Terminal Station, is doing with a Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine.

$600 to $3120 Extra Profits Yearly



He stated March 17th that he had kept account of the number of sales of Butter-Kist Pop Corn which he had made in the year 1916, by a tabulation on his register. He has just a little stand there, and his Pop Corn Machine served 49,015 people in 1916. He said he would go on operating that machine if he lost money doing it. For in his estimation anything that would bring 49,000 people into his shop was worth while even if operated at a loss. His sales of Ladies' Home Journal, for example, jumped from 6 a month to 80 after his Butter-Kist Machine began to operate. His sales of Popular Mechanics jumped from about 15 a month to 75. His sales of bottled drinks increased. And the profit on Butter-Kist itself is over 200 per cent. As he states, he has no unusual location. He says he just used a little brain work, and he believes that anybody ought to be able to not only make big money out of the Pop Corn Machine, but make it a leader that will bring business amounting to more than its own sales, by attracting people into the Butter-Kist place.

Makes About 65c Net Profits on $1

Stop a moment. Figure what such extra thousands of patrons will mean to you, besides the extra cash sales. It's new customers that make your theatre more popular, attracted by

BUTTER-KIST

POP CORN—TOASTY FLAVOR

Leading theatre managers are now making $600 to $3120 extra net cash profits yearly this way. Adds plus to your business. Takes nothing away. We send you the proofs.

No City Too Large, No Hamlet Too Small —No Matter Where Your Theatre Is

Crowds come from all directions to buy delicious Butter-Kist Pop Corn—crackling, white and toasty-flavored. Made only by the famous Butter-Kist Machine.

Easy to Pay Us From Your Profits

A small cash payment starts the Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine bringing in the nickels, dimes and quarters. Balance soon paid out of Butter-Kist sales.

Simplex

Next week we will reverse it, but this week we say:

"A Tree is Known by its Fruit"

When you see a particularly admirable piece of work in any line, your mind naturally goes back to the skilled brains and hands that produced it.

The man who operates the Simplex, whether in Chicago or in Shanghai, is bound to have a wholesome respect for those who are back of this excellent piece of mechanism.

And the Exhibitor, even one who is not a mechanic, feels the same way. The favorable results of Permanently Perfect Projection on the box office receipts, the insignificant repair bills—these and other things give him a good opinion of the men who put their hearts and souls into the production of the Simplex.

If you haven't yet had a taste of the fruit of the Simplex Tree, apply to our Distributor, or ask us for Catalog "A."

"From Studio to Screen"

shows vitalized views of every detail of moving picture production and manufacture—a complete revelation.

Our Laboratory-Studio was selected as the subject of this one reel feature for obvious reasons which you will understand and appreciate when you see the "picture."

It shows:—

How the raw stock is perforated, camera loaded—how scenery and "props" are built—how a multiple-set studio is lighted and operated.

The mysteries of Screenland are disclosed—you see how the players make-up—you see them in action.

Then you see how the negative is exposed, developed and made ready for printing. You see the positive prints processed until finally on the screen you view the finished "picture."

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS INC.

The particular business of this corporation is to market to buy negatives, or to book for the Producer on a percentage. But of all of its percentages that which it is most particular about is the percentage of JEWEL Productions which shall be inimitable.

The beauty of a gem lies not in carat weight but in its purity.

The craftsman's cutting multiplies the sparkling facets—the atelier's setting frames the stone to fuller radiance.

On our lady's hand, the matchless gleam of its inborn light is silently significant of quality.

Such is truly a jewel — a coveted, jealously-guarded, article of bijouterie — worth the labor of men and the love of women.

In perfectly equal degree these same phrases fit the rare pictures which you may secure from time to time through the agency of JEWEL Productions (Inc.).

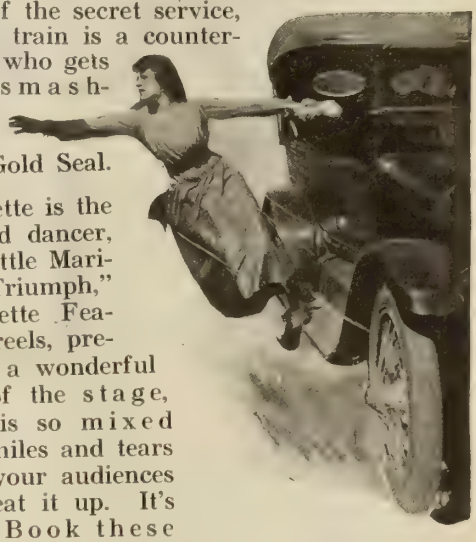
Universal Specials You Can't Pass By

Released Week of Oct. 22. Book thru Universal Exchanges or Home Office, 1600 Broadway, New York

WHAT kind of a show are YOU giving—Feature, Program, part Vaudeville, or what? Into any moving picture program these Universal Specials will fit, and lend strength and balance to it. On our left, gentlemen, you will see Neal Hart, considered by millions the nerviest, handsomest and most dashing of Western stars. With Mignon Anderson he appears in a two-reel Bison, "The Get Away," which provides the thrills of a man hunt and the contrasting emotions of a love-at-first-sight romance. It has the power and pep of a longer subject and you'd better book it and boost it, too. Helen Gibson, on the extreme right, is about to leap from an auto to a flying express train. The gentleman in the car is Val Paul, of the secret service, and on the train is a counterfeit passer, who gets his in a smashing climax. A strong three-reel Gold Seal.



Lena Baskette is the dainty child dancer, who in "Little Marianna's Triumph," Lena Baskette Feature, two reels, presents a wonderful play of the stage, which is so mixed with smiles and tears that your audiences will eat it up. It's great. Book these thru your nearest Universal Exchange.

Universal Comedies to Strengthen Your Show

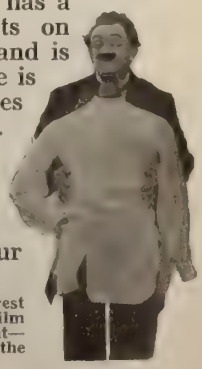
CAN you make a swell lid for your wife by picking a few flowers and sticking them in the brim of an old straw hat? That's what Bill Franey does in "The Tightwad," one-reel Joker. Gale Henry, as his wife, tries to spend Bill's money, and the comedy is full of situations that will invite the giggles and command roars of laughter.

Myrta Sterling does not deny that she is fat, and the audiences will agree that this L-KO sets a furious pace. It's in two reels and the title, "Fat and Furious," isn't nearly as funny as the comical stunts of the merry jokers in the L-KO company. Book this and give yourself a happy time in the box-office.

The problem of "What'll We Do With Uncle?", one-reel Victor comedy, is solved by Henry Murdoch in the last title. Henry, hungry, and disappointed in love, intends suicide, and sells his body for ten bucks. With that much coin life seems sweet. Then his uncle dies and leaves a billion dollars, and he proposes to the undertaker that he take uncle at seven-fifty. A scream.

Lee Moran is the favored lover in "A Fire Escape Finish," one-reel Nestor, but the girl loves Eddie Lyons. Considerable strategy is necessary to complete their plan of eloping, and a meeting at a hotel where the couple must register causes a funny mix-up. Lee finds the girl in her room while Eddie is hunting for the parson, and a happy ending is provided when the ceremony takes place on the fire escape. You'll notice that Lee is somewhat "up in the air."

Max Asher is going to get into trouble if he doesn't stop flirting with his neighbor's—well with every personable young person he sees. Max runs a pawnshop and his next door neighbor has a clothing store. Max insists on talking to the lady cashier and is ordered out of the place. He is caught sneaking back and takes refuge behind a clothing dummy. That's where we get the title, "A Wise Dummy" (one-reel Joker), because they haven't been able to "get" flirty Max yet. Book this and give everybody in your town a big laugh.



Book the releases listed here thru your nearest Universal Exchange, or from Universal Film Manufacturing Co., Carl Laemmle, President—"The Largest Film Manufacturing Concern in the Universe"—1600 Broadway, New York.

Perfection Pictures

"The Highest Standard In Motion Pictures"

A Demonstrated Success!

¶ Within the past few weeks exhibitors have screened the first Perfection Pictures and the public has voiced its approval in the highest praise. Such Perfection Pictures as "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," starring Taylor Holmes; "Men of the Desert," featuring Jack Gardner; "Pants," exploiting little Mary McAlister; "The Apple Tree Girl," the Ladies Home Journal story, featuring Shirley Mason; all have proven their worth—their box-office drawing-power.

¶ Exhibitors have found the courteous, business-like methods of the George Kleine System of exchanges prepared to care for their every need. "Service," with a meaning never before realized, awaits the exhibitor at any one of the numerous branches of the George Kleine System.

¶ Contracts for Perfection Pictures are now being allotted to Exhibitors throughout the country. A new Perfection Picture in five or six reels is released each week. These productions are attractions of extraordinary merit—supremely interesting stories by noted authors and playwrights.

¶ The Perfection Policy provides for open booking or 52-week contracts. Get in touch with your Kleine Exchange. Learn the details of this newer, bigger, better proposition that means more profits to you. Get Perfection on your screen—and in your box-office.

national advertising campaign to send more people to your theatre

Making a greater America.

The motion picture industry has come into its own. Today one of the greatest of all America's wonderful industries takes its place in national advertising among the first in the land.

And it will be greater. Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has done its "bit" in the past. It is going to do more.

$1,000,000 is to be spent to carry your message to every corner of America, to tell the people that, as in the days of Ancient Greece, "the theatre of all the people" is open to all.

$1,000,000 plugging away for Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

$1,000,000 invested to realize literally hundreds of millions for the exhibitors of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

A colossal sum, yes; but none too great to do the things we want to do for you, and for this great industry.

The Newspaper Advertising

'Advertising'-America's religion.

A newspaper without advertising would be as dry as dust. There is no way to say your say to so many people at the same time, with the same force and effect as through the newspapers.

They are the first, the straight line of communication between the man with something to sell and the man who wants to buy.

And this national advertising campaign of Paramount and Artcraft is going right before the eyes of 26,408,462 readers of newspapers—the readers of the newspapers in your town.

And they'll read it; it will be news that will be worth reading. Not everybody knows what the modern photo-play has in store for them. They do not know that now they can see the best in literature, art and drama, portrayed by the greatest artists of the day; they do not all know the educational possibilities of the modern motion picture. They do not all know, even yet, what Artcraft and Paramount pictures mean.

But they will know. They will read about Paramount and Artcraft in more than 300 of the best newspapers in America. They will have the message flashed before their eyes on electric signs in big cities and popular resorts; and they will prove the supremacy of Paramount and Artcraft pictures from a chair in your theatre.

The Magazine Advertising

Pike's Peak and 20 others.

In Colorado are twenty mountains, all of them higher than Pike's Peak. But you never heard of the 19 others. It pays to advertise.

You can have the finest auditorium within a week's walk; but if you don't put the right kind of attractions in it and then go out and tell the man in the street where you are and what you've got, you'll be as lonesome as an old maid at a mothers' convention.

Your people read magazines. It's towns like yours that make "million circulations" possible. It's the small and moderate sized community that is the backbone of this great industry.

And Famous Players-Lasky Corporation knows this, and they use three millions of circulation in magazines to reach your patrons and the people who by right ought to be your patrons.

This national advertising campaign has a lot of thought behind it—with you in mind at every step. And every ounce of power known to modern advertising will be turned on, and every device will be used to help every exhibitor get every possible benefit.

And the 41,609,000 magazine readers are one way to sell you and your theatre to your public.

But be sure this advertisement means you.

The Exhibitor

Count a million.

Of course you won't. Well then, think a million. $1,000,000 going out in cash to newspapers and magazines for advertising to fill your theatre, every day, every performance.

It's going to do just that, sure as fate, if you have the goods; if you're ready to fire right along with the big guns of this publicity.

In plain English, you won't get all that's due you—all the benefit of the great big advertising "main" laid through your town unless you have a "faucet" in the house with which to turn it on.

In still plainer English, you must tell people that yours is the theatre the advertising talks about, that you show that kind of pictures, and that they can tell it in a minute by looking at your theatre. Then you've got them for good. Because Artcraft and Paramount pictures are going to hold them.

In the words on the cow-boy monument, "We've done our derndest-angels can do no more"—now, are you going to cooperate and help us to make this the first industry in America? Your part is "linking up."

Concerning Serials -

What You Want:

What do you expect when you book a Serial for your theatre? First - you insist on a story by a well-known author who knows how to grip and hold public interest. Next - you want a real production - and that means direction, photography, careful editing, picture sense. Then - you must have a star who interprets the story and is a joy to the eye. In addition - you insist upon advertising and promotion aid that will bring you hundreds of new patrons.

With these elements you have a picture that is right for you and your audience.

What Paramount Gives:

Anna Katharine Green, the best-known of all mystery writers, is the author of

Who is "Number One"?

In this, the first of eight pictures in which she will star during the coming year, Constance Talmadge, whom D. W. Griffith made famous as the Mountain Girl in "Intolerance", will be seen in "Scandal"—the strongest story that has ever brought a young star before the public. "The worst-spoiled girl in America", and how she was brought to her senses and to a realization of the true values of life—that is the story in a nutshell. "Scandal" will secure the fame of Constance Talmadge, and will make fortunes for the exhibitors who play it.

Why Quote Hundreds When All Agree?

MADGE KENNEDY and "Baby Mine"—the second Goldwyn release—have been even more enthusiastically welcomed and approved by exhibitors and the American public than the spectacular "Polly of the Circus," starring Mae Marsh. Since the reviews and exhibitor telegrams are unanimous we quote five out of hundreds as representing the pulse of the industry:

NEWSPAPERS:

NEW YORK TRIBUNE: Just as everyone had about decided in his mind whether he preferred Marguerite Clark or Mary Pickford, along comes Madge Kennedy and upsets all the calculations. She is sweet; she is subtle, and her style is inimitable.

NEW YORK HERALD: This new star, Madge Kennedy, will prove a gold mine in the motion picture business. She keeps her audiences laughing constantly.

ZIT, NEW YORK JOURNAL: An even greater picture than it was a play. Margaret Mayo's great farce was made to be screened. Madge Kennedy is a wonder.

THE VOICE OF THE EXHIBITOR:

J. W. & W. J. DUSENBURY, GRAND THEATRE, COLUMBUS, O.: We played to capacity business at our opening, and we are maintaining our prices at the highest point ever received regularly by any picture theatre in this city. By doing this we keep Goldwyn pictures above any idea of mediocrity; they are worth the advance. Goldwyn's marked advance will increase the interest of all educated Americans in motion pictures.

J. J. PARKER, MAJESTIC THEATRE, PORTLAND, ORE.: Goldwyn pictures are proving remarkable money-getters for the Majestic Theatre. The Portland photoplay public is today clamoring for Goldwyn pictures; the Goldwyn publicity had popularized them long before they came upon the screen. And I am not the least bit backward in commending your "Polly of the Circus" as a money-getting picture from every standpoint.

These are not unexpected messages of approval for Madge Kennedy or Margaret Mayo's great farce. Others now tell you what Goldwyn itself has forecast for months. Exhibitors will find that Goldwyn promises less in its advertising than it always delivers.

The Best Advertised Woman in the World

MAXINE ELLIOTT, who on October 7 makes her screen debut in "Fighting Odds"—Goldwyn's third production—has had and still receives more remarkable publicity than any living woman.

Not merely in her native America, but throughout the world, her fame and reputation have paved the way for a tremendous public interest in her first motion picture.

In "Fighting Odds," by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb, two famous authors, Miss Elliott lives up to the public's anticipations and expectations.

She is beautiful; she is emotionally powerful and thrilling; she is the Maxine Elliott that the mind pictures her to be wherever her name is mentioned and audiences everywhere will rush to see her in your theatre.

Behind this famous name, this powerful play and its noted authors, for the further benefit of exhibitors, Goldwyn has conducted a nation-wide campaign of exploitation that means box-office profits.

What Your Public Will Like in "Fighting Odds"

Can a loyal and beautiful wife single-handed and against all of the evil agencies of high finance, foil and bring to justice the most powerful financier in Wall Street?

Do you believe, like Henry Ford, that the American laborer is worthy of his hire; that he is entitled to share in the prosperity of the business success he helps create with his brain and muscle?

Do you think that the self-reliant American woman is capable of pitting her wits against one of the nation's shrewdest and most unscrupulous Money Masters?

Would every woman's loyalty to the man she married stand the test of following him into prison and raising him from ruin and despair back to success, prosperity and the confidence of his fellow men?

All of these questions are answered by one of the world's most beautiful women, Maxine Elliott, in her first Goldwyn Picture production.

The Bigness of Mutual Pictures

—"Big Stars Only"

By
JOHN R. FREULER
President Mutual Film Corporation

During the month of September the Mutual Film Corporation demonstrated on the screens of hundreds of theatres the meaning of its new policy. It offered concrete proof of the fact that Mutual Pictures—"Big Stars Only"—are unexcelled in the amusement field—from the standpoint of the box-office—satisfied patrons—famous stars—worth-while productions.

This month again—Mutual will offer two big star features every week.

The week of October 1st, we present

MARY MILES MINTER in "HER COUNTRY'S CALL"

EDNA GOODRICH in "QUEEN X"

The week of October 8th, we present

GAIL KANE in "SOUTHERN PRIDE"

ANITA KING in "THE GIRL ANGLE"

The week of October 15, we present

ANN MURDOCK in "THE BEAUTIFUL ADVENTURE"

JULIETTE DAY in "THE CALENDAR GIRL"

The week of October 22nd, we present

OLIVE TELL in "THE UNFORESEEN"

—fourth of the Charles Frohman Successes in Motion Pictures.

WILLIAM RUSSELL in "THE SEA MASTER"

The bigness of Mutual Pictures is again demonstrated in no uncertain fashion. They are big attractions, featuring big stars, produced in a big manner and big in drawing power. The big exhibitors will instantly recognize their bigness and arrange to show them all.

THIS IS WELL WORTH A SECOND READING

In the July 5th issue of our well known British contemporary, of London, England, "The Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly," there is an article on "The Making of a Model Trade Paper," by A. E. Newbould (Chairman of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association), from which we quote the following:

"I would like to put on record my opinion that the Trade Press has been going ahead lately by leaps and bounds. There has been a definite effect towards freer criticism, more up-to-date methods, and constructive assistance.

"But we have still a long way to go, and I am in cordial agreement with Mr. Montagu when he points to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD as a model Trade Paper. It is dignified, judicial, undeniably independent and very capably edited. It is, in the best sense of the word, a trade organ to which a wealthy industry can point with pride."

The above is all the more gratifying as Mr. Newbould is unknown to us except as we have noted his name from time to time in the British trade press in connection with his activities on behalf of the exhibitors of Great Britain.

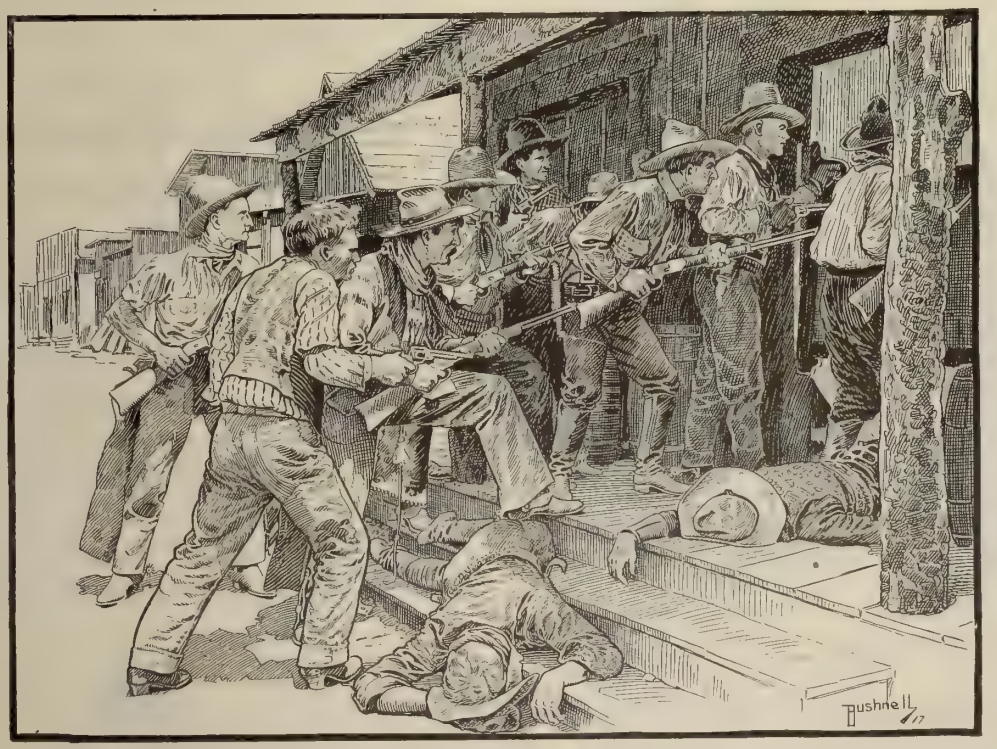
O. Henry's West in Its Most Picturesque Moods



The Trimble Gang's Attack on the Saloon in "The Lonesome Road"

When "O. Henry" gave us his western stories he painted each time an atmosphere that had depth, body and meaning. He did it with a few graphic strokes, but the strokes were masterful. Against this rugged background he deftly placed each of his whimsical dramas with terrific effect.

These stories are being filmed by Dave Smith in western surroundings with the true atmosphere.

Against a typical western background of rough, fighting, colorful men who reigned in the period chosen by the author, "O. Henry" daringly flings his Perry Rountree—feminized cowboy—in "The Lonesome Road." Then shows in O. Henry fashion how Perry braves almost inevitable death, alias the Trimble gang, just to get home to his vixen little bride—by seven.

"The Lonesome Road" is the current "O. Henry" 2-reeler—with Chet Ryan, S. R. Jeninngs, Frances Parks and Dan Duffy.

Facts and Comments

SPOILING the effect of a good feature by filling in with two or three reels of poor or mediocre material is a shortsighted policy that more than a few theater managers seem to be guilty of. Paying large rental rates and spending much time in selecting the feature or big subject on the program and then paying little or no attention to the other subjects necessary to complete the required number of reels can only and does result in dissatisfaction on the part of a large majority of each audience. The feature may be the very best and may fascinate every one in the theater, but if it has been preceded, or is followed, by poor and unsatisfactory shorter subjects, the good effect of the former is bound to be minimized if not nullified altogether. Looking out for the general excellence of the whole program is well worth while.

MEMPHIS officials are now struggling with the problem of Sunday closing. The Mayor of the city several weeks ago issued an order to close the shows. An injunction granted the theater people was dissolved a week ago, throwing the original order back on the police department. The police officials have decided to make a test case which will be decided shortly. The question of Sunday opening, like the question of censorship, is likely to be with us spasmodically for many a day. Theater men everywhere can do much with both questions in molding public opinion by articles in their house programs, slides on their screens and editorial matter in their local papers. Keep presenting your side of the case on every opportune occasion, and the majority of right thinking, liberal minded people will be with you whenever a vote comes.

THE increase in wages which the New York operators are requesting in their new scale is still another example of the steadily increasing costs that have to be met by the exhibitor. Many exhibitors are inclined to the belief that the new scale is not out of the way at present living costs and wages run, while other exhibitors say the rate is too high and claim the business cannot stand any increase. Any increase will undoubtedly work a hardship to many of the smaller houses, especially in the poorer neighborhoods where the price cannot be increased, and it is just in such localities where it is usually the only form of recreation available that we dislike to see a theater closed. One thing is certain, however, and most of our wide awake theater managers have come to realize it, namely, that if they are to secure the high class projection now demanded by the public the scale of wages for operating must compare favorably with the wages that intelligent and conscientious men can secure in other lines of work.

THE only way to avoid the music tax, as we have already intimated, is to select and use only music on which there is no tax or copyright. There is an abundance of such music out of which to pick an excellent repertoire, even if it will eliminate a quantity of the so-called new or up-to-date numbers. Now is a good time for theater managers to warn their leaders against playing any numbers "by request" unless they know it is not copyrighted, for which they will be liable.

OUR readers are referred to an article in this issue on the plans for distribution of films in aid of the Second Liberty Loan. The use of these films again demonstrates the far-sightedness of our Government officials in realizing the value of the screen in this enormous publicity campaign. We know the country can count on the fullest co-operation on the part of the industry.

LATEST consideration of the War Revenue bill at Washington clearly indicates a strong disposition to include theater admissions considerably below the twenty-five-cent scale. If this is done it simply will mean that the theaters will be made collection agencies of this tax from the public, for the low priced theater is now carrying all the burden it can possibly stand, with mighty few exceptions.

Fertilizing the Dramatic Spirit

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THE effect of every successful screen drama is to raise public taste, make audiences more exacting in the matter of errors hitherto generously forgiven, and to place those plays commercially adapted to long runs, or to large financial returns, beyond the reach of profiteering pirates who have, vulture-like, gorged themselves on the weaknesses of this young art. Our people are still tolerant—they are slow to move as a mass—hence the greatest sufferers are those progressive spirits whose breadth of vision enables them to look out upon an expanse of splendid opportunity, both educational and entertaining, for sincere artistry of production.

Skilled workmanship in all departments now and then appears, a master harmony of effort, and has the effect of popularizing moving pictures wherever shown. Such master efforts constitute the driving power of our ship, but there are a lot of barnacles hanging on, advancing themselves while retarding the general movement. Thus far these barnacles dread only the scraping-knife of fearless criticism. They can be almost singled out by their hatred of the intelligent and truth-telling reviewer. Any man, in any business, who assumes the lofty attitude of being beyond discriminating discussion of merit is already a backset, a check to progress, a counter-current in flowing water.

We have ranged on one side the intelligent part of American audiences, live exhibitors, progressive producers and discriminating critics. On the other side are those profiteers whose aim is to get all there is in the game irrespective of present quality or future improvement, stale-trick playwrights, plagiarizing producers, actor-fakirs, hand-to-mouth directors, spineless critics and the noisy, unthinking fractions of an audience.

Sometimes the spineless critic is to be pitied rather than blamed—his case is that of suppressed manhood. Ordinarily, however, he seeks to ingratiate himself by sticking peacock feathers in an old crow's tail. He fools no one but himself in the end. Once the exhibitor gets his measure he goes to the dust heap. Meanwhile he is merely poisoning wells of truth, spoiling all and helping none, not representative of his craft, not of his paper, no friend of the exhibitor he is attempting to fool, at one time a creature of small spites and bilious envy, at another the apostle of the amplified, the glorifier of innocuous inanity.

Then we have the playwright of thirty-six plots. For him there is nothing new under the sun. There is a dropped letter, an overheard conversation, and the villain gets the "papes," so that the hero is unjustly accused, and the heroine goes to the villain's rooms at midnight in a ball costume. Struggle! Poor old skeleton! He rattles the bone keys of his typewriter from morning to night in order to evolve a scenario in which there shall be a murder, a fire, an explosion, a dying confession and a pretty scene at the end, where the ingenue kisses the chalk-faced hero just as the sun sets behind distant hills.

The actor-fakir and the hand-to-mouth director have a privilege we all enjoy, the right to live, to get along as well as they can—so has any other caterpillar—but what he feeds on is very destructive to new and original growth. He eats holes wherever he crawls. He knows of nine plots and one tragic situation, the latter his own, when he is hanging around Times Square, looking for a job. It is quite as impossible to teach him anything as it would be to drive a nail in his skull. Having nothing to learn with, there is nothing for him to learn.

If it could be arranged for these backsets in production, the bearded lady, the living skeleton and the tattooed man, to give a side-show for backsets in the audience, all would be suitable, sensible, satisfactory and salubrious, but the bearded old stage play, the living skeleton of an ancient novel, the tattooed vehicle, appear in the main tent along with the legitimate moving picure performance and send away disgusted those spectators who love what is bright, entertaining and original in the new art, who would come back every day, and bring their friends with them, if there was no attempt to fertilize interest with cinders.

We have done so much that we are sorry for in moving pictures already shown that no logical argument as to what the future should be can be built on past performance. So far as stage presentations are concerned, we are not exacting as to naturalness—we accept theatrical devices, with which most directors are saturated, as part of the game, but to import these gross violations of probability into the new art, to replace reality with convention, has the effect of destroying, rather than developing, motion-picture opportunities.

In the fixing of attention upon purpose there is a similarity of performance highly important, but nevertheless deceiving. It may be done by poetic eloquence and sonorous voice in one case, in the other by beautiful and idealistic representation of the real. The stage may fertilize the dramatic spirit by its methods and forms—we must adhere to our own for the same purpose. We have reflected much and originated little, because the easy way in any art is to discover the commonplace.

The easiest way in newspaperdom is to tail along at the rear of the procession, shifting this way and that, without definite purpose, but the true function of leadership in one field, as in the other, is "to take the very hue and tone of the age in which we live. The modern era, with its leveling democracy, its social accent, its preoccupation with the affairs of the average man, has ushered into the drama an entirely new range of subjects."

We cannot fertilize the dramatic spirit, add millions to our audiences, with the ashes of burnt-out themes. So momentous, so universal, is the democratic spirit of these times that we cannot stir the hearts of people with any theme not of modern interest and development. We may restrict ourselves to the sentiments and passions of contemporary life and succeed, but we cannot go backward into old motives and methods without ignoring the fact that success is a matter of favoring circumstances.

It is a tremendous advantage for the theme of a play to be timely. It may otherwise fail in spite of most careful treatment and interpretation. Audiences sit dull and spiritless while watching a really beautiful picture, replete with high-priced personalities, when it is out of accord with modern thought and feeling. It loses the illusion of reality and fails to be convincing. The dramatic spirit must be that in harmony with mass-consciousness; it must be quick to grasp public opinion; it must bring into practice and urge upon others the principles and beliefs which are making this epoch the greatest in world history.

Will It Operate or Co-Operate? By Sam Spedon

THE motion picture industry is confronted with another source of pending trouble that has roused the exhibitors' leagues to many conferences and protracted meetings. This question following closely upon the trail of the music license will test the worth of organization in time of need.

We are in a quandary whether the representative exhibitors' organizations will agree as a body upon some concerted action and unitedly determine a decisive way to handle the subject. If they do not, they might as well fold up their tents and depart hence. The question in this case and all cases is one of right and wrong. The decision is, shall we or shall we not? Decide upon something and you will have done something.

A Determined Stand.

That the Operators' Union is determined and insistent upon a universal wage scale and the employment of none but union operators allows of no contradiction. This was made evident by the recent conferences at the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Leagues of Brooklyn and Manhattan on September 22 and 24. The increase of about 30 per cent on the present union wage scale went into effect in Greater New York on September 24, as published in the Moving Picture World, issue of September 29, page 2001.

About twenty or thirty per cent of the operators employed by the theaters in Greater New York are union men and the union claims it can supply union labor to furnish all or most of the theaters in this locality. It was intimated by one of the exhibitors, if the theater managers and owners did not decide to co-operate with the union this week (September 24-30) there would be a general strike called and many houses would be dark.

Difference of Opinions.

Some exhibitors are inclined to oppose the demands of the union, others are willing to accede to them. Those whose houses are located in tenement, mill and factory districts are afraid of boycots. Exhibitors who are running small houses are loud in their protestation against an increase in operators wages as prohibitive and say it would drive them out of business. It would be a greater hardship than they could bear, added to the higher cost of films and general living expenses. In talking over the matter with an exhibitor in the Bronx, he said: "I cannot see how many of the smaller exhibitors can survive any additional expense. Just to show you how the small houses in the Bronx have gone by the board, in 1915 we had ninety-four theatres, in 1916 sixty-four and this year we have forty-seven. Ten of these are large houses of one thousand seats and over, the balance range all the way down to three hundred." It was the opinion of one or two exhibitors that non-union operators could be secured to fill the places of strikers, but in opposition to this it was said enough non-union men were not available and those brought from other States could not secure licenses in this State at the present time.

An Unusual Opinion.

We interviewed one ten-cent exhibitor who very frankly said he thought the wages asked were not unreasonable, as he considered operating in a booth very hard work, ruinous to the eyes and very exacting physically. If his patrons demanded skilled operators and the best projection he would pay the price demanded. "If I can't afford to pay my operator a living wage I will raise my price of admission and if the public don't pay for what it wants I will get out of the business."

Call the Doctor.

Some two or three exhibitors blamed the whole trouble on the projection experts, declaring they were so zealous in advocating scientific projection they brought about the operators unions. Be that as it may, we are none the less facing a problem just now that has got to be settled amicably and equitably in accordance with facts.

Shall We or Shall We Not?

Judging from the number of exhibitors who are and who are not employing union labor we are of the opinion that it is a matter of individual and personal concern which each exhibitor will have to settle for himself. If each and every exhibitors' organization could come to a joint decision on the subject and deal with the Union as a body, the question might be settled satisfactorily. There is one thing that can be said about the Operators Union: they are well organized, and ready to back up their claims and decisions by concerted action.

Don't Let It Get Away from Us

By Sam Spedon.

SINCE the current talk of Germany making peace terms with the Allies, we have noticed that different distributors and producers are sending representatives abroad to negotiate for future business in foreign countries. This is a very wise step and with a reversal of the old adage, we seriously advise; in time of war prepare for peace. It is high time to get busy on the other side, to be on the safe side, if the war lasts one year or five. Better to have tried and failed than not try at all to regain what we have lost.

Don't Forget This.

In South America and Mexico, as already ably set forth in these columns (issue Sept. 29, page 1988) by the editor of Cine-Mundial, America has gained a great advantage over European distributors and producers and we should not neglect in any way to establish this advantage so we will not lose it after the war. We should cultivate it, by giving our best efforts to meet the demand that has arisen, through necessity and not through any graciousness of our own. The neglect and indifference we have shown and are showing the Latin-American countries is one of the biggest mistakes possible. With our promised merchant marine service, within the next year, there is no reason why "Made in America" films should not retain and improve the place they have gained since the war began.

Keeping Up with the Procession.

By Sam Spedon.

SOME people have an idea if you use straightforward and from the shoulder language you will offend the keen sensibilities of our readers. If such sensitiveness exists we then know our efforts are not in vain. Strike one!

How can any exhibitor expect to survive the rapid advancement in motion picture showmanship if he plods and skulks along in the same rut in which he began?

Personality and individuality is the chief essential and the one thing some exhibitors lack. Their own personal appearance and manners are indicative of what the public may expect to see inside their theaters. Their very presence in the lobby is uninviting, they drive people away instead of drawing them in. By all means an exhibitor should keep up appearances, greet people with a smile and welcome them in their own tongue. If he can't do these things himself let him employ some one who can.

No matter how small the theater, or where located it has got to keep pace with modern improvements and comforts. You can't expect to take money from the public without giving some of it back to the public. If exhibitors cannot or will not they will have to give place to those who will, and will be swallowed up by those who are keeping up with the march of progress.

Elimination.

Separating the chaff from the wheat is a slow and tedious process. Just now we are going through this process in the motion picture industry. Some years ago we had any number of small advertising concerns, but gradually the advertising business was concentrated and perfected until it became an industrial and commercial art. The same development will gradually and, from this time on, will rapidly take place in the making of motion pictures.

Different Grades of Art.

We have always had different grades of art to satisfy the desire for pictures, and we doubtless will always have different grades of art in motion pictures. If we must have high art by the best artists and masters we must pay for them, at least what they are worth. If we cannot afford to indulge in high art and must have pictures, and surely we all have a natural or acquired taste for them, we must be content with what we can afford. There is one thing that applies to motion picture art that cannot be said about painted art, it is not beyond the means of the poorest to see them, sooner or later the enjoyment of even the highest grade motion pictures is brought within the reach of rich and poor alike. Furthermore, they are not exclusively included in private collections of millionaires.

Shakespeare and the Masses

By Edward Weitzel.

IN an article entitled "Does Shakespeare Pay?" a writer in a moving picture journal formulates this "new article of faith": "Shakespeare as an appeal to the masses does not pay and never will," and gives as the reason for this condition, "Shakespeare had a most profound contempt for the masses and instinctively the masses have felt and resented this contempt."

Verily, "A Daniel come to judgment!" Every student of Shakespeare knows that he was too wise to hate any class of men; also that he never took sides in his dramas. He merely "held the mirror up to nature" and let mankind see the reflection of its own image. To argue that he contradicted himself at various times in his writings is to miss the point that the playwright never voiced his own beliefs but those of his characters. He was without bias of any kind. If the masses ever have hated or ever learn to hate Shakespeare, so much the worse for the masses.

To quote still further from this extraordinary article of faith: "In Shakespeare's day even the greatest of dramatists appealed primarily to the favor and patronage of the rich and aristocratic. This fact alone, however, does not furnish a full explanation of Shakespeare's lack of popularity with the American public."

It must be the screen public that is here referred to, as the spoken stage of this country has always been a generous supporter of the Bard, even since the decline of actors of the first rank to interpret him. Following the days of Booth, Barrett, McCullough and lesser lights, Sothern and Marlowe, Robert Mantell, Forbes-Robertson and Beerhohm-Tree have all reaped goodly harvests of ducats from their Shakespearean revivals. And, furthermore, if the tragic stars of thirty years ago could return to the boards the theatres would be packed with delighted audiences that would gain a new and precious understanding of the works of the Divine William.

The reason the moving picture public has not shown a greater appreciation of Shakespeare is owing entirely to the limitations of the screen. The dramas of the poet lose the greater part of their value when the soliloquies and the philosophic passages are omitted. Fancy going to see "Hamlet" in a form that makes it necessary to leave out the "We defy augury" speech and the greater portion of the text! The truth of the matter is, the cuts and changes in a screen version of Shakespeare render him unimpressive to most of the masses, and only exasperate those who are familiar with his plays.

As to Shakespeare's hatred of the masses: Tolstoy is not always a safe guide and his erroneous opinion, in this case, has misled more than one superficial mind.

Kleine Community Service

eorge Kleine System Inaugurates New Department With Mrs. Dessez in Charge.

MRS. ELIZABETH RICKEY DESSEZ, head of the Community Service Department of the George Kleine System, whose function it is to promote the interest of both exhibitors and theatre patrons in the Conquest Programs produced by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and released by the George Kleine System, left Chicago, on Friday, Sept. 21st, for an extended tour of the country on behalf of Conquest Programs.

Elizabeth Rickey Dessez

Mrs Dessez will visit, among other points, Cleveland, Buffalo, Detroit, Albany, Boston, New York City, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, D. C., Roanoke and Norfolk. She is calling upon the leading educators, journalists and social workers in each city visited and seeking their cooperation in supporting the Better Film Movement throughout America.

Everyone in the film industry recalls Mrs. Dessez became nationally famous a few months ago, when, with Mrs. Philip Speed of New York City, she successfully established the first series of children's matinees in New York City and surprised exhibitors by making their children matinee performances the most profitable of their entire week.

Five Hundred Prints for Liberty Film

National Association Completes Plans for Distribution of All-Star Subjects Designed to Exploit Liberty Bonds.

DETERMINED that at the motion-picture industry's contribution to the promotion of the second great Liberty Loan, which has been launched by the United States, shall be a substantial one the committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry which has been appointed to co-operate with the Secretary of the Treasury in the promulgation of the loan has already completed its plans for the distribution and exhibition of the remarkable Liberty Loan film, in which forty of the most celebrated stars of the stage and screen appear, together with numerous prominent public characters.

The second Liberty Loan picture comprises five distinct subjects, each about five hundred feet in length, any one of which is a complete episode in itself. It is explained by the committee that any one of the five episodes can be shown by exhibitors in any sequence, as there is nothing to indicate that any one film follows another. The subject of the films are all of a distinctly patriotic and historical nature, presenting upon the screen in the persons of the most distinguished stars the greatest characters in the history of the country—the signing of the Declaration of Independence—and twenty or more other memorable events in the history of our country are thus enacted upon the screen by these great stars, always with a view to kindling a patriotic spirit.

Among the notable personages and stars who take part in this unprecedented production are President Wilson, Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo and Thomas A. Edison, De Wolf Hopper, Raymond Hitchcock, Douglas Fairbanks, Julian Eltinge, William Hart, Wilton Lackaye, David Warfield, William Courtleigh, Clifton Crawford, Leon Errol, Edmund Breeze, Jack Hazard, Jefferson De Angelis, Hal Forde, Paul Everton, Jed Proudy, Tom McGrath, Will Rogers, John Drew, Barney Bernard, Mary Pickford, Lillian Russell, Mabel Taliaferro, Beverly Sitgreaves, Mrs. William Courtleigh, Billie Burke, Pauline Frederick, Ann Wheaton, Nance O'Neil, Ethel Barrymore, Elsie Janis, Laurette Taylor, Marguerite Clark and Lililan Walker.

Scene from Liberty Bond Film.

Mary Pickford has turned bandit. She has taken from Bill Hart his young cannon and sent him to his knees in alarm; Douglas Fairbanks is "hands down" because his feet are up; Julian Eltinge in his familiar disguise has collapsed, and Theodore Roberts behind the window looks on the scene with amazement. From all of these well-to-do persons Little Mary has taken every last Liberty Bond they possessed—you may see she has an arm full of them.

The picture was conceived and assembled by Herbert F. Rawll, with the co-operation of the committee of the National Association of the Moving Picture Industry, of which Adolph Zukor is chairman. Other members of the committee are Marcus Loew, J. E. Brulatour, W. W. Irwin and George K. Spoor.

Immediately upon the completion of the five episodes the finished product was taken to Washington by Mr. Rawll, L. E. Olwell and John C. Flinn, advertising and publicity manager of Paramount. Here it was shown to officials of the Treasury Department, by whom it was approved and indorsed.

Chairman Zukor appointed A. L. Lichtman, sales manager of Paramount, as a committee of one to supervise the distribution of the production, of which there will be five hundred prints in all. It is the purpose of the committee to have these five hundred prints shown in as many communities and theaters as is humanly possible during the time that the campaign for the second Liberty Loan is in progress. With that end in view Mr. Lichtman has asked the managers of the various Paramount exchanges scattered throughout the United States to obtain, from each exchange of all other motion picture companies operating in their respective territories, a complete list of all theaters which their exchanges are serving. These lists will be collated and the territory will then be apportioned to each of the several exchanges and they will be furnished with the names of the various towns in which they will handle the distribution of the second Liberty Loan film. By this method every exhibitor in the country will be reached and the dividing up of the entire production into five separate parts will enable the exchange managers to give the pictures the widest possible distribution.

It is pointed out by Mr. Zukor, in notifying the exchanges of this plan, that the handling of this second Liberty Loan picture represents the greatest opportunity which the motion picture industry has thus far been afforded of being of direct service to the country and its tremendous task of winning the war. To the exhibitor the film has the double appeal of its patriotic import and the fact that such a galaxy of notables and stage stars will prove one of the greatest drawing cards that any theater could possibly obtain.

It is urged that the exhibitors give the second Liberty Loan pictures the widest possible publicity and advertising, as it will not only assist in the boosting of the loan itself, but will prove of great advantage to their individual theaters. For the purpose of assisting the exhibitors in advertising the loan the committee is issuing 17,000 sets of advertising slides, the inscriptions upon which have already received the approval of the Treasury Department. One set of these slides is to be sent to every theater in the country.

In this connection the committee also wishes to call the attention of the exhibitors to the Liberty Loan trailer, which was used in publicizing the first Liberty Loan. Every exhibitor who still has this trailer in his possession is urged to use it again in pushing the second one.

ROSEMARY PAGEANT TO BE FILMED.

The National Red Cross Rosemary Pageant, which will be presented for the first time Friday afternoon, October 5, in the great Rosemary open-air amphitheater at Huntington, L. I., is an assured success. This pageant is the direct offering of the artists of the American operatic and dramatic stage to the Red Cross cause. Over 500 prominet actors and actresses will enact the roles and appear in the various groups in the national episodes in the two parts of the historic program. Sousa and his newly enlisted band of 250 musicians will render the music of the pageant. Some of the artists who will portray the various figures in the groups of the allied nations will be as follows:

Herald, Alice Fischer; Russia, Holbrook Blinn; Belgium, Ethel Barrymore; India, Norman Trevor; Australia, Ernest Glendenning; Armenia, Helen Ware; Italy, Shelley Hull; Poland, Mrs. Richard Bennett; New Russia, Eva Le Gallienne; Portugal, Frank Keenan; Roumania, Philip Tonge; Canada, William Faversham; America, Marjorie Rambeau; Japan, Michio Ito; Liberty, Gladys Hanson; Justice, Howard

Kyle; Servia, Tyrone Power; England, E. H Sothern; France, Rita Jolivet.

In order to perpetuate this remarkable production and also to show it to millions of Americans throughout the country pictures will be taken of the episodes as they come to view, and they will be shown for the benefit of the American Red Cross.

Friend Appeals to Exhibitors

Campaign Arranged for Motion Picture Activities During Conservation Week, October 21 to 28, Affords Opportunity for Patriotic Service.

ARTHUR S. FRIEND, treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who is the head of the Motion Picture Division of the United States Food Administration, is authority for the statement that motion picture exhibitors, during the week of October 21 to 28, will have an opportunity of demonstrating their devotion to their country and patriotic service. The call is made for their co-operation and active participation in the great drive for enlisting the food conservation army. The technical name of the movement is the food pledge card campaign.

"Not only are exhibitors requested to exhibit pictures bearing upon the campaign," said Mr. Friend, "but they are also urged to make prominent display of slides, posters and other matter supplied for exploiting this tremendous campaign for the conservation of food in the international crisis.

"Samples of the slides are to be sent to all exhibitors. There are two series, one for the week of October 14, a preliminary series, and one for the week of the campaign, marked A and B respectively.

"It is the desire of the Food Administration that the motion picture exhibitors of the United States shall fully appreciate the importance of this campaign, the gravity of the situation and the manner in which they can materially assist.

"The motion picture industry has claimed for the screen that it is the greatest power and force for good. This is an opportunity to prove it.

"On October 21 the first of the official pictures of the Food Administration will be released. It will constitute a portion of the weekly news reels of Pathe, Universal and Mutual, so that every picture theater in the country subscribing to any one of these three important news weeklies will be able to show it. The picture shows the signing of the Food bill by Senator Saulsbury, president pro tempore of the Senate, in the presence of Senator Chamberlain, who led the fight for the bill from the floor of the Senate; the signing of the bill by Champ Clark, Speaker of the House of Representatives, in the presence of Representative Lever, who fought the bill through the House and in the conference committee, and Mr. Hoover himself as he came from the White House just after having been appointed by President Wilson as United States Food Administrator. Mr. Hoover's first message to the public was in invitation to every man, woman and child in America to join the Food Administration. This message is a part of the picture. The picture is about two hundred feet in length.

"During the week of October 21-28, the four minute men will speak in the theaters on the pledge card and lend their efforts toward the recruiting of this vast army for conservation.

"Of course we count on the exhibitor to make the motion picture end of the campaign a success in his state. Do not hesitate to write or wire us freely at any time.

"There is in the printer's hands a very attractive six-color one-sheet carrying the Food Administration's shield of service and the words 'Food Will Win the War. Official pictures of the United States Food Administration are shown at this theater.' We hope to get these posters out before October 14 so that they can be placed in the lobbies of all of the theaters throughout the country in time for the big drive. When they go out we should like to have them framed and kept permanently on exhibition.

"We have also in course of preparation a very attractively designed certificate with this wording: 'This certifies that ——— theater is a member of the United States Food Administration.' It is approximately 6½ by 10 in size, printed on buff paper, and we hope to find such certificates properly filled out and placed over the box office.

"As I said in the beginning this is an opportunity for the motion picture exhibitors to prove the great value of the screen for the public welfare. It gives exhibitors a chance to demonstrate their absolute commitment to the principles of democratic government. It is a measure of service whose importance will depend upon the response that is received—and I want that response to be such that it will reflect everlasting credit and honor to the motion picture industry."

C. L. Grant Goes on State Mission

Albany Representative of Moving Picture World Going Abroad to Assist in Collection of Soldier and Sailor Vote.

TO assist in the taking of the votes on Election Day of all citizens of New York State who may be serving in and around Europe in the military or naval service, C. L. Grant, of Albany, will shortly leave his home city. This means that Mr. Grant will visit the firing line, the training camps, aviation camps, base hospitals, as well as all United States vessels in European waters.

C. L. Grant.

Mr Grant will be remembered as the efficient Albany representative of the Moving Picture World during the more or less stormy session of the Legislature last winter. There was much doing in a motion picture way in the state capital, and our representative there, through his long association as a newspaper man and through his connection with a state department as well as his wide acquaintance with leaders of thought and action in the legislative center, was able to keep unusually well informed as to measures contemplated and introduced. This knowledge was placed at the command not only of the Moving Picture World but also served as the basis for much sound advice to the chiefs of the industry.

Among the measures the introduction and discussion of which stirred the industry were the Wheeler tax and the Walker Sunday closing. The World representative kept a close watch on the course of these bills and promptly and clearly described the rapidly changing situation for his paper.

Mr. Grant expects to return to Albany some time in December, when he will be ready again to take up his work for the readers of this journal, all of whom, we feel sure, will join us in wishing him a successful trip and a safe homecoming.

WELSH—HICKEY.

Robert Emmett Welsh, managing editor of Motion Picture News, was married on Thursday, September 27, to Cecilia M., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Hickey, of Valatie, N. Y. The bride is a niece of former Governor Martin H. Glynn. Miss Jane Cusack, of Poughkeepsie, was bridesmaid, and Joseph L. Kelly, LL. B., was best man.

Mr. and Mrs. Welsh are spending their honeymoon in New Jersey—as to the exact locality a good guess might make it Atlantic City. Upon their return they will reside at 81 Judge street, Elmhurst, L. I., where preparations have long been in progress for their reception. They will be at home after November 1. The staff of the Moving Picture World extends its congratulations and best wishes for a long and happy life to "Bob" and his bride.

BESSIE BARRISCALE WORKING ON HER THIRD PARALTA.

Messie Barriscale finished work on "Madam Who," Harold MacGrath's military secret service romance, on Friday, the 14th of September, and on the 18th began the production of her third Paralta picture, "Within the Cup," under the direction of Raymond B. West. The story of this play was written by Monte M. Katterjohn, and relates the career of a daring young literary woman. The atmosphere is strictly Bohemian. The opening scenes are laid in the Latin Quarter in Paris and then shift to old Greenwich Village, New York. A big feature of this picture will be a students' ball, typical of the "Bal Bullier" of Paris.

LESSER MAKES TRIP TO COAST.

Varner Labors with Congressmen

Says House Committee Are Hard to Convince on Questions of Exempting Picture Houses from War Tax.

By D. M. Bain.

HON. HENRY B. VARNER, chairman Legislative Committee, American Exhibitors' Association, returned to his home in Lexington, N. C., during the past week for a few days' stay after several weeks spent in Washington in the interest of legislative work as affecting motion picture exhibitors. Mr. Varner states that he has been busy for the past week with the conference committee of the House and Senate, which is working on the War Revenue bill in order to have retained in the final draft the exemption clause covering theaters charging twenty-five cents or less as regular admission.

Mr. Varner, in an interview with a representative of the Moving Picture World, stated that the Senate seems to be standing "pat" in favor of the exemption clause as inserted by the Finance Committee, of whch Hon. F. M. Simmons is chairman, but that the House does not agree without argument, to this exemption. Hon Claude Kitchin, according to Mr. Varner, who is chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, and by virtue of that office also chairman of the House Conference Commttee, the other members being Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois; Lincoln Dixon, of Indiana; Jos. W. Fordney, of Michigan, and J. Hampton Moore, of Pennsylvania, has not yet seen the light regarding the recommendation of the Senate that popular priced motion picture shows are the "poor man's amusement" and should be exempted, if possible, from taxation. "A stamp tax on our shows would be the most popular tax ever levied upon the American public," declares Mr. Varner. "It would continually, every day in the week, remind them of war and war taxes, and rather than pay this additional penny they would simply stay away from the shows. It is utterly impossible for us to collect a stamp tax of one cent on every ten cent admission.

Henry B. Varner.

"The ten per cent. tax would absolutely put out of business seventy-five per cent. of the small theaters of North Carolina, and I believe the same is true of all districts except the larger cities. The majority of the theater owners are not making enough clear profit at the present time to cover this ten per cent. tax, and admission prices have already been raised to a point where the public are getting good and sore, on account of the constantly increasing cost of doing business.

"The moving picture theaters of the nation are already doing more free patriotic work, backing up the army and navy and the President, than any other class of people in America. Every picture theater in the United States is running slides for Food Administration Hoover, they are running every kind of patriotic slide, urging enlistment, urging the people to stand by the President, and are giving monthly benefits for the Red Cross Military Relief. It was greatly through the aid of the motion picture theaters, in tendering their screens unreservedly and in staging speakings, that the first Liberty Loan was so highly successful. The last minute avalanche of subscriptions, after the Liberty Loan commission had turned their attention chiefly to the theaters for aid, is an evidence of this fact. The second Liberty Loan will soon be on, and I believe that the motion picture theaters will more than ever demonstrate their power in putting it over with more than five million subscribers. But if this tax is put on us, there will be only one out of four theaters left to back up the administration.

Mr. Varner will return to Washington this week, where he will remain until the matter is settled, if indeed, it is not settled before this appears in print, which is forecasted in the telegraphic dispatches.

Arouses Louisiana Exhibitors

Percy Wells Visits New Orleans and Tells Theater Managers of the Benefits of Effective Organization.

PERCY WELLS, of Wilmington, North Carolina, spent several days in New Orleans, La., during last month as the guest of E. V. Richards, Jr., of the Strand Amusement Company, and his visit had a most beneficial effect upon the local exhibitors. Mr. Wells is an ardent advocate of organization among the motion picture exhibitors, and he took occasion to tell the Louisiana theater owners where they were doing themselves an absolute injury by dragging along in a haphazard manner and allowing every attempt at organization that they may make to be ruined by the machinations of two or three inconsequental exhibitors whose sole interest in any sort of an organization is to be able to gain a personal advantage therefrom. That has been fatal to the Louisiana exhibitors heretofore, and it will continue to be the stumbling block so long as these conditions are allowed to predominate. Louisiana has no organization.

A recent attempt to perfect such a body resulted in a sumptuous "feed" provided in large part by outside producing concerns, and after that there appeared to be a satisfied return to habitual lethergy. The Louisiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League hasn't enough vitality to mail an "official" communication to the lowliest exhibitor outside of New Orleans. The agency for its "official" organ is in the hands of an exchange manager whose knowledge of the merits of the publication is limited to the contents of the page advertisements of his own concern. Under these conditions, Mr. Wells found rich ground in which to sow the seed of strong effective organization among the better class of exhibitors and the men who do things in the business.

The best exhibitors have frankly refused to couple their names with some of those who have been active in sporadic efforts in the past to organize. These same men are willing and anxious to get together in a dignified, progressive and permanent body. They recognize the need of it, and they were very attentive to Mr. Wells when he outlined the plans of the American Exhibitors' Association. He pointed out the good work done by Mr. Varner in Washington in saving the exhibitors from a national tax, and he pointed out where the North Carolina exhibitors had saved themselves state taxation to the amount of over $30,000 through organization, also the dangers of new legislation where there is no effective means of stopping it. His visit to this state has been of great benefit.

Nutting Assails Trade Review

Canadian Editor Declares Its Mission Is Political and That It Is Not "Of, For and By the Exhibitor."

CHARACTERIZING the Exhibitors' Trade Review as a political organ rather than a paper run in the interest of the exhibitors of the country, Merrick R. Nutting, editor of the Canadian Motion Picture Digest, charges that the Ochs weekly does not print the news of the American Exhibitors' Association, an organization in which the exhibitors of Canada and the United States are more than slightly interested, and as a subscriber to that publication demands that all the news of the exhibitors be printed. In a recent editorial under his signature Mr. Nutting says:

One of the strongest arguments that can be used for organization is the successful convention recently held in St. John, N. B., and one of the best signs that the members of the Exhibitors' League of the Maritime Provinces realize the value of co-operation was the readiness with which they responded to the invitation of C. C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, to become members of that body. During the convention meeting when affiliation with American associations was discussed, the matter was shelved until the next annual meeting, as several of the members thought that owing to the recent break in the M. P. E. L. of A. and the forming of the A. E. A. they were not sufficiently familiar with the objects and scope of these associations, and they preferred that the league take no official action in this matter.

Mr. Pettijohn remained over one day after the convention, and although the majority of the visiting exhibitors had returned to their homes he succeeded in securing thirteen managers who joined the American Exhibitors' Association, paying their dues for the ensuing year. This shows great progress along organization lines, for some of the very men who were first to join the American Exhibitors' Association were the ones who were the hardest to get in the Exhibitors' League when it was formed two years ago.

We have always believed that the most modest man in this business was Lewis J. Selznick, but after reading the story of the St. John Convention in the Exhibitors' Trade Review, issue of September 22, we without hesitation award the medal to Mr. Stephen Bush, the editor of the aforementioned publication. The article he wrote consisted of two hundred and sixty-eight lines of matter, of which one hundred and fifty-seven lines were devoted to what was said and done by those present, together with all the official business of the league, while the remaining one hundred and eleven lines were used by Mr. Bush to tell the readers of the Exhibitors' Trade Review what his remarks were on that occasion. That means that 45 per cent. of the space used in the Exhibitors' Trade Review was for the self-exploitation of one Stephen Bush. Mr. Bush is a very able speaker, as he should be; that is his business. His remarks on organization were good, but also very, very general in their application. The same remarks would have had equal weight in Butte, Montana, or Nashua, N. H., and we do not doubt but what the exhibitors in those localities have listened to the same remarks from Mr. Bush. But as Mr. Bush will probably have a lot of explanations to offer if he continues with the Exhibitors' Trade Review he is probably wise to stay on the fence. Again we admire your modesty, Mr. Bush.

"Steve Brodie" took a chance, why not Steve Bush.

The Exhibitors Trade Review is supposed to be published of, for, and by the Motion Picture Exhibitor. As this text appears on its front cover page we will have to take its word for that. But if this is the case we think there is history being made in certain branches of this industry in which the American and Canadian exhibitor is intensely interested, and which the Exhibitors' Trade Review fails to mention. We have not yet seen recorded in any issue of the Exhibitors' Trade Review the activity or success of the recently formed American Exhibitors' Association. We do not hold a brief for the American Exhibitors' Association or, in fact, any organization, but we do claim that when a trade publication fails to make note or publish news of what is at the present time interesting a large percentage of the biggest and best exhibitors in the United States and Canada, then it is failing in its service to the exhibitor and to the industry as a whole.

The Exhibitors' Trade Review runs a calendar of coming events. As a subscriber of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, I request the publishers to announce the time and place of meeting of the officers of the American Exhibitors' Association, also to carry the news and actions of this new body in order that I as well as others may have the full knowledge of the workings of both associations.

If future issues of the Trade Review do not carry news of the A. E. A. then we will all know that the Trade Review is run not in the interest of the exhibitor, but for politics.

In the article on the convention in last week's issue of the Exhibitors' Trade Review no mention was made of the fact that C. C. Pettijohn, general manager of the A. E. A., was present, or of his reception and talks at both the business and social sessions of the convention. If this does not show without doubt that the Exhibitors' Trade Review is dominated and controlled by Lee Ochs, then yours truly is a mighty poor little guesser. If the Exhibitors' Trade Review will come out in the open, play fair and try to live up to its slogan, "Of, for, and by the Exhibitor," it will then deserve the respect and consideration of every exhibitor on this continent, but its present attitude on some questions makes it funnier than Life or Judge.

Kansas Convention Called

Secretary Marshall Announces Plenty of Entertainment at Manhattan for Meeting on October 15 and 16.

THE semi-annual convention of the M. P. E. L. of Kansas, to which all exhibitors, exchange and supply men are invited, will be held in Manhattan, Kansas, on the 15th and 16th of October. Matters of vital importance to exhibitors will be up for discussion, and it is very essential that all Kansas exhibitors at least attend this convention. Arrangements are being made for the biggest convention of its kind ever held in Kansas, and an extra large attendance is anticipated.

Efforts are being made to obtain several motion-picture stars, and the Kansas State Agricultural College, the institution responsible for the now famous "Winning with Wheat" film, has donated its large gymnasium for a big "Movie Ball," to be held on the evening of the 16th of October, also to stage special entertainment features, etc., for the visitors, all of which will be filmed by the Holt Feature Film Company of Manhattan.

A trip to Fort Riley, including a visit to the famous Camp Funston, has been arranged for with the M. C. and I. Ry. Co. for all in attendance at the convention; also an auto trip over Manhattan and vicinity as guests of the Manhattan Motor Club. Other entertainment will be provided and everything done to make a pleasant and profitable visit for all concerned.

On account of the crowded condition of Manhattan, caused by Camp Funston being only ten miles away, it is imperative that hotel reservations be made as soon as possible. These can be arranged for by writing J. J. Marshall, manager of the Marshall Theater, Manhattan, Kansas.

A. E. A. DIRECTORS' MEETING CALLED.

President Jake Wells, of the American Exhibitors' Association, has called a meeting of the Board of Directors of the A. E. A. to be held at their offices in the Times Building, New York City, on Thursday, October 4, at 11 o'clock. Many matters of importance will be discussed at the meeting and an announcement of vital interest to the exhibitors will be made at the conclusion of the meeting.

PETTIJOHN VISITS EXHIBITORS.

Charles C. Pettijohn, General Manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, left New York Thursday, September 27, to attend a meeting of the directors of the Indiana local of the American Exhibitors' Association. Frank J. Rembusch, chairman of the organization committee of the A. E. A., and Mr. Pettijohn addressed the meeting of the Indiana directors, and outlined to them the work already accomplished by the association. Following the meeting of the Indiana directors, which was held in Indianapolis on Friday, September 28, Mr. Pettijohn left for Chicago, where he addressed another gathering of exhibitors interested in the American Exhibitors' Association, held on Tuesday, October 2.

Exhibitors Act on New Scale

New York Exhibitor Local No. 1 Rejects Demands of the Operators' Union.

ON Monday, Sept. 25, the Exhibitors' League of New York held a meeting at its rooms, 218 West 42d street, New York City, to discuss the question of an increase in the wages of union operators as demanded by the local Operators' Union. About fifty members were present, as were the business manager and secretary of the union, who addressed the meeting. The league appointed a committee to confer with the Operators' Union on Tuesday, Sept. 25, on an equitable scale of wages, the result of their conference to be reported back to the league.

The Exhibitors' League of Manhattan called another meeting on Friday, Sept. 28, to hear report from the committee. The report was very brief and concise, to the effect that the union stood firm in its published demand as set forth in the Moving Picture World of Sept. 29, page 2001, and it would not deviate in any way.

A motion was then made that the Exhibitors' League of America, Local No. 1, go on record as being in favor of an open policy, as the league, as such, could not endorse the demands of the Operators' Union; it considered such actions outside its jurisdiction. In addition it recommended that each member of the league act, individually, on his own judgment in the premises. Practically the same course was followed by the Exhibitors' League of the Borough of the Bronx, New York City.

Conferees Favor Picture Tax

One Cent to Be Levied on Admissions Costing Ten Cents or Fraction Thereof—A Film Tax, Too.

DISAPPOINTMENT reigns in filmdom as a result of the action taken by the conferees of the Senate and House of Representatives in rejecting the proposal of the Senate to exempt from special amusement taxation motion picture theatres charging an admission of twenty-five cents or less.

There is said to have been quite a good deal of discussion over the motion picture taxes. Assurances had come from many sources to the representatives of the industry who have been visiting Washington that the Senate conferees would not give up the ship and would hold to their proposal. They had to give way, however, in a number of instances in order that there might be no deadlock between the two houses of Congress over so important a measure, and when the bill came out from the Senate Finance Committee rooms where the conferees had been meeting for nearly three weeks, the only exemption was the nickel show.

Title VII is devoted to the provisions of the war tax on admissions, section 700 reading as follows:

"Sec. 700. That from and after November 1, 1917, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid (a) tax of one cent for each ten cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place, including admission by season ticket or subscription, to be paid by the person paying for such admission: Provided, That the tax on admission of children under twelve years of age where an admission charge for such children is made shall in every case be one cent; and (b) in the case of persons (except bona fide employees, municipal officers on official business, and children under twelve years of age) admitted free to any place at a time when and under circumstances under which an admission charge is made to other persons of the same class, a tax of one cent for each ten cents or fraction thereof of the price so charged to such other persons for the same or similar accommodations, to be paid by the persons so admitted; and (c) a tax of one cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof paid for admission to any public performance for profit at any cabaret or other similar entertainment to which the charge for admission is wholly or in part included in the price paid for refreshment, service, or merchandise; the amount paid for such admission to be computed under rules prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, such tax to be paid by the person paying for such refreshment, service, or merchandise. In the case of persons having the permanent use of boxes or seats in an opera house or any place of amusement or a lease for the use of such box or seat in such opera house or place of amusement there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to ten per centum of the amount for which a similar box or seat is sold for performance or exhibition at which the box or seat is used or reserved by or for the lessee or holder. These taxes shall not be imposed in the case of a place the maximum charge for admission to which is five cents, or in the case of shows, rides, and other amusements (the maximum charge for admission to which is ten cents) within outdoor general amusement parks, or in the case of admissions to such parks.

"No tax shall be levied under this title in respect to any admissions all the proceeds of which inure exclusively to the benefit of religious, educational or charitable institutions, societies, or organizations, or admissions to agricultural fairs none of the profits of which are distributed to stockholders or members of the association conducting the same.

"The term 'admission' as used in this title includes seats, and tables, reserved or otherwise, and other similar accommodations and the charges made therefor.

"Sec. 702. That every person, corporation, partnership, or association (a) receiving any payments for such admission, or (b) admitting any persons free to any place for admission to which a charge is made shall collect the amount of the tax imposed by section 700 from the person so admitted, and (c) in either case shall make returns and payments of the amounts so collected, at the same time and in the same manner as provided in section 503 of this Act."

Section 503 provides "That each person, corporation, partnership, or association receiving any of the payments referred to in this section shall collect the amount of the tax imposed by such section from the person making such payments, and shall make monthly returns under oath, in duplicate, and pay the taxes so collected * * to the collector of internal revenue of the district in which the principal office or place of business is located. Such returns shall contain such information, and be made in such manner, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation provide."

Tax on Film.

There are, of course, many other items in this bill which affect exhibitors for there are the income and excess profits taxes which will lay heavy toll on the prosperous. There is a tax of one-fourth cent per foot upon all unexposed moving picture films sold by the manufacturer or importer and a tax of one-half cent per foot upon all positive moving picture films, containing a picture ready for projection, sold or leased by the manufacturer, producer or importer.

Upon every parcel or package transported from one point in the United States to another by parcel post on which the postage amounts to 25 cents or more, a tax of one cent for each 25 cents or fractional part thereof charged for such transportation is to be levied upon the sender, and no parcel or package will be transported until a stamp or stamps representing the tax due shall have been affixed to the shipment.

A tax of one cent for each 20 cents or fraction thereof, paid to any person, corporation, partnership, or association, engaged in the business of transporting parcels or packages by express over regular routes between fixed terminals, for the transportation of any package, parcel, or shipment, will be assessed against the shipper, while he will also have to pay a tax of three per cent. of the charges made for the transportation of articles by freight.

WALLACE REID COMING EAST.

Wallace Reid is coming east in the near future—such is the announcement of Jesse L. Lasky. vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasl y Corporation. He is to film "Nan of Music Mountain," by Frank Spearman, while in California and will then cross the continent to do "The Source" which is taken from a magazine story. The chief reason for his transference to the eastern studios and locations is because so much of "The Source" has its locale in the Maine woods.

Ann Little will support him in "Nan of Music Mountain" and in a number of other pictures.

DEXTER OPPOSITE ELSIE FERGUSON.

Elsie Ferguson's next picture, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing" marks the return to the Artcraft fold of Elliott Dexter, whose work under this trade mark was opposite Mary Pickford in "A Romance of the Redwoods." Mr. Dexter appears as Donelson Meigs, the young artist who falls in love with Jennie Cushing.

Sunday Law Gets "Knockout" in Louisville

County Attorney Bullitt Refuses to Prosecute Batch of Violations and Asks for Dismissal of Cases—Makes Strong Plea for Pictures

THE Sunday closing troubles in Louisville, Ky., have been averted, and from the present outlook the exhibitors have no cause to fear that any further trouble will come from this development for years to come. As the result of a number of fights among different tradesmen, where the big fellows were trying to close on Sunday and force the small ones to do so or suffer prosecution under the old blue laws, about one hundred warrants were filed against merchants in all lines of business, including the Keith theater and the West Broadway theater.

When the cases came up in Magistrate Wheeler's Court the room was jammed, and hundreds of persons were standing outside, machines being lined up for some distance, as the decision in this case was of considerable importance locally, and things became very quiet when County Attorney A. Scott Bullitt moved to dismiss all of the pending cases against stores and amusement houses charged with violation of the old Sunday closing laws, basing his brief argument on the statement "that the Sabbath was made for man, not man far the Sabbath, and that it is lawful for a man to take his ox or his ass out of the pit on the Sabbath Day." No objection was made to the motion, and the order of dismissal was accordingly entered.

Prosecutor Moves for Dismissal.

Mr. Bullitt spoke specifically for the Keith house, the Taylor Isaac Drug Co., and an automobile supply house, making his arguments for dismissal shortly after the court opened, and with Magistrate Wheeler on the bench. In moving that the three specific cases be dismissed he said his statement covered cases against proprietors whose stores came under similar charges.

In answer to questions by Lee Miles, president of the Southern Motors Co., and Charles H. Pfeffer, a confectioner, the latter having asked for a jury trial in order that justice might be done, Mr. Bullitt said that while he could not be bound in any particular case by his answer, the general attitude of himself and his associate, Mr. Sullivan, would be the same toward garages making repairs necessary to enable automobiles to operate on Sunday and confectioners selling ice cream, charlotte russe and similar perishable commodities, and that in such actions brought in the future dismissal would probably be moved according to the merits of the case.

Statement of Prosecutor.

In his statement to the court declining to prosecute the cases and asking for their dismissal, Mr. Bullitt said:

"May it please the court: After going over the evidence in the cases called for trial this morning I feel that it is my duty to decline to prosecute and to move the court to dismiss them from the docket.

"There are also a number of other warrants pending against various drug stores, 'movies' and gasoline stations, who are likewise charged with the offense of doing business on the Sabbath day in violation of Section 1321 of the Kentucky Statutes. As practically the same facts and the same questions of law are involved, I shall, therefore, ask the court to save time by disposing of them now.

"Whenever a representative of the Commonwealth feels constraind to move to dismiss a case, fairness and courtesy to the court demand that he state his reasons for doing so. I feel that a County Attorney is under the same duty to decline to prosecute when he believes that no crime has been committed as he is to prosecute when a crime has been committed. Otherwise, prosecution would degenerate into persecution and bring the law itself into contempt.

Believes in Sunday Law.

"Mr. Sullivan, Assistant County Attorney, and myself have from time to time prosecuted Sunday violators and obtained frequent convictions. I believe firmly in the Sunday law from an economical as well as religious standpoint. As my father used to tell me, a man can do more and better work over a long period of time by working six days a week than seven.

"The Sunday law wisely prohibits all but 'works of necessity.' What are the facts in these cases? Drug stores are, in my opinion, 'necessities.' The fact that they sell soap, tooth brushes and soda water doesn't alter the case. The former promotes what is next to godliness, and the latter helps quench the thirst of throats, now as parched as that of Dives when he looked across the gulf at Lazarus in Abraham's bosom.

"Gasoline substations have simply taken the place of the old time livery stable that was always open on Sunday even in counties which were barren of everything but blue laws and lovers' lanes. If running a Ford in Louisville on Sunday is not against the law, neither is selling gasoline to run it.

Plea for Movies.

"Innocent amusements are more necessary today than ever. With 50,000 soldiers in a camp, extending from the outskirts of 'Schnitzelburg' all the way to Highland Park, and with khaki spread over Louisville every Sunday, it is imperative that harmless pastime be furnished the men who honor that uniform. This is in lieu of the divers and sundry temptations that have been removed from their paths. If we take away the movies what is left for them to do?

"Some people are opposed to Sunday newspapers, though they can't help reading them; others oppose Sunday baseball, though they can't help reading the score next day; still others would stop the United States Government from working on the cantonment buildings on Sunday, though they want America to win the war. But we can't please everybody.

"The Court of Appeals has held that no arbitrary or hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what constitutes 'necessary work' on the Sabbath day. What may not be necessary in one age may become necessary in another. It depends upon the varying social and economic conditions of the world.

"Speaking for Mr. Sullivan and myself, the one a Catholic, the other Protestant, one of Irish blood, the other a mixture of several bloods, we are, however, in perfect accord on the ethical as well as legal questions involved in these cases. In the spirit that the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath, and that it is lawful for a man to take his ox or his ass out of a pit on the Sabbath day, we have concluded that in this day and generation, in a city the size of Louisville, drug stores, 'movies' and gasoline stations do not come within the spirit or letter of the Sunday statute. Therefore, of our own motion, we ask the court to dismiss the warrants in all of the cases now pending."

Mr. Bullitt's course in these blanket cases will probably stop all further trouble in Louisville and Jefferson County, and result in the blue laws becoming a dead issue. This decision may operate to advantage out in the state also, as much trouble of this kind has been experienced, at Maysville it having been announced that in the future it will be impossible to buy even a cigar on Sunday. Louisville exhibitors were a bit worried when the trouble broke out, and feared that it might be necessary to go before the Court of Appeals and take a chance on having the law invalidated or go before the legislature and obtain a repeal. This would have cost a great deal of money and have proved a very slow process.

CLAIRE WHITNEY WITH CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG.

Claire Whitney has been engaged for the screen version of "Shirley Kaye," the second Clara Kimball Young picture by her own organization, under the management of Harry I. Garson, now under way at Thanhouser Studios, New Rochelle.

She is cast in the role of Daisy Magen, a young girl who wishes to break into society through the influence of Shirley Kaye, played by Clara Kimball Young.

Miss Whitney is well known in the photo field, having been four years before the camera, and has been seen in many successes, the most notable being "The Nigger," in which she played opposite William Farnum.

She also appeared in "The Plunderer," "When False Tongues Speak," "Under Two Flags," "Heart and Soul," with Theda Bara; and "The Ruling Passion," in which Miss Whitney played the stellar role.

Pathe Announces New Policy of Expansion

With Acquisition of New Stars Will Enter Field of Features in Big Way — Plans for Russian Art Films

MOST important of the news of the week is the announcement from J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., that his company has determined upon a new feature policy for the season now beginning, which will go into immediate effect, and will embrace the following box office stars: Fannie Ward, Frank Keenan, Bessie Love, Bryant Washburn, Pearl White, and Mrs. Vernon Castle. There will be more names added to this list, according to rumors linking with Pathe some of the biggest stars in filmdom, and the Pathe feature program will include a series of special Russian Art Films, which are so beautiful in production, so powerful in story, and so remarkable in acting that they are confidently expected to create a sensation.

Stars in "Pathe Plays."

Pictures starring Mrs. Vernon Castle, Pearl White, Fannie Ward, Bessie Love, Bryant Washburn, Frank Keenan (and others to be announced) will be released as "Pathe Plays" under the star series plan. Exhibitors may book all the "Pathe Plays" featuring all "Pathe Plays" stars, or all the pictures featuring any one or more of them. "Pathe Plays" will be in every way comparable to the biggest features on the market today, and they will be accompanied by a heavy direct-to-the-public advertising campaign conducted as actual and definite co-operation with exhibitors.

Until further notice, pictures starring Gladys Hulette, Antonio Moreno, and Baby Marie Osborne will be "Gold Rooster Plays." They will continue one each week up to the program released October 14. Thereafter they will be released intermittently. October 14 will see the release of the first of the "Pathe Plays," and the program will also include a remarkably strong five-reel "Gold Rooster Play." This does not mean that the Pathe Program will always include two features, though it will do so very often. "The Vicar of Wakefield," "Les Miserables," "Today," and "The Mad Lover" are classed as neither Pathe Plays nor Gold Roosters, but as "Super-Features."

Mrs. Vernon Castle in First Release.

The first of the Pathe Plays will be Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Stranded in Arcady," by Francis Lynde, scheduled for release October 14. Francis Lynde is one of the most popular American writers of this kind of fiction. "Stranded in Arcady" was very successful both as a serial story and as a novel. It is a thrilling, fast moving photoplay in which Mrs. Vernon Castle is supported by a splendid cast, including Elliot Dexter.

It is reported that Fannie Ward's first picture under the Pathe Plays Banner will be the famous A. H. Woods stage success, "The Yellow Ticket." By the terms of her contract with Pathe she receives one of the biggest salaries ever paid a picture star. It is reported that by an arrangement with A. H. Woods and Pathe, Miss Ward is to appear in the leading roles of "Common Clay" and "Innocence" in addition to "The Yellow Ticket." George Fitzmaurice, "the man who makes one hit after another," will be her director.

Miss Ward is one of the popular actresses on the American stage. Some of the well-known plays in which she was featured alternately in America and England are "The Bishop's Carriage," "The Marriage of William Ashe," "The Three of Us," "The New Lady Bantock," and "Madame President." Great as was Miss Ward's popularity on the stage she was destined to attain even greater success as a film star. Among the successful features in which she was starred are Lasky's "The Cheat," "The Marriage of Kitty," "Tennessee's Pardner," "For the Defence," "The Gutter Magdalene," "Each Pearl a Tear," "Witchcraft," and "The Years of the Locust."

Frank Keenan, it is stated, will immediately begin work in Pathe Plays. He made his biggest screen success in Thomas H. Ince's "The Crab" and "The Bride of Hate." He was also starred in "The Thoroughbred" and "The Sin Ye Do." His masterly interpretations have made him known and popular wherever motion pictures are shown.

Bessie Love, who was a success in Triangle pictures as Douglas Fairbanks' leading woman, was born in Los Angeles only seventeen years ago. "The Flying Torpedo" was the title of the film that first made little Bessie Love a factor to be considered. It was her work in it that resulted in her being given a part opposite William S. Hart in "The Aryan." The result was that she scored again. When Douglas Fairbanks came to Los Angeles he determined that Miss Love and no one else should be his leading woman. In consequence she was with him in "The Good Bad-Man," "Reggie Mixes In," "The Mystery of the Leaping Fish," etc. Then she played with DeWolf Hopper in "Stranded," and then with Wilfred Lucas in "Hell-to-Pay Austin." Other features in which she was figured prominently were "A Sister of Six," "The Heiress at Coffee Dan's," "Nina the Flower Girl," "A Daughter of the Poor," and "Her Family Name." Now that she will be starred in her own pictures, great things are to be expected of her.

Bryant Washburn has made a series of personal triumphs during the past six or eight months, thereby earning his reputation which qualifies him as a "Pathe Plays" star. "Skinner's Dress Suit" and some of the other pictures of the Skinner series are pictures in which Bryant Washburn has made himself one of the most popular stars on the screen today. He is a splendid actor, who is particularly suited to the high comedy form of photoplay which is now becoming the most popular and for which it is hardest to obtain capable stars.

In addition to these well-known stars who have already been announced as "Pathe Plays" stars and others to be announced, it is stated that Pathe is signing some of the biggest and best known directors in the motion picture business to produce the Pathe Plays in which they will be featured. Complete announcements of the organizations behind each of the stars, details as to their pictures, release dates, etc., will be made in the near future.

Plans for Russian Art Pictures.

The Moving Picture World last week carried the announcement that American and Canadian rights to the celebrated Russian Art Pictures had been acquired by Pathe. Arrangements were concluded by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and N. S. Kaplan, representative of the famous Moscow Art theater in this country. Twenty-six completed five and six-reel features will be delivered to Pathe before Mr. Kaplan returns to Moscow in October. The first of these fine features to be released will be "The Painted Doll," in which Mme. Lesienko, one of Russia's most notable artists, who created "vampire roles" in that country, and Tanya Fetner, star. This picture will be released the week of October 21.

Ever since these Russian Art pictures were first announced muchinterest has been aroused, and there has been considerable speculation as to what American company would acquire the rights. Before contracts were sighed the Pathe film committee reviewed many of the pictures. The reports of this committee were so enthusiastic that Mr. Berst saw the pictures for himself. He was so impressed by the truly wonderful acting, the strong stories, the fine lighting effects and photography, the costly sets and the able direction that he felt much enthusiasm would be created for the pictures with the very first release—that the public would appreciate the fact that a new note in photography art had been struck with no uncertain hand.

Pathe is confident that exhibitors will welcome these pictures with open arms, and that those who play them will find their audiences enthusiastic about them. They should not only attract those persons who are regular patrons of the motion picture theaters, but increase the clientele of every theater showing them by drawing the best educated and most critical persons of the community. They have been warmly praised by every critic to whom they have been shown. Pathe awaits the verdict of exhibitor and patron with perfect confidence.

LITTLE RUTH IN "LUCKY JIM."

Little Ruth Everdale, he clever baby actress of the American Film Company, who will be remembered for her work in "Souls of Pawn," with Gail Kane, plays an important part in support of William Russell in "Lucky Jim," an early release.

A Million for General Advertising

That's the Sum Famous Players-Lasky Intends to Disburse in the Course of a Single Year.

THE greatest advertising campaign that has ever been inaugurated during the history of the motion picture industry will be launched by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation when Paramount and Artcraft Pictures are advertised in the principal newspapers throughout the country, in the greatest national magazines and upon some of the most important electric signs in the most populous spots in the chief cities of the country. One million dollars will be expended in this colossal drive for Paramount and Artcraft Pictures—an advertising campaign that has no parallel in the amusement world.

The most important feature of the campaign, however, will not be the record-breaking expenditures of the company, but the manner in which the campaign will be linked with the local exhibitor. The entire purpose of the campaign is to pull the public into the local theater, and every conceivable means has been planned for the purpose of hooking up the national and local advertising with the theater in each instance. The campaign will be twofold in its character because of the use of the two different types of mediums represented by the newspapers and the national magazines and the electric signs.

Every newspaper in more than eighty cities in the country will carry the Paramount and Artcraft advertising when the campaign is launched. This means that 300 newspapers in the leading cities of the country will be carrying this advertising. The combined circulation of these daily papers totals 19,390,398.

At least eighteen of the great national magazines will be used. The combined reading populace represented by these is approximately 41,609,000 people. In addition the company will also use the nationally circulated motion picture magazines which represent 100 per cent. motion picture fan circulation. The electric signs covering the most densely populated sections of New York, Chicago and several other of the leading cities will carry the message of Paramount and Artcraft to millions of passers-by during the coming months.

Speaking of the launching of this gigantic advertising campaign, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, said: "This is the first time in the history of the industry that a producing and distributing concern has spent a million dollars for the purpose of telling the public of its stars and plays, but we are already accustomed to taking revolutionary steps. Our decision to expend this sum on advertising in a year is only another indication of our explicit faith in the wonderful future of motion pictures and in our stars, our productions and our organization. We have made a long and careful survey of the situation and are very much pleased to find that the large majority of exhibitors who are showing our pictures are constant advertisers in their local papers. We have worked out a plan whereby they will be able to link up their local advertising with our great national campaign and we are going to render every possible service in assisting them to do so.

"In order to help the exhibitor to hold the new patrons he will win as a result of this great drive we are also taking space in the established motion picture magazines, the readers of which are acknowledged photoplay fans. Furthermore, we are reaching into the highest circle of confirmed amusement seekers by advertising in those publications which reach the theater and opera going public.

"We are placing one million dollars at the disposal of the exhibitor in the determination to assist him in winning and maintaining a profitable clientele. We said that we would help the exhibitor to make money—we have already given him the greatest stars and the greatest directors, backed by a tremendous organization. Here we give him the opportunity to cash in on the most extensive and intensive advertising campaign ever conceived by a motion picture concern."

John C. Flinn, director of advertising and publicity of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is in charge of the entire campaign, which will be put into effect under his supervision during the early part of October.

Carmel Myers in Bluebird's Flock

THE remarkable opportunities the screen affords young women of talent, beauty, and, above all, energy, is set forth strikingly in the instance of Carmel Myers, who becomes a star among Bluebird celebraties with the release of J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton's especially written drama "The Dynast"—made to exploit Miss Myers' capabilities to the very best advantage.

In her particularly happy introduction to the moving picture fraternity—through her father's acquaintance with D. W. Griffith — Miss Myers was, indeed, fortunate; but once given her chance the young lady applied herself with such energy and interest that her advancement was a matter of her own accomplishment. She has come to stardom in a remarkably short time.

Carmel Myers.

She is the daughter of a rabbi who has a world-wide reputation as an authority on Chaldean affairs. While D. W. Griffith was filming his multiple reeler, "Intolerance," he sought information of Miss Myers' father, and in this way she became acquainted with the director. Shortly afterward she found herself at work at the Fine Arts Studio.

She declared that she was willing to play "atmosphere" for two years, if necessary, to gain experience. However, in less than two months after her first day at the studio she was given a good opportunity, which she immediately improved.

Following her appearances in minor positions, she was given more important roles and was numbered among the principals in "Might and the Man" and "A Love Sublime" productions in the Fine Arts series, and in "The Haunted Pajamas," a recent Metro feature. Those in authority at Universal City, Cal., regard Miss Myers' work with great interest and appreciation, when these features had been exhibited, and a contract was soon arranged.

HOXIE AND O'DELL WITH UNIVERSAL.

Hart Hoxie, who is well-known to followers of motion pictures, is playing the leading male role opposite Louise Lovely in "The Wolf and His Mate," which Director E. J. LeSaint is filming. Hoxie appeared in "The Three Godfathers," produced by LeSaint about a year ago, and in the Universal special feature, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," in which Pavlowa was starred. He also appeared in a number of Hobart Bosworth's Universal productions. Recently Hoxie has been with the Lasky company, playing a prominent part in a new Farrar picture. He was with Farrar also in "Joan the Woman."

Another new player with LeSaint's company is George O'Dell, who recently worked with Tyrone Power in "The Planter." Also he played a number of "heavy" roles with Francis X. Bushman, while a member of forces. His characterization of the servant in the stage play, "Mr. Wu," with Walker Whiteside, will be remembered by many theatergoers.

DOROTHY BERNARD WITH FOX FORCES AGAIN.

Picturegoers throughout the United States will welcome the announcement just made by the William Fox offices that Dorothy Bernard has returned to the Fox forces in the Eastern studios at Fort Lee, N. J. Miss Bernard is before the camera in the role of Eponine in "Les Miserables," the massive production starring William Farnum. Jewel Carmen plays Cosette. Frank Lloyd is the director. Miss Bernard's last production for William Fox was "Sporting Blood," which was made by Bertram Bracken, now directing Gladys Brockwell in California.

Laemmle Tells of Improvements

Universal's Chief Returns From Coast and Describes Progress His Company is Making in Production.

CARL LAEMMLE has returned to New York after a month's visit at Universal City. During his stay on the coast important plans were perfected for the filming of several of the most pretentious productions that have been undertaken by the big organization which Mr. Laemmle heads. The final details of a new efficiency system affecting both the business and art of manufacturing dramas for the screen were put into effect during the same period, and a larger number of skilled actors and actresses were put under contract than have been engaged for many months past.

"We are now going full steam ahead," Mr. Laemmle said, "and despite war conditions expect to do our full share in keeping business in a healthy growing state.

"One of the chief things that occupied my attention on the coast was the arrangement of working schedules so that the superproductions I have had in mind for some time can be gotten well under way before the rainy season sets in, as spectacular outdoor effects figure in them prominently."

Mr. Laemmle said that Mae Murray, Dorothy Phillips, Carmel Myers, Franklyn Farnum and some of the other talented young newcomers would be featured in novel and striking roles. He is particularly enthusiastic about the promise that Carmel Myers holds out, having watched her work carefully in "Sirens of the Sea" and other recent productions. Taking the fact into consideraton that Miss Myers is not yet seventeen years old, Mr. Laemmle seems to have grounds for his belief that if the right stories are provided for her she will rapidly develop into one of the screen's favorites.

"I was also much interested," Mr. Laemmle went on, "in observing the final experiments in lighting that have just been perfected at Universal City. The results are in many respects revolutionary, and now put effects at the command of our directors that were thought impossible even a year ago. Night photography has been solved, and many of the greatest scenes that in my judgment we have ever filmed recently have been done by the application of the new electrical technique.

"Mechanical ingenuity can always be relied upon to furnish unusual atmosphere to the screen, but in the final test it is the story that provides the actual foundation upon which screen repuations are built and patronage is attracted in ever-increasing volume.

"To meet this need for fresh material we are putting some of the biggest fiction writers in America under contract to submit all of their new work to us for possible adoption by the screen. The man or woman with a story that has novelty of theme and the right vein of action has my sincere assurance that he or she will receive conscientious and courteous attention on any manuscripts submitted either to Colonel Brady, scenario chief at Universal City, California, or to our eastern editor at 1600 Broadway, New York."

Just prior to Mr. Laemmle's return to New York, he acted as host to Mr. and Mrs. Billy Sunday and their party. The famous evangelist was delighted with his visit at Universal City, and complimented Mr. Laemmle highly upon the spirit of good will and efficiency pervading the big beehive of the silent drama.

"You and your associates are doing a lot of good," Sunday declared as he shook hands on parting. "Keep up the good work. It has my indorsement. Nobody ever could have made me believe that so much expense and work and brains went into the making of moving pictures. It has been a revelation, and I've enjoyed every minute of my stay."

Chaplin Would Enjoin Apollo

Charges Company Has Used His Name in Two Subjects With Production of Which He Had Nothing to Do.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN, whose funny antics have amused millions of patrons of the screen, filed a suit in the United States District Court on September 22 to enjoin the Apollo Feature Film Company, Inc., from appropriating Chaplin's name in any form in the production and release of photoplays.

The plaintiff alleges that the defendant company is offering exhibitors two releases entitled "Charlie Chaplin in a Son of the Gods" and "Charlie Chaplin in the Harem," described as a sensational comedy in two acts, with the evident object of deceiving exhibitors and patrons of the silent drama into the belief that these productions are original Chaplin productions.

As a matter of fact, the plaintiff asserts, he had nothing to do with the production or release of either of the films mentioned, and never authorized their release by the defendant company, which he alleges is attempting to reap financial rewards on the strength of his reputation.

For the purpose of informing the court of the value of his reputation as a screen attraction and the measure of the damage which he claims the alleged appropriation of his name may cause him the plaintiff recites in his complaint that he has just completed a series of twelve photoplays from which he expects to earn $675,000 and has a contract with the National Exhibitors' Circuit for eighteen months, commencing October 1, to appear in eight films, from which he is to receive $1,075,000.

Naturally the originator of the funny walk is perturbed lest his value as a box office attraction be diminished by imitators, and he demands that the defendant company be perpetually enjoined from releasing the films mentioned or using the name Chaplin in any form whatsoever in conjunction with the release of comedies, and asks for $50,000 damages and an accounting.

Nathan Burkan, counsel for the plaintiff, obtained a temporary restraining order enjoining the defendant company from releasing the films mentioned, and will make an application for an injunction at the earliest possible date.

RUTH ALLEN SIGNS TWO-YEAR CONTRACT WITH FAIRBANKS.

Douglas Fairbanks announces that Ruth Allen, connected with his scenario staff for several months past, has been promoted to editor of this department, which includes as writers Anita Loos and Keene Thompson.

Miss Allen is well equipped for her position, having had a thorough literary training in Paris and a practical education in ths country. The contract just signed by Mr. Fairbanks and Miss Allen is for a duration of two years. "In Miss Allen," said Douglas, "we have an editor who is capable in every respect to encourage new writers who show possibilities for unusual development. She is prepared to give immediate consideration to scenarios that could serve as the basis of Fairbanks photoplays."

KROWS GOES TO GOLDWYN.

Arthur Henry Krows, formerly editor of the Triangle magazine, the official house organ of the Triangle Film and Distributing corporations, has taken a position on the publicity staff of Goldwyn Pictures corporation. Herbert Howe, who has been handling the trade paper publicity for Triangle, will take Mr. Krows' former position as editor of the house organ and will also handle the publicity for fan publications.

NEW WRITER ADDED TO TRIANGLE STAFF.

Alvin H. Nietz, Western writer for Triangle, has just finished his second script for Director Cliff Smith and Roy Stewart, and has been added to the permanent staff of writers at Culver City. Mr. Nietz has come into the writing end from the position of assistant director instead of from the usual field of journalism. He formerly was assistant director to Director Raymond West.

Brenon Buys Selznick Interest

Producer Now Sole Owner of Company Bearing His Name—Also Secures Two Subjects.

A FEW weeks ago Herbert Brenon purchased from Lewis J. Selznick, the latter's entire interest in the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, half of which was controlled by Mr. Brenon, the other half by Mr. Selznick. Mr. Brenon has taken over the entire stock, and has commenced making pictures on his own account in his studios at Hudson Heights, N. J.

Mr. Brenon plans to make pictures with no other end in view than the wants and needs of the exhibitor, whom he feels is the vital factor in the motion picture industry. In pursuance of this policy and firmly believing that on the merits of a photodrama rests its true worth he has purchased the rights of what are unquestionably two of the biggest subjects on the market, "Kismet," with Otis Skinner, and "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," the novel by Hall Caine.

With these two pictures, together with "Empty Pockets," the novel by Rupert Hughes, now in the course of production, Mr. Brenon begins his career as an independent producer. The same hand which is responsible for "Neptune's Daughter," "A Daughter of the Gods," "War Brides," "The Lone Wolf" and "The Fall of the Romanoffs" will also direct these noteworthy productions.

Mr. Brenon's statement upon entering the field for himself is as follows:

"Less than three weeks ago I bought out Mr. Selznick's interest in my corporation, as I wished to have an absolutely free hand in the making of my pictures," said Mr. Brenon. "The industry is forging ahead rapidly, and I am determined to keep pace with it.

"In making pictures it will by my policy to keep in close touch with the man who shows the picture to the public, the exhibitor. You can't fool the exhibitor with flamboyant advertising. He is going to look at his box office statement and nothing else. Words don't prove anything, but facts speak for themselves.

"As for the pictures themselves, I can't tell you how firmly I believe in the story first, last and all the time, and it shall be my policy to consider first, last and all the time the story irrespective of any star. In pursuance of this policy, I have commenced immediately to get control of subjects which I feel are at once dramatic and possess big drawing power for the box office.

"On Thursday, Septemb r 20, a representative of mine started for Chicago, and within twenty-four hours had obtained Otis Skinner's signature to appear on the screen in his great dramatic success "Kismet." On Friday, another representative was on his way to Ithaca, where he obtained the motion picture rights of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" from Hall Caine's American agent, Derwent Hall Caine. It is to subjects of this kind that I intend to devote all my energies.

"To my mind, Otis Skinner stands absolutely alone as America's greatest dramatic actor. 'Kismet,' by Edward Knoblock, to me is the greatest romantic melodrama of the last two decades. Mr. Skinner has appeared in many plays, but no exhibitor will question the drawing of 'Kismet.'

"I shall commence work on 'The Woman Thou Gavest Me' in November."

Trufanoff Defendant in Injunction Suit

Iliodor Pictures Corporation Would Restrain Release of "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs."

IN order to protect the rights to "The Fall of the Romanoffs" which is now appearing at the Broadway Theatre in New York City, the Iliodor Pictures Corporation filed a suit in the United States District Court September 19, to enjoin Sergius Michailoff Trufanoff from appearing as Iliodor in productions released by any other film company.

The complaint recites that the Russian priest, who was spiritual adviser to former Czar Nicholas and well acquainted with the life and history of Rasputin and the latter's connection with the Russian Court, entered into a contract on April 14, 1917, to appear exclusively for a period of two years in the screen dramatization entitled "The Fall of the Romanoffs with Iliodor."

Owing to the ex-Czar's advisers' intimate knowledge of Russian Court life the plaintiff company alleges his appearance in the role of Iliodor in the photoplay, which is an expose of international intrigue and a revelation of Court life at Petrograd and Berlin, throwing interesting sidelights on the character of the former Czar and the Kaiser, is very essential to the success of the production.

Despite his contract, the plaintiff alleges that Trufanoff subsequently entered into a contract to appear in the role of Iliodor in a photoplay being produced by the Export and Import Film Company and Ben Blumenthal which is to be released shortly, unless prevented by the courts, under the title of "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs."

The plaintiff company, which is now negotiating for the sale of the rights to the photoplay in all sections of the country, asserts that the value of these rights will be seriously impaired unless the defendant company and particularly, Trufanoff, is enjoined from appearing in similar productions.

O'Gorman, Battle & Vandiver, attorneys for the plaintiff, expect to make an early application for a preliminary injunction not only against Trufanoff but also against the Export and Import Film Company, Ben Blumenthal and others.

Keene Strong for System

SYSTEM is everything is one of my strongest principles," said Lionel H. Keene, the manager of Fox's big Bedford theater, Brooklyn. "Wherever you find a stately theater thronged at every performance with the best people and enjoying the patronage and approval of the public generally, you will find a manager in charge who has a faultless system and a tried and true force of attaches who assist him in carrying it out. This system extends from the manager himself down to the program boy. There is a certain well defined policy in the carrying out of each and every detail of conducting the house, which is adhered to without wavering or slighting it in the most minute degree.

Lionel H. Keene.

"There is a regular hour for the box office to open and close, a certain set time for the doors to open, an a regular time for the curtain to rise. The requisite work about the house is done on schedule time, and in order that this may be accomplished there must be discipline that should be far ahead of that of any other business establishment. Both before and behind the footlights the system must be without a flaw, and when that is the case—as is the case with all successful and well-managed houses—there can be nothing ahead but success and public favor. Nine times out of ten it is the slipshod theater, with a deplorable lack of system, that suffers for want of patronage. System is everything these days, and the business in which it is not the ruling power is an assured failure from its start."

Mr. Keene's experience has ranged from Shakespeare to the pictures. His introduction into theatrical circles was with Frank J. Wilstach in advance of E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe, followed by two years with the Poli Stock Company at the Auditorium theater, Baltimore. It was at this time that he was induced to enter the vaudeville and moving picure field, taking hold of the reins of the Alhambra and Regent theaters, of Philadelphia, under the direction of the Stanley Company. Last season saw him at B. F. Keith's Riverside and Alhambra theaters, New York.

PEGGY ADAMS NEW LEAD FOR VICTOR MOORE.

Peggy Adams is Victor Moore's new leading lady. She was engaged by Director Chester De Vonde to play the lead in but one Victor Moore comedy, but her one week has extended into several and she is now a permanent feature with th Klever Komedy organization. Miss Adams is a beautiful young brunette, with heaps of excellent experience. Her home is in Toronto and most of her professional work has been on the Coast. Her understanding of comedy is enhanced by a dash and daring which make her an admirable co-worker for Mr. Moore.

Famous Players-Lasky Buys Studio

Paragon Fort Lee Plant Becomes Property of Organization —One of Best Equipped in the East.

THE Paragon studio and printing plant at Fort Lee, N. J., have been purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. By this purchase the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation comes into possession of what is admitted by technical experts to be one of the best equipped daylight studios in the world and it will be used for both Paramount and Artcraft productions. For some time the producing companies of both these organizations have been working at the Paragon studio. The newly acquired plant will be known as the Famous Players-Lasky Eastern studio, to distinguish it from the Famous Players studio in New York.

The studio has immense floor space which will render it possible to put on more spectacular scenes and interiors even more elaborate than those which have been seen in Paramount and Artcraft productions. The building is 200x200 feet, and there is approximately 20,000 feet floor space, exclusive of the work rooms and offices. The glass roof at the peak is 75 feet from the floor. Underneath the floor boards is a concrete base which obviates danger of jarring which sometimes ruins an important scene. There are two revolving stages and a steel bridge which travels the length of the studio, enabling the cameraman to photograph from any desired angle of elevation.

A 20-foot terrace extends around the entire plant and in the side walls are sliding panels permitting of the use of this terrace for additional floor space when required. This admits of numerous striking effects. The printing plant adjoins the studio and is said to be the largest in the country.

New Plans for American

Will Increase Expenditures in Effort to Improve Picture Says President Hutchinson.

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, Inc., who has just returned to the home offices at 6227 Broadway, Chicago, from an extensive survey of the studios in Santa Barbara, has declared himself for a general plan that will include largely increased expenditures for the company.

And this despite the fact that just now the majority of the producers are looking for experts to show them how to cut down expenses instead of increasing them.

"We expect to put all our productions on a still higher basis in point of quality," says President Hutchinson, "and to keep our pictures at the standard of excellence for which we plan, will mean the expenditure of even larger sums of money than we have been using in the past. Our aim is always for the very best that can be produced in pictures, and while we do not intend to throw away any money, we expect our expenses to keep pace with the standard we have always set in the picture world.

"I have recently added Margarita Fischer to our stars and this gives us an organization of the highest class of screen artists, comprising Miss Fischer, Mary Miles Minter, Juliette Day, William Russell and Gail Kane. In order to reach their best development each department connected with our picture production must maintain a corresponding degree of quality of direction as well as production. Efficiency is bound to be high priced; but we intend to have only the most artistic talent, trained writers, capable directors, expert camera men and altogether a highly efficient, technical and construction staff in all our companies."

"Polly" Heavily Exploited in Baltimore

Sixty-two Twenty-four Sheets as Well as Much Newspaper Advertising Formed Part of Display.

PROBABLY no motion picture has ever been introduced to the city of Baltimore with quite as much exploitation as has been given the Goldwyn productions prior to their first public showing locally September 24. The campaign organized to acquaint the population of the Maryland city with the merits of the new photoplays has covered virtually every branch of publicity and advertising work.

"Polly of the Circus" began its Baltimore engagement of one week at the New Theater, the first-run house, with a private showing for reviewers Sunday evening, September 23.

For the opening a special setting and shadow-box intended for permanent use were made at a New York studio. A special orchestral setting was also devised. Twelve days before the opening date sixty-two twenty-four sheet stands announcing Goldwyn pictures and stars were posted at carefully selected points in the city. This paper was all in addition to the large quantity of lithograph one-sheets posted widely about the town.

Newspapers carried an underline announcing the coming of the first production a week in advance; and on the Sunday immediately preceding the opening vast quantities of special Goldwyn stories proved a climax to the "readers" that had been run during the foregoing seven days. Advertising ranged on this Sunday from a half-page to six hundred lines.

In addition to all this, well-planned material was mailed to an exclusive mailing list secured from the license numbers of automobiles that have brought patrons to the New during the past year.

Music One-Quarter of Show, Says Beach

Author Declares a Good Orchestra Has Same Psychological Effect as Band on Marching Soldiers.

MOTION picture theater owners all over the world are driving thousands of dollars of business from their houses every week with musical programs unsuited to productions, in the opinion of Rex Beach. The author, whose novels are to be picturized under his supervision and distributed through Goldwyn, believes that carefully selected music, not necessarily original, but chosen for its suitability to the subject, will account for twenty-five per cent. of the financial success of a picture.

"Orchestral music," he said recently, "has the same psychological effect on a motion picture audience as band music on marching soldiers. In both cases music is necessary to weld the emotional appeal.

"We all remember the elemental pianist when the motion picture was in the curio stage—how he pounded and thrummed and fought out civil war battles on his piano keys. He served a purpose, but his day is done.

"Succeeding this earnest person was the six-piece orchestra. You know how those fellows passed the evening—overture, waltz, intermission for refreshments, organ selection, a silent wait, orchestra returns and upset chairs getting adjusted for the popular medley, a little ragtime, organ improvisation and so on to the finish.

"It is very largely different to-day in an evergrowing number of theaters. Here in New York the Strand, for instance, employs an expert to devise musical settings and has them played by a forty-piece symphony orchestra. That brings almost as many people back the next week as the worth of the picture.

"Motion picture music need not be classical, but it must be appropriate. In a large measure the audience is unconscious of its effect, but the effct is there and must be taken account of by the theater owner who expects to make money."

SIR GILBERT PARKER SAILS FOR ENGLAND.

SIR GILBERT PARKER, British novelist, whose works are being translated to the screen for Paramount by J. Stuart Blackton, is en route for his home in England. On the eve of his departure the writer briefly discussed motion pictures and the forthcoming releases for his works.

"I have always taken an interest in the art of the cinema and I believe it is a truly wonderful medium of artistic expression to say nothing of its value in innumerable other directions," said Sir Gilbert. "With men like Commodore Blackton striving continually for greater heights of artistic development how can they fail to advance?"

In November "The Judgment House," first of the Parker novel to be released by Paramount, will go to the public. This production will be extraordinary in many respects. Besides being one of the most dramatic of all the author's moving tales of historic and contemporary life, it affords in the incidents involving the Boer War opportunities for realistic and thrilling battle scenes which have been staged with the utmost care by the producer.

ARBUCKLE TO RETURN TO PACIFIC COAST.

If anyone believes that mere avoirdupois prevents one from feeling the cold, let him inquire of Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, hero of the Paramount-Arbuckle Comedies, the latest of which, "Oh, Doctor!" is released September 30. Owing to the fact that the cold weather of the eastern winter causes the shivers to run up and down Roscoe's spine, the mountainous comedian is arranging to make his way back to California as soon as he is finished with his latest production here. Meantime Mardi Gras throngs at Coney Island have had a chance to obtain a close-up view of Mr. Arbuckle, who has been making scenes for a comedy at Luna Park.

Mutual's October Feature Schedule

Plans to Release Ten Five-Reel Productions During the Month.

TEN five-reel productions with "big stars only" are scheduled for release in October by the Mutual Film Corporation under its schedule of "two a week," which was inaugurated September 1, 1917. The month will bring a new star to the screen, Miss Olive Tell, the Broadway favorite, celebrated as an actress of the speaking stage, will be seen in her first picture, "The Unforeseen," on October 22.

Miss Anita King's first picture under the Mutual banner, "The Girl Angle," is set for release October 8. Miss King has been engaged by E. D. Horkheimer to appear in a series of star productions for Mutual releases. Miss Edna Goodrich, whose first Mutual picture, "Reputation," started off by breaking box office records, is on the October schedule twice, in "Queen X" and "A Daughter of Maryland." Miss Mary Miles Minter's "Her Country's Call" is on the list for October 1 and "Peggy Leads the Way" is listed for October 29. The month's schedule includes:

October 1—"Queen X," the second of the series of Mutual productions starring Miss Goodrich. It is from the story by Edwin M. Stanton, assistant district attorney of New York, and deals with the federal crusade against a gang of Oriental smugglers.

"Her Country's Call," the second of the new series of Mutual-American productions starring Mary Miles Minter, in which Miss Minter is cast as a patriotic little mountaineer.

October 8—"The Girl Angle," the first of the series of Mutual-Horkheimer star productions featuring Miss Anita King. The picture is laid in the rough and ready west with Miss King in the role of a woman who hates the male of the species and gets into complications with outlaws and sheriffs.

"Southern Price," sixth of the series of American-Mutuals starring Gail Kane, casts Miss Kane as the daughter of an old, aristocratic but impoverished Southern family, loved by two men and loving one.

October 15—"The Beautiful Adventure" is Miss Murdock's second picture, an adaptation of the Charles Frohman stage success. It follows "Outcast," a picturization of the startling play of the same title.

"The Calendar Girl" is the second of the Mutual-American productions starring Miss Juliette Day, who left Broadway after her success in "Upstairs and Down" to appear in pictures.

October 22—"The Unforeseen" is Miss Olive Tell's first motion picture, one of the series of Charles Frohman's plays in pictures produced by the Empire All Star Corporation for the Mutual Film Corporation. Miss Tell is a speaking stage star of magnitude and "The Unforeseen" was chosen as the vehicle for her picture debut after careful consideration.

"The Sea Master" is the second of the new series of William Russell productions, following "Sands of Sacrifice." It gives Mr. Russell a new role as a hero of the deep blue. It was under the direction of Edward S. Sloman.

October 29—"Peggy Leads the Way" is the third of the new series of Minter Mutuals, starring the dainty and popular Mary Miles. The picture was titled by Miss Minter herself. The picture is laid in the big forests of California.

"A Daughter of Maryland," the third of the series of Mutual productions starring Edna Goodrich, casts the stage beauty in the role of a beautiful girl of the old southland.

Forthcoming Mutual productions, now in the course of production or finished awaiting a place on the schedule of releases include "Wit," starring Gail Kane; "Betty and the Buccaneers," Miss Juliette Day's third picture; "Lucky Jim," starring William Russell; "Doing Her Bit," Margarita Fischer's first picture under her new contract with the American Film Company, Inc.; "Playing the Game," starring Anita King; "The Impostor," "The Richest Girl" and "My Wife," starring Ann Murdock, and "American Maid," starring Edna Goodrich.

ARBUCKLE SCENARIO EDITOR WEDS.

Announcement was made recently of the marriage of Herbert Warren, scenario editor for Roscoe ("Fatty") Arbuckle, and Valerie Bergere, well known as a vaudeville actress. Mr. Warren is a dramatist of note. Among his most successful work for Mr. Arbuckle were the recent Paramount-Arbuckle productions, "The Reckless Romeo," "His Wedding Night" and "Oh, Doctor!" but Mr. Warren refuses to see any connection between this coincidence and his wedding Mr. and Mrs. Warren are leaving for the Pacific Coast on their honeymoon, as Mr. Warren will continue to assist Mr. Arbuckle in his new work in California.

Walks Tight Rope and Dives 85 Feet

Bar Harbor Summer Colony Stirred by Daring Work of Annette Kellerman in "Queen of the Sea."

ACCUSTOMED as blasé Bar Harbor society is to the unique and unusual it received two superlative thrills when Miss Annette Kellerman walked a tight wire and dived 85 f et into the ocean and when a massive tower was destroyed by dynamite.

The scenario of the new William Fox sub-sea photo-fantasy, "Queen of the Sea," called for these two stunts, and society waited a whole week for them to come off. Miss Kellerman, as in all of her work in pictures, refused to be doubled in the wire-walking scene, insisting upon doing it herself. The danger was pointed out to her, but she declined to permit the employment of an expert wire worker.

For more than six months she has been at work mastering this difficult art, having begun when she was appearing at the Hippodrome last spring. When she came to Bar Harbor a practice wire was rigged at her temporary home, the old Russian Tea House, and she put in many hours. All of her practice on the low wire availed her nothing when it came to do the real "stunt."

The tempo or time of the wire was different, and Miss Kellerman found that she had to begin all over. The wire had a stretch or span of 150 feet, and despite guy ropes and the use of a dozen falls it could not be kept taut.

After waiting a week for a strong wind to subside Miss Kellerman decided to go ahead. She was almost blown from the top of the tower to which the wire was anchored. Five cameras were focused on her and she started. From the beginning it was a struggle against the gale. Twice before she had gone the prescribed distance it looked as though she would be unbalanced, but she regained her equilibrium and walked the distance.

In her dive the gale blowing turned her in the air, but she straightened out her body and struck the water perfectly.

Two days after the wire walking and dive the massive tower was destroyed by dynamite. "Skid" Williams, recognized throughout Maine as an expert in the use of high explosives, used 250 sticks of 75 per cent dynamite and blew the tower into dust. Huge rocks were thrown a long distance.

At both the wire walking and the dynamiting of the tower Miss Kellerman and her company had the assistance of the scout patrol boats of the United States Navy for the Maine division. These patrols warned steamers and other vessels away and kept them from entering the picture.

RAVER ISSUES BROCHURE ON NEW SUBJECT.

A handsome brochure descriptive of Harry Raver's big screen production, "The Public Defender," is announced as ready for distribution. The book consists of eight pages of artistically laid out type matter, is printed in three colors and contains numerous illustrations. These latter run all the way from cartoons on the "Public Defender" movement which have ppeared in the big newspapers supporting the plan the picture advocates to reproductions of the more important scenes from the play. Sketches of the careers of the three stars seen in the leading roles—Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon and Robert Edeson—interesting sidelights on the production, from the producer's angle, and other pertinent details relative to the film as an entertainment are presented in an attractive and interesting manner.

The method by which "The Public Defender" will be marketed, contrary to all rumors regarding its distribution, has not as yet been decided on.

MacQUARRIE TO MAKE BISONS.

Murdock MacQuarrie has been assigned by Henry McRae, Manager of Production at Universal City, to the company of which Neal Hart, well-known portrayer of western characters, is the star. He will begin work in a few days on a two-reel western Bison entitled, "The Keeper of Hellgate," in which Eileen Sedgwick, who has already made an enviable reputation for her daring in wild animal pictures, will play opposite Hart.

MacQuarrie while affiliated with the Universal company several years ago produced a large number of strong dramas which were released under the Gold Seal and Big U brands. McRae is placing every facility at MacQuarrie's command in order to help the new director make Bison photoplays of the highest quality.

BRENON HAS OPERATION.

Herbert Brenon is out of the hospital after an operation for appendicitis and expects soon to be back in the studio directing his new production.

Exchangemen Worried Over Shipments

Washington Distributors Discuss Ways and Means of Meeting a Possible Express Embargo.

FOLLOWING the announcement of a recent temporary embargo by the Adams Express Company out of New York, the exchange managers of Washington have been giving a great deal of study to the local situation, with a view to working out some sort of plan that would tend to protect exhibitors in the event of the companies centered there declaring an embargo.

This resulted in the subject of embargo holding the floor at the meeting of the association, held Friday, September 21, in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce. Sidney B. Lust presided. Present at the meeting were officials from each of the three express companies doing business out of Washington. The whole subject was gone over at considerable length, the express chiefs being asked whether or not thir companies would declare an embargo, and, in the event of their doing so, how long the ban would remain on shipments and when the embargo would occur.

Summed up the situation is as follows: There is a general shortage of rolling stock throughout the country. The Government, under the provisions of a law recently enacted by Congress, has priority rights of shipment. Troops must be moved to mobiliziation camps and to ports of embarkation, and there are huge quantities of supplies of all kinds for the suse of these troops and those on the other side that must be taken care of. This has resulted in the taking off of large numbers of express and baggage cars and combination cars, and the putting into that service of freight cars, which cannot be moved at great speed. This is naturally causing a considerable amount of delay in transportation. Added to this is the shortage of freight cars.

Mr. Lust presented a letter from the American Railway Association's Special Committee on National Defense, in which was suggested a rearrangement of schedules of films allowing for abnormal conditions, making shipments a day earlier than usual and assisting in effecting a more satisfactory delivery. A circular letter bearing on the general situation was inclosed.

The circular, addressed to the patrons of all express companies, states: "In order to utilize terminals and cars to their utmost capacity it is requested that freight service and motor trucks be used for the shorter haul traffic in and around congested districts, and that only such shipments for nearby points as actually demand express service be offered to the express companies, so that the traffic requiring expedited service to and from the more distant points may be cared for."

A number of plans were discussed, but the exchange managers found themselves unable to arrive at anything that would guarantee efficiency. One thought voiced by the managers was that temporary branch stations could be located in various places throughout the territory, from which deliveries of films to the theaters might be made by automobile. This would be an expensive undertaking, and would probably not be resorted to except in an emergency. To say that the Washington exchange managers are worried is putting it mildly, for the condition is serious, and even now it is very difficult to get shipments through anywhere near on time.

Select Opens St. Louis Exchange

Distributing Company Now Has Nineteen Offices in Operation—Controller Derham Making the Rounds.

Sales manager C. E. Shurtleff of Select Pictures left New York recently on a trip for several days, the main object of which will be to open a Select exchange in St. Louis. This new branch is in addition to the eighteen other Select exchanges now operating in the United States.

The St. Louis exchange will be placed in charge of Edward W. Dustin, formerly of the Pathe organization, and until recently the Triangle branch manager in St. Louis. Dustin is a St. Louis man, and has been long and familiarly known to the entire motion-picture industry of the St. Louis district. The Select exchange will occupy the former quarters of the International Film Exchange, which are being remodeled and enlarged to fit the purposes of Select. This office is situated in the centrally located Plaza Hotel block.

On the same train leaving New York, and accompanying Mr. Shurtleff, was A. H. Derham, controller for Select. Mr. Derham paid a short visit in St. Louis and then proceeded to Des Moines. In Des Moines and Kansas City the Select Pictures Corporation is taking over the former exchanges operated for Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc. A. H. Blank, the well-known Middle West operator, has had direction of these exchanges in Kansas City and Des Moines. In the latter place Mr. Derham will conduct an auditing of accounts preparatory to the transfer of this branch to Select Pictures.

Another member of the Select sales force who journeyed west at the same time is Sidney Abel, special representative. Mr. Abel has just returned from a visit to the new Select exchange in Washington, D. C., where he found business unusually satisfactory, and is now beginning an extensive trip to Pittsburgh, Chicago and Minneapolis. Due to the release of "The Moth," Norma Talmadge's first Select picture; "Magda," Clara Kimball Young's first Select production, and "The Public Be Damned," many contracts are being closed at these points.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of September 30 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Man From Painted Post" at the Rialto.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in "The Man from Painted Post" was the leading attraction at the Rialto the week of September 30. "Doug" wrote the photoplay himself from Jackson Gregory's magazine story, "Silver Slippers." He plays the part of Fancy Jim Sherwood, a "two-gun marvel," whose pet vocation is cleaning up gangs of cattle rustlers. Eileen Percy was seen again as leading woman, and Frank Campeau appeared as the deep dyed villain. Joseph Henaberry did the directing. Rialto Animated Magazine, a beautiful scenic, educational subjects, and the usual comedy were also on the program. The soloist was Greek Evans.

"Fighting Odds" at the Strand.

Maxine Elliott made her cinema debut at the Strand the week of September 30 as the star of the Goldwyn production, "Fighting Odds," by Roi Copper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb. The story deals with big business, as it is conducted in the rapidly growing automobile industry. It is a tale of intrigue and trickery on the part of powerful men, and of the loyalty and perseverance of a beautiful woman to outwit the conspirators and bring them to justice. An educational film entitled "The Benefactor," a new comedy, patriotic pictures, and the Strand Topical Review were also on the program. The soloists were Rosa Rand and Mery Zantay.

Eighty-First Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-First Street theater, for the entire week, two features were shown. Mae Marsh in Margaret Mayo's "Polly of the Circus," and the third instalment of the Government war pictures, "The Retreat of the Germans," were the pictures.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs" at the Broadway.

Herbert Brenon's production of "The Fall of the Romanoffs," the eight-part picture with Rasputin as the leading character, is in its second week at the Broadway.

ANOTHER HARD-BOILED EGG CRACKED.

George DuBois Proctor, Triangle staff writer, is one of the wits of scenario row in the Filmdom of Los Angeles, as a recent incident will bear witness. One of Proctor's ambitions in life is to make the tight-wad actor buy a drink occasionally. He was engaged in this indoor sport the other evening and the victim of his importuning was very reluctant. At which Proctor urged:

"G-go on, Bill, buy a d-drink. I'll s-sign the affidavit."

Bill bought the drink.

ROBERT McKIM IN HART'S NEXT.

Thomas H. Ince has assigned an important role to Robert McKim in William S. Hart's second production for Artcraft following "The Narrow Trail" just completed. McKim's first notable success on the screen was in "The Disciple," in which he played the role of Doc Hardy. There followed a successful series of villain characterizations, and it is rather remarkable that although McKim is blessed with youth and good looks, he always has been cast for "heavies."

SPECIAL MEETING OF ADVERTISING FILM MEN.

At a recent meeting of the Advertising Film Producers' Association it was voted to call a special meeting of all members of the Association, to be held in the Statler Hotel, Detroit, Michigan, beginning at 10 a. m., Friday, October 26, 1917. It is urgently requested that all members be present at this meeting as important matters will be considered.

Richardson Crosses Pine Tree State

Steps Down from Nancy Hanks to Look Over Theaters in Calais, Bangor, Augusta, Portland, and Other Towns

IT'S a long, long way to Tipperary, so the song says, which same may or may not be true. But this scribe will solemnly assert, affirm, declare and swear that it is an extended distance from St. John, New Bruswick, to New York City via go-devil. He also will bear witness to the fact that Manager Winter's (Moncton, N. B.) idea of good roads is in urgent need of repairs. It is warped, out of focus and run down at the heel; also it has three punctures and a blow-out.

We had intended to proceed from St. John to Digby by boat, motor down to Yarmouth, ship across the briny to Boston, and "beat it" back to Little Ole New York. But friend Winters assured us he had driven to Boston through Maine last summer, and that the roads were fine—good for any speed we might wish to make. So, largely with a view to saving expense, we pointed the headlight of Nancy Hanks the Go-Devil toward the hills of western New Brunswick, opened the throttle, and within a month or two I hope to get friend spine pulled back down through the top of my skull into normal position provided it gets jounced upward no more.

From St. John to St. Stephen, where we crossed a dinky little bridge and returned to buzzum of Uncle Samuel, there are no towns of size, but there is a "road" which would jar the teeth of an aeroplane pilot loose just to fly over it and look down; also it contains an average of 241 curves, bends and crooks to the mile. At St. George, N. B., I noticed two motion picture theaters; one, the Broadway, locked up (it was 10 a. m.), and the other, the Imperial, open. The latter is up one flight of stairs. It's manager was, so I was told, out fishing or something, but I mounted the stair to find a really neat little theater, with black-bordered screen of proper size for the room, flanked by a neat setting. It was a really pleasing little house, whose manager evidently is "on the job." The population of St. George is about 1,200.

Arriving at St. Stephen, we satisfied a good natured U. S. customs man that we were neither germs nor smugglers, entered the city of Calais, in the sovereign state of Maine, and nearly ate a restaurant out of house and home. For increase of appetite I can recommend driving a motorcycle and side car with five hundred pounds of combined wife and other baggage from St. John to St. Stephen, N. B. Upon arrival the tourist will be ready to take the bone away from a dog if nothing else edible is in sight.

At Calais we visited the Opera House and met its manager, Henry W. Gillespie, and its operators, John Creamer and Leonard Welch. The theater is up one flight, seats 800, and has its operating room on the main floor, level with the screen. Its lobby is pleasingly decorated, and the auditorium is pretty and spacious. Had a pleasant chat with Manager Gillespie, who impressed me as a live wire.

From Calais we took what is known as the "Meddy Bumps" road. In wet weather (which we, thank Heaven, escaped) Muddy Bumps would fit better. They said it was better than the other road. Query: In Heaven's name what is the other road like? In Maine the forests and scenery are wonderfully beautiful. With good roads a drive through Southern Maine would be a thing of beauty and a joy forever. The roads in many places are very hilly, and the scenes from mountain tops could not well be more charming. And the forest roads are charming in another way. But all this has nothing to do with motion pictures, so let us get down to business.

Bangor, Maine.

At Bangor, a pretty, hilly city of 25,000 souls, we paused long enough to fill Nancy Hanks' bowels with gasoline and oil, and visit two theaters. The Graphic, owned and managed by Messrs. Grant & Burns, was first. This house seats 750 and runs matinee and night at five cents admission. Mr. Burns was kind enough to speak very highly of the Moving Picture World. "Could not get along without it," said he. John Mahar is operator. He runs Simplex machines, taking current through Hallberg Economizers—A. C. at the arc. Mounting to the operating room I found Brother Mahar cranking the projector with one hand and rewinding with the other. Aside from this he was in absolute idleness, except for watching his picture, his mechanism, regulating his speed, and attending to his arc. Given one more hand and about two more eyes I should imagine he could manage real well. The screen is bordered with black, which is good, but at the left a white light smears the wall and a clock is brightly illuminated, with two or three advertisements beneath its dial, all brightly lighted, all of which is bad for the audience and the artists on the screen.

At the Park theater, owned by Norman B. Towle, I found

Park Theater, Bangor, Me.

Manager Leslie Davis very much on the job. Davis is a live one, and don't care who knows it. The Park seats 1,300. George Fennelly, chief, and Peter DeVoe, assistant operator, are projecting an eighteen-foot picture at 130 feet. The screen is black bordered, but the clock and exit lights are very bad. I called friend Davis' attention to this important detail, and he assured me the fault would be promptly remedied. The operating room is good as to size, but has light walls, observation ports too narrow, and ports not closed with glass; also there is too much light in the room. However, Operators Fennelly and DeVoe are new on the job, and, so they said, intend to remedy the defects named. The Park has a Hallberg motor generator set which Manager Towle tells me has been running from noon to midnight without a stop, every day for three years, with no repairs except new brushes. This is a most excellent record for the machine; also it speaks well for the operator in charge of it—of proper care and lubrication.

At Augusta I found the houses all closed (forenoon), and only paused long enough to call upon a brother of Manager Towle, of Bangor, who is an operator, though temporarily working at another occupation, and a department fan. We would have stayed longer in Augusta, a most beautiful (and very hilly) city, by the way, but for the fact that we had learned that the Maine exhibitors were to hold a state convention that night in Waterville, which city lay on our route. So we touched the high spots only as the miles flew backward and landed in Waterville as the shades of night descended. But alas and alack, a county fair was in progress and hotels as full as a bologna sausage. It was sleep in the street or go back three miles to Fairfield, so back we sped, intending merely to find a roost, place friend wife thereon, and shoot back to the convention by street car.

But fate was against us. The street car employees had seized the golden moment of the fair crowd to strike, so, having secured a room, we called at the Star theater to get information as to the probable place of meeting of the convention. S. G. Wing, manager of the Star, was a good scout. "I'll go along," said he, "and show you." So into the machine he clambered and back we rolled. And so did Mr. Jinx, for at Waterville something went wrong with Nancy Hanks' gizzard, and we were compelled to shove her to a garage, first having ascertained that the convention had been held in the afternoon anyhow, and that the delegates were scattered around the city or departed homeward. And there you are!

Failing to connect with the convention I hunted up Manager J. J. Pray, of the Silver theater, Waterville, but neither he nor any one else I could find seemed to know much of what had transpired at the meeting, except that Lee Ochs had been present and no very vital business had been transacted, except that it was enacted, after due discussion, that no member of the league use any music in his theater which came under the copyright ban. In the confusion of the fair crowd I was obliged to give up the effort to locate some one who had authentic information of the meeting much to my disgust.

The Silver theater, Waterville, J. J. Pray, manager, projects a very good though rather large picture. The Star theater, Fairfield, S. G. Wing, manager, is a house with one peculiarity probably having no duplicate. Between the front row of seats and the screen is a level space 40 feet in depth, the same being used as a dance floor. Lodges and parties rent it for that purpose, presumably after the show is over at night. The picture is 12 feet wide and the throw 76 feet. The theater seats 400; admission five and ten cents. Herbert Goodwin is operator. Fairfield has about 2,000 population.

From Waterville our road led to Lewiston, where I stopped to shake hands with R. M. Jones, house manager for the Strand, a very pretty house seating 2,200, which did a $1,600 business in six days during the fair week. M. H. Gray is the big gun in matters theatrical in this section. He is the leading spirit in a corporation or company which owns or controls the Strand, Empire and Mystic in Lewiston, two theaters in Brunswick, and other houses in other towns. It was not my privilege to meet Mr. Gray.

Portland, Maine.

From Waterville to Portland is but 95 miles, but a goodly portion of them are strenuous ones. Most of the time the go-devil was barking her way up one side of a steep hill only to send forth shrieks from her brakes on the other; also many of the miles of the bumpety-bump sort. It, therefore, transpired that we arrived in Portland decidedly weary and in a frame of mind to climb into the hay and sleep the sleep of the innocent. But that could not be, for duty is duty, and must be attended to though the heavens fall. So we set forth on a gumshoeing expedition, paying our fifteen and twenty-cent way into the Strand, Empire and Elm theaters successively, three fairly representative Portland palaces of the photoplay.

The screen result, in so far as concerned the operator, was good in all these houses. The light was of good tone value, brilliant and well handled; also the speed of projection, while not closely regulated, was approximately correct in all cases. In each of the houses auditorium lighting was none the best, meaning by this that the lighting itself could be very much improved, while the orchestra lights were very bad indeed, and in one case the very worst I have ever looked at—and I have seen some pretty horrible examples, too, lemme tell you.

I met the managers of each of the houses, and the Empire and Elm managers impressed me as courteous men, anxious and willing to remedy anything which might be wrong. The Strand manager was not interested, of course, as the theater shuts down at the end of the week. It was then to be remodeled, at an estimated cost of $200,000. Judging by the architect's wash drawings the Strand will be, when completed, a beautiful temple of the photoplay. W. E. Reeves, present manager, will direct the remodeled theater. I wish him every success.

The Empire is managed by H. Boucher—an enterprising and very pleasant man. It was in this theater I viewed what was the very worst example of an orchestra, utterly disregarding the rights of the audience and doing everything possible to murder the screen result. There was light literally plastered over everything in sight, including the entire front wall of the stage. It was, from the projection viewpoint, simply awful. It constituted an outrage on the eyes of the audience and rendered really high class projection utterly impossible. Each musician had light enough for three music stands, and in every case it glared straight back into the eyes of the audence. Imagine a patron staring past that smear of bright light for two hours or so, looking at a picture. The musicians seemed to have absolutely no regard for the rights of the audience or to care about anything at all but their own entire and complete comfort. Eyestrain to the audience and injury to the screen result through reflex action on the eyes of the audience was nothing in their young lives. They may and probably will plead ignorance of the effect, but that is no valid excuse. They should have studied such things as have directly to do with their work.

I promptly called Manager Boucher's attention to the matter, and he promised to remedy it. Let us hope, for the sake of his patrons and the business itself, he does. There are other lighting errors in the Empire, which also will have his attention. All this is not said in any carping spirit of criticism. I am setting forth the facts for the benefit of all concerned. I believe Manager Boucher to be a real live wire. He grasped the idea as soon as it was presented. To him there was no argument as to its correctness. The question was to find the best remedy. A man of that kind may make an honest mistake, but he has the will to remedy it when it is discovered, and that is what gets results in the end.

A. F. Eagles is chief operator at the Empire. Brother Eagles is a good man, who is producing the goods on the screen. He was much exercised over the fact that we were not to address the Portland men, and proposed to try and get them together after the shows were closed that night. As it was then 8 o'clock we vetoed the proposal as impractical, but promised to return to Portland in the not distant future and to inform the men of our coming. It would have been done this time, but I did not myself know I would return that way until the last moment, and road conditions were so very uncertain that no definite time of arrival could be set, so no word was sent. Brother Eagles has a good operating room, though there is no fresh air intake and the observation ports are too narrow. There are two Power's machines. That Eagles has been experimenting is proved by various paper patterns of shutters I noticed on the walls. The operating room walls are dark in color.

The Elm theatre is managed by H. Rosenthal, a most courteous man and enterprising manager. A narrow band of black surrounds the Elm picture, and the screen is flanked by dark colored settings. The orchestra lights are very, very bad. The clock is very bad and the exit lights need attention. Manager Rosenthal agreed with all this when it was pointed out and the effect on projection and the eyes of the audience were explained. Also he agreed to effect a remedy. Simplex projectors are used. Screen result is good. Frank Howe is chief and A. Hamilton is assistant operator. I met Brother Hamilton, but not friend Howe.

I would like to have viisted all the Portland men, but under the circumstances it could not be.

We left Portland at 9 a. m., stopped one hour to change a tube which went bluey, stopped one-half hour for lunch, were delayed some getting through or rather around Boston, and arrived in Springfield, Mass., at 6 p. m.—mileage 222. Next day we drove 136 miles to New York between 7.30 a. m. and 2 p. m. And thus endeth the trip to Halifax. Total Go-Devil mileage 1459; by boat 300 miles. RICHARDSON.

Netta Evans in Paramount Pictures

Has Had Wide Experience in Films in Europe and Comes From Denmark to Join Lasky Stock Company.

Journeying direct from Copenhagen, Denmark, to Hollywood, to become a member of the Lasky stock company, Netta Evans, the distinguished English actress, will appear in Paramount pictures in the near future. Miss Evans achieved no small fame with the Pathe and Gaumont companies in Paris. She has also worked in films in Berlin and Copenhagen. Up to the time war was declared between England and Germany Miss Evans had been engaged in picture work in the Teuton capital. Leaving there for Denmark, she secured an engagement with a prominent producing concern in Copenhagen.

ELSIE FERGUSON OPENS LOEW HOUSE.

As the opening film feature of Marcus Loew's New Victoria theater at 125th street and Seventh avenue, New York City, Elsie Ferguson's initial Artcraft picture, "Barbary Sheep," was presented Monday, September 30. The new theater covers an area of 15,000 square feet.

Although many current photoplay releases were considered by Mr. Loew for the opening attraction, "Barbary Sheep" was selected as an ideal offering to mark the debut of his new theatrical palace. There was no matinee on the opening day and for the first night all seats were reserved.

As the guest of honor on this occasion Mr. Loew invited the star of the picture, who accepted the invitation to attend.

"DOC." HENRY A. JOHNSTON DIES.

Henry A. Johnston, former Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World, died suddenly of heart failure at his home in Washington on September 18. He was a druggist by profession and on retiring from that business he became interested in the moving pictures. He was connected with this paper for over a year in 1909 and 1910.

Among the Picture Theaters

T. & D. Theater, Stockton, Cal.

The Newest Link in the Chain of Photoplay Houses Operated by Turner & Dahnken a Gem—Seating Capacity 2,540—Music Furnished by Costly Wurlitzer Organ.

THE latest addition to the great chain of moving picture houses controlled in California by the Turner & Dahnken Circuit of San Francisco is the T. &. D. theater, opened at Stockton, Cal., in July. This new house is not only one of the largest in Central California, having a seating capacity of more than 2,500, but ranks in design and appointments with theaters in cities much larger than Stockton.

The theater was designed by Captain A. W. Cornelius, of San Francisco, who has planned many of the fine theaters of California. Both exterior and interior are after the classical Corinthian style of architecture, with modifications to meet modern needs. Eight Corinthian pilasters grace the facade of the building and surmounting this are four large urns from which colored steam arise, bringing to pleasant memory the Court of the Ages at the great exposition at San Francisco in 1915. Two splendid figures of women, one representing "Music," the other "Art," are at each side of the central window of art glass decorated with the monogram of T. & D. A beautiful marquis extends the full width of the sidewalk, this being decorated by large light globes, as well as animated signs.

The large foyer, with its handsome wall decorations, potted plants and splendid lighting facilities, is suggestive of the entrance to a European opera house, rather than a moving picture theater. Comfortable settees, upholstered in colored cretonnes, are placed at intervals in the entry and near at hand is the women's rest room finished in gray and blue and made doubly attractive with a set of furniture of the classical Adam type.

The auditorium has a seating capacity of 1,040 persons on the lower floor, while the balcony will accommodate 1,500 more. There are fourteen loges on the first floor and eleven in the balcony, these being furnished with comfortable wicker chairs and arranged for the accommodation of large parties. The panel decorations are distinctively Californian, with rolling hills, lofty mountains, and golden colors.

While intended for an exclusive moving picture house a full stage has been provided and equipped with a full set of scenes, likewise a handsome brown velour drop curtain with the T. & D. symbol in gold. On each side of the stage are the great containers for the organ pipes, while others are located in the ceiling. In front of these are grills of Corinthian design to conform to the general architecture of the house. Three beautiful panels, suggestive of the peacock in design and coloring, are at each side and surmount the proscenium arch, while the same motif in more subdued tones decorates the side walls.

Music is furnished by a $26,000 Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra and on the opening evening Albert Hay Malotte, the brilliant organist on the Turner & Dahnken staff, took turns at the big instrument with A. C. Walsh, who is the permanent organist. The projection equipment consists of two of the latest model Powers Camerographs, current being obtained through a motor-generator set.

One of the features in connection with the opening event was the immense amount of publicity that preceded it. W. H. Jobelmann, publicity manager for the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, came up from San Francisco several days before the opening and superintended the publicity work, probably securing more space in the daily press than ever attended the opening of a moving picture theater on the Pacific Coast. It made use of a full page display advertisement in the leading paper and a full section was devoted to the notices of those who assisted in the building of the house, with great amount of space given over to the history of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, a description of the house, and interesting articles concerning moving pictures, moving picture stars and side-lights on theater management.

The opening of the T. & D. theater at Stockton was an event of more than usual moment to E. B. Johnson, secretary of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, since it was here that he passed his boyhood days and gained much of his education. While here he became interested in the amusement business and worked for Alex. Kaiser who was running the Novelty theater as a vaudeville house, with illustrated songs and a reel of moving pictures as a feature bill. He later went to San Francisco and became associated with the circuit which has just entered the Stockton field, becoming secretary and legal adviser. His work with this firm and his connection with the formation of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has made him a national figure in the film business.

The opening speech at the dedication of the theater was made by Mayor A. C. Oullahan and he was followed by George E. Wilhoit, son of R. E. Wilhoit, who built the house for the Turner & Dahnken Circuit. He stated that his father had purchased the property long before moving pictures were in vogue and that it had long been a dream of his to erect a large theater, the site being especially adapted for this purpose.

One of the features of this house that will be especially appreciated at Stockton is the heating, ventilating, and cooling system. The ventilating fans have a capacity for handling about 50,000 cubic feet of air a minute and the cooling sytem will insure a comfortable house at all times. As Stockton is located in the warm belt this matter has been given careful consideration. The lighting system is likewise a noteworthy one, the house lights being in four colors to produce effects, such as moonlight, the ruddy glow of fire, and the like. These are arranged to be operated from different parts of the house.

The seating equipment of the new house was furnished by the Heywood Brothers and Wakefield Co. of San Francisco. The chairs are equipped with spring seats, are upholstered in Spanish leather and finished in Circassian walnut.

The new T. & D. theater at Stockton is being conducted under the management of A. E. Miller, a theater man of wide experience and until recently in charge of a house conducted by the Turner & Dahnken Circuit at Reno, Nevada.

New Auditorium, Dayton, Ohio

One of the Newest of Dayton's Picture Theaters Is a Paragon of Comfort and Convenience—Has Many Unique and Novel Decorations and Fixtures.

THE new Auditorium at Dayton, Ohio, was opened recently. It is one of the most completely equipped theaters in the State of Ohio. The manager, Gilbert Burrows, has exercised splendid taste in planning the color scheme which is carried out in the interior decoration. The Palm room, or lobby proper, is elaborate, the management having gone to quite an expense to furnish it luxuriously. It is handsomely fitted in reed furniture surrounded by massive palms from whose branches hundreds of canaries sing incessantly. Large white pillars and heavy imported tapestry add to the richness. One of the most attractive features of the palm room is the sparkling water fountain, which sends vari-colored sprays of water high into the air, made so by prismatic lights. Hanging wicker lights illuminate the palm room. The floors are covered with heavy green velvet rugs decorated with a single black line. The chairs are silver gray birch and are built for comfort. The lighting fixtures which hang from the ceiling are so arranged that they may be regulated in accord with the sentiment of the photodrama presented. There are thirty-six lights in each fixture, green, blue, red, amber and white. To prevent patrons from stumbling and to facilitate moving in and out of the aisles during the performance, the aisles have been provided with footlights. The second balcony was formerly separated from the parquet floor and was formerly an individual theater in itself. To overcome the inconvenience encountered by patrons, this has been dispensed with and has been made into a balcony directly above the theater proper. It is fitted as elaborately as the lower floor and in the center above the operator's booth is a large frog pond. Four frogs stand in the four corners and a spray of water thrown from their mouths is caught by a large turtle that stands in the center of the pond.

Views of Interior of New Auditorium, Dayton, Ohio.

Such unique and novel features as these put the Auditorium in a place by itself with the theaters of Dayton. Probably the greatest treasure it holds for its patrons is the large $10,000 Kimball echo organ. The organ is so constructed that its siren strains of music are heard all over the theater. This is made possible by grills which are built in the walls and ceilings. Urban Deger acts as organist and conductor of an orchestra of five pieces. The operating booth has been placed in direct line with the screen. Conducive to the health and comfort of its patrons, the Auditorium has installed a complete new ventilating and heating system. This makes possible an even temperature at all times, with a circulation of pure washed air constantly. It is controlled by a large typhoon fan and the air is forced through the building at all times.

A large staff of ushers and attendants afford patrons the best of service. They carry swagger sticks and are garbed in military uniform. A footman in livery assists automobilists at the curb. In fact nothing has been eliminated that makes the "Auditorium" a most desirable photoplay house.

Theater Royal, Drummondville, Quebec

Town with Population of 5,000 Supports 450-Seat Photoplay House—Operated by Messrs. Rene and Bouffard.

TO the list of small towns in this country and in Canada which boasts of having a small but well conducted motion picture house can be added that of Drummondville, Quebec, Canada. This town has a population of only 5,000, but it rejoices in the fact that it can support a 450-seat photoplay theater. The name of this amusement "dispensing" emporium is the Theater Royal, and it was opened in 1915 by J. D. Rene and J. A. Bouffard, the latter named having designed the house. As the photo of the exterior published herewith shows it is a substantial looking structure. Hollow tile has been used as the facing for the front, and the only rather inconvenient thing about the house is the flight of steps that has to be mounted in order to reach the auditorium. But judging from the encouraging amount of business that the Theater Royal has been doing since it was opened the fact that patrons have to ascend a flight of steps has been no handicap.

Theater Royal, Drummondville, Quebec.

Theater Royal is located in the heart of the town and stands upon a plot of ground 38 by 110 feet. Everything in the auditorium is conducive to comfort. The ceiling is 24 feet high, and the seating arrangement has been divided by a number of wide aisles. Sufficient "knee room" has been provided between the rows of seats.

Cream, gold and brown is the motif of the general color scheme of the interior, and this harmonizes perfectly with the mahogany colored seats and the floor covering. Lights are kept burning during the running of a picture, but they are dim and do not affect the picture on the screen at all. There is a throw of 85 feet, and pictures are projected by a Power's 6B. The operating room is spacious and is fitted with all modern equipment.

JEAN DAGLE PURCHASES TILFORD THEATER.

Jean Dagle, a photographer of Murphysboro, Ill., is now the owner of the Tilford theater in that city, having purchased it from George W. Newsome for $4,000. He announces that the name will be changed to the Liberty theater and the seating capacity increased to 700.

Mr. Dagle has had considerable experience in the moving picture business, being at one time associated with the Star theater. He is also a stockholder in several film companies.

COLUMBIA THEATER TO REOPEN OCTOBER 1.

After October 1, Vinton, Ia., is to have another place of amusement. Manager Brechner has definitely announced that he will reopen the Columbia theater on that date. The people of Vinton and vicinity will doubtless be pleased to hear that this popular moving picture theater is to again open its doors after being closed for six months.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

Music Tax—Another Angle.

THE manager for one of our most prominent music publishing firms called my attention to another angle of the "music tax" question, which is decidedly worth serious consideration. He said:

"A person taking out a patent or copyright on an article causes to be stamped or printed on that article the words 'patented' or 'coprighted.' This is the owner's notice to the public that the article is patented or copyrighted, and no further notice is required by law. The owner of a patented or copyrighted article does not need to go personally to any one and warn him that such-and-such an article is restricted. The copyright owner of a musical composition is not required to give notice that you shall not publicly perform his copyrighted music. The music carries the words 'copyrighted by so-and-so,' and that is all the notice required. He can wait until you have played (or caused to be played) the number a dozen times or a hundred times, and then proceed against you for each separate time—a separate infringement for each performance—and collect from ten dollars upward for each separate count. The law gives him a monopoly on his works and the fruits thereof. The law does not stipulate what price a copyright owner shall charge for a license to use his works. It is his privilege to set any price he sees fit for such license, or he may refuse altogether if he chooses. He may sell it for whatever purpose he wishes, or restrict it in any manner he sees fit, for it is his to do with as he likes.

"Now suppose there were no such organization as the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Suppose the composer and author each tried to protect his individual works. They would probably proceed against each infringer whenever it was learned an infringement had occurred. An ordinary mixed musical program might contain anywhere from twelve to fifty infringements in a single evening. The proprietor might have been going along ignorantly making himself liable only to find himself suddenly facing a lawsuit. He could be compelled to pay at least ten dollars for each time a copyrighted piece of music was played without permission. Think what that would mean.

"Now the society has undertaken to furnish a blanket license to cover everything issued by any or all of its members. It undertakes to collect a moderate tax (comparatively) for issuing this license to publicly perform any copyrighted pieces controlled by its members. It has gone to the expense (voluntarily) of printing literature for the purpose of giving information concerning the copyright law, and to explain the position and intentions of the society. Though not required by law to do so, it is explaining, informing and warning possible infringers as to its rights under the law and the penalties for infringement. It is moving slowly so as to give the amusement purveyor every chance to adjust himself to the new order of things. The society is not a cause—it is result. It is not a menace to the purveyor, it is a protection. The theater manager (were it not for the society) would have to address the composer and author of each particular number he wanted to produce, and bargain or arrange terms for permission to produce it. The composer or author (or both) could set any price they saw fit for such permission, and if the number was used without permission they could prefer criminal charges against the offender.

"The society has put everything on a business foundation. All rights and privileges are lumped together and a single payment required. The amusement purveyor knows exactly where he stands, and is fully protected by the society once he secures his license. With the society you have order and system; without the society—chaos. People who are talking about 'breaking up' the society do not realize what they would be up against should they be so unfortunate as to succeed."

(I am making no comment upon the above further than to say that for the best interests of all concerned I want to present all the facts and information I can gather which have a bearing on either side of the question. C. E. S.)

Eight Years Old.

The present copyright law was passed in March, 1909, and went into effect July 1, 1909—eight years ago. That the performance of musical works in public for profit constitutes a sale, was never questioned. Just what was included in the words "for profit" gave the lawyers a chance to argue several years. The United States Supreme Court has decided that hotels, restaurants, cabarets, etc., are purveyors of music for profit just as much as if they charged admission at the door. It was this particular point that was decided upon January 22, 1917. The rest of the law has been in force for eight years, but not enforced. The copyright owners did not care to take any action until the whole question was cleared up in the courts, and they wanted very particularly to include the hotels, restaurants, cafes, and cabarets. So particular was this part of the question that the whole copyright law would have seemed a barren victory unless the cabarets, etc., were included in the list of places "selling musical compositions for profit."

Indeed, one music publisher went so far as to say that in his opinion it was places of this kind which were in great part responsible for the creation of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. He said that the patrons of restaurants, cabarets, etc., demanded the very latest music from musical productions—or music from the very latest musical productions, and it was usually given them at these places far in advance of the visit of the production itself. That the composer of an opera (for example) depended upon the royalties from the production for the greater part of his profits. That after the show had finished its "run" in New York and came out on the road, it was found that the music was already old, ancient and mossgrown; made common in the cabarets, and in consequence the show had lost much of its drawing power with a consequent shrinkage in the composer's and author's royalties. Some argument.

The music could not be played in the cabarets and hotels unless the music was put on the market. The composer's music is handled by some one publishing house exclusively. The publisher does not have to hurry and get this music out for fear someone else will get ahead of him. If he wanted to, there is nothing to keep him from holding it back until the show had finished its New York run, and then put the music on the market. It would sell just as well, for it would then be up to date instead of behind the times.

Presidential Proclamation.

The following proclamations have been issued by the President (of the United States of America), by which copyright protection is granted to works of authors who are citizens or subjects of the countries named:

July 1, 1891.—Belgium, France, Great Britain and the British possessions, and Switzerland.
April 15, 1892.—Germany.
October 31, 1892.—Italy.
May 8, 1893.—Denmark.
July 20, 1893.—Portugal.
July 10, 1895.—Spain.
February 27, 1896.—Mexico.
May 25, 1896.—Chile.
July 1, 1905.—Norway.
Sept. 20, 1907.—Austria.

April 9, 1910.—Austria, Belgium, Chile, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain and her possessions, Italy, Mexico, the Netherlands and possessions, Norway, Portugal, Spain, and Switzerland.

June 29, 1910.—Luxemburg. May 26, 1917.—Sweden. October 15.—Hungary. July 13, 1914.—Other American Republics (South America, etc.).

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"Quaint Provincetown, Cape Cod, Mass." (Conquest).

IN the Edison Conquest Program No. 9 will be found about 500 feet of interesting views in and around Provincetown, Cape Cod, Massachusetts. Here we see the children playing in the streets unafraid of speeding vehicles, quaint gardens, and in fact most of the scenes of interest about this coast town. The picture opens with a view photographed from the top of the Pilgrims' monument. Later we are reminded that Provincetown is a favorite rendezvous of artists and fisher-folk, and attention is drawn to the crooked, narrow streets lined with ancient shade trees, and quaint old houses of an earlier date. The crier, who still wanders through the streets shouting "the news of a sale, a death, a wedding, or a scandal" greets us from the screen.

"Through the Canadian Rockies" (Educational).

One of the most delightful of scenics will be found in this picture. It is a revelation to those unacquainted with the grandeur of the Canadian rockies, with their towering, snow-capped peaks and rushing mountain streams. The pictures were taken during a trip between Vancouver, B. C., and Banff, Alberta. A view of Vancouver and the surrounding country is included, as well as views in and about the mountain resort of Banff.

"Beans and Lady-Bugs" (Gaumont).

In Reel Life No. 74 is an item of interest which reveals something new and simple in methods of extermination of a tiny insect that plays havoc with beans. These mites are called aphides, and last year destroyed thousands of dollars worth of beans. It is interesting to note, as shown in the picture, that scientists have discovered that the common lady-bug considers these destructive little creatures a wondrous delicacy. Therefore the best remedy for victimized bean vines is to place a sufficient number of lady-bugs on them and leave them to do their best. So says the picture.

"Making Eye Glasses" (Gaumont).

The testing of eyesight and the grinding and mounting of scientific lenses are given an interesting description in Reel Life No. 74. Here all the details in connection with this delicate work are explained in closeups, which give a clear idea of just how these lenses of various qualifications are made.

"Microscopic Pond Life" (Conquest).

This subject, found in Program No. 9 of the Edison Conquest Pictures, gives some exceptionally interesting and well-photographed closeups of the minute organisms that are found in still water. These peculiar forms of life have been photographed under the power of a strong microscope, and can be seen moving and gathering their food. This is as clear and comprehensive a picture of the kind as we have seen.

"Kneadless Bread" (Universal).

In Screen Magazine No. 41 Mrs. A. Louise Andrea shows us how to make bread after a new method. For the foundation she uses six cups of flour, a tablespoonful of sugar, a tablespoonful of salt, two cupfuls of luke warm water, and the proper amount of yeast. She explains the strength-giving properties of her materials, and proceeds then to mix the bread, into which is put two tablespoofuls of lard. The dough is then tossed and folded, which she explains is better than kneading, and set to rise to double its original size, after which it is punched down and left to rise again. It is then made into loaves, which are also set to rise previous to placing in a hot oven to bake.

"School for Motormen" (Universal).

Just how men are educated in the management of street cars and elevated trains is shown in Screen Magazine No. 41, where we are told that the most thorough course of its kind is found in a school maintained by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company. A demonstration board showing how electric current travels through the car is the first step in this particular branch of education. They are then taught that the controller governs the supply of electricity, and that its judicious manipulation means the saving of electricity and the prevention of accidents. They learn also that when the air brake is out of commission the hand brake must be resorted to. A sliding car on wet rails is a dangerous thing, and the recruits are taught how to properly sand them. Finally they are given instruction on a regular car. This picture is an interesting one.

"Unmasking the Mediums" (Paramount-Bray).

The third of the series of "Unmasking the Mediums," which is being made in co-operation with the well-known psychologist, Hereward Carrington, appears in the 86th release of the Pictograph. The particular branch of fakeism explained in this number is that which has to do with the materializing of spirits. Mr. Carrington does the materialization himself, showing how in the darkness the white filmy form is seen to rise from the floor to full height, then after the lights are flashed on for a brief second the ghost proceeds to disappear from whence it came. The disillusionment resulting from his explanation is complete.

"Making Steel Rails for the Allies" (Pathe).

One of the best industrial subjects of present release is a half reel produced by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., showing the treatment of iron ore and its subsequent conversion into Bessemer steel. The picture shows the rolling and cutting process in the making of the rails, and the various details from the extraction of the ore to the finished product. It was made at a large iron mine and steel plant.

"Kangaroos" (Educational-Ditmars).

An amusing and instructive illustration of the habits of the kangaroo, including his peculiar characteristics, will be seen in this picture. We learn that the kangaroo is found in Australia, Tasmania, and New Guinea, that its long tail is useful as well as ornamental, and is used as a prop on many occasions, especially when sitting on its hind legs or when using all four feet in battle. Grain, hay and vegetables are the chief foods of the kangaroo, with the exception of a peculiar species known as the tree kangaroo. This animal feeds on leaves and fruit. One of the interesting and less familiar sights of the picture shows the female carrying her young in a pouch. Very entertaining scenes show a kangaroo fighting with his keeper through a wire fence.

Y. M. C. A. in Training Camps

The Moving Picture Important Factor in Training Camp Recreation.

THE necessity for wholesome recreation to be supplied the thousands of men who are peopling the cantonments and various training camps throughout the country has made a large call on the facilities of the moving picture. The fact that 8,000,000 feet of film is being exhibited weekly at these training camps in auditoriums which have been erected by the Y. M. C. A. will give some idea of the extent to which the screen is being utilized for this purpose. The work of taking care of the moving picture end of camp recreation when turned over to the Y. M. C. A. by the Commission on Training Camp Activities of the Department of War was taken up by a department of the Y. M. C. A. established for such purpose, known as the War Work Council. The War Work Council then set about the erection of buildings of different sizes according to requirements at the various cantonments and training camps, and which now number some four hundred buildings. These buildings consist for the most part of a main portion which is fitted up comfortably as a reading room, and which also contains desks and writing materials. Here the soldiers are encouraged to come and write as many letters home as they desire. A wing added to each of these buildings forms an auditorium, which contains a moving picture outfit; and here shows are given on different nights of the week, at least three of which consist of moving pictures. These shows are well attended and much appreciated by the men in the camps.

The pictures which are being exhibited in the camps are being supplied to the Y. M. C. A. at cost by the Community Motion Picture Bureau, who purchase films from the various manufacturers, who are also doing their bit in a co-operative way. The films which are sent to the camps for exhibition are first looked at by representatives of the Community Motion Picture Bureau and chosen on their merit and general good quality. In addition to the keeping of these film programs, which vary from two to seven reels, in circulation, a staff of projection mechanics are employed to traverse the camps for the purpose of taking care of the projection machines and seeing to it that they are kept in good order.

These auditoriums have frequently to be enlarged. Not long ago the men at one of the camps showed their appreciation of the entertainments being provided by jamming the auditorium to such an extent that one end of the building was pushed out. A number of the ships of the Atlantic fleet are also being supplied in a like manner with film programs. And in addition to this automobile trucks equipped with moving picture and lighting apparatus are being used along the borders and in out of the way places.

It must not be supposed that each camp is limited to one building. On the contrary some camps have as many as eleven; some have eight and nine or as many as are deemed necessary for each individual purpose. And at each building or hut, as it is usually called, is a staff of five or six men in charge.

This work is being extended by the Y. M. C. A. to Europe, and the shipping of films for this purpose has already begun. The work there will be carried out on the same lines as here, with the exception of the fact that innovations such as soda water fountains and other Americanisms will be installed for the comfort and convenience of our men abroad.

U. S. Ambulance Corps at Work

Paramount-Bray Pictograph Gives Fine Illustration of Manner in Which Members of the U. S. Ambulance Corps are Taught to Perform Their Duties.

JUST how men are trained for service in the U. S. Ambulance Corps is shown in the 86th release of the Pictograph. The picture was taken in what is probably the largest camp of its kind, at which at the present time are 4,500 men in training. In the first place these men are drilled as soldiers are drilled. Then they are taught the handling and care of the wounded, and are schooled in the use of the many modern appliances that the war has brought into existence. They are taught also to be mechanics as well as nurses and doctors, for they must be able to repair the automobile ambulances suffering from injury of any sort. They must understand the management of the portable ice machines that are now a necessity of the battlefield, and they must understand the art of rapid inoculation in order to ward off disease. The picture is really worth while, and covers fully the training of the ambulance men and the many remarkable appurtenances and devices now in use in the field of battle.

This picture is given special notice because we believe that not only is the subject one of special interest at the present time when attention is focused on matters of war and the welfare of the men who go to fight for us, but because we believe it to be the first detailed illustration of the subject that has been filmed.

TRYING TO INSPIRE MANITOBA.

Practical Methods of Stimulating Interest in Artistic Pictures Introduced by Manitoba Woman.

IN planning to stimulate the interest of her province in fine motion pictures, Valance Patriarche, a member of the Manitoba Provincial Board of Censors, has hit upon a simple method which should prove effective. She has undertaken to have monthly lists of pictures voted "good" by the Review of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures posted in public places. The places chosen as reaching the public most easily are the main aisle of the Industrial Bureau, a permanent exhibition building, in large book stores, rest rooms of department stores, and in reading rooms of libraries and local private schools.

Although a member of the Board of Censors, Miss Patriarche is heartily in sympathy with the plan of bettering picture conditions through encouraging the use of fine pictures rather than through erratic and inconsistent denunciations indulged in by some types of reformers who become busy periodically.

Film Shows Manufacture of Motorcycle

E. I. S. Produces Interesting Four-Part Picture Showing Manufacture of Indian Motorcycle.

ONE of the very latest things in industrial motion pictures is a four-part production made by the E. I. S. Corporation, and which stages in an attractive manner the manufacture of the Indian motorcycle. The picture was made with a slight story interest, and opens with a number of outdoor scenes covering the period in which the investigating party is motoring to the factory. The picture was directed by Dixon Boardman, president of the E. I. S. Motion Picture Corporation, with C. B. Franklin and June Daye, the only professionals in the picture by-the-way, as the principal characters. It gives a clearly detailed description of the manufacture of the intricate parts of the motorcycle, the assembling, etc. The latter part of the picture gives some useful advice to women regarding the use of the motorcycle, showing with what ease it can be mastered if one has the good judgment to learn on the double variety before attacking the single motorcycle. The picture is exceptionally well made, and will make a pleasing adjunct to the regular theater program, in which capacity it will be released by the E. I. S. Company in addition to its use as an advertising medium.

At a private showing of the film given recently in the Joseph Miles projection room, Camilla Donworth, who negotiated the sale of the picture to the manufacturing company for which it was made, was in charge of the exhibition, which was attended by members of the League of Advertising Women, as well as a number of men from the New York Advertising Club.

New Submarine Destroyer

Animated Mechanical Drawing by J. F. Leventhal, of the Bray Studios, Demonstrates New Invention.

TO the clever animated mechanical drawings of J. F. Leventhal, of the Bray studios, we owe the stimulation of much interest in various new inventions for use in the militia and navy in combating the enemy. In fact through the clear presentaton of the subject given in these drawings more than one of these inventions has been adopted by the Government. The latest animated demonstration which comes to us from Mr. Leventhal's pen, in conjunction with the popular Popular Science Monthly and the moving picture camera, is "A New Submarine Destroyer," and will be found in the 86th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph.

The invention is that of Thomas Edison Lake, and is an aerial submarine destroyer, which makes use of the aeroplane in combating submarines.

It is a fact that an underwater boat, when submerged to a depth of thirty or more feet, is perfectly visible to an aviator flying two hundred feet above the surface, although he himself remains unseen by the enemy. His aeroplane is equipped with a long cable wound on a drum. To the end of the cable is fastened a high explosive bomb, and when he has once located the U-boat, he lowers the bomb into the water to the proper depth and proceeds to troll for the submarine much as a fisherman trolls for bass. His object is to strike the vessel amidships, and the submarine, big and slower and less easily handled, cannot make its escape even if the first attempt might be unsuccessful. One touch of the bomb against the submarine's side sets off the explosive, and the vessel is literally blown to pieces.

The picture's illustration is clear and practical, and will be found of intense interest to the majority of adult audiences.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM.

This film possesses the double power attraction of a popular title with a popular player, each almost equally well known and admired. With a combination of this kind there is little that can fall under the usual rules of a review. The well-known book causes its multitudes of readers to wish to see in actual life a portrayal of those characters which have become so familiar to them. Paradoxical though it may seem, to speak of being disappointed with the production of this subject is to praise it. In the first place it is at least one reel too short, and perhaps even two reels could have been added with advantage. This brevity also robs Miss Pickford of many added opportunities for the display of many of those abilities which are so natural to her in such a characterization as this. It would seem that sufficient justice is not accorded either to the authoress, the book or the picture and players. Too much cutting has made a pretty playlet of a larger, stronger and more worthy work. As it appears disappointment will only be for those who are familiar with Rebecca, her family and relatives. To the uninitiated the picture presents an interesting, pretty and entertaining little play, which may arouse a desire for the larger knowledge of the characters in the full meaning of the story.

Miss Pickford is, as usual, very much at home in her part, which she fills well enough to make it appear that she and Rebecca are twins. She is also ably supported by a cast which fully enters into the spirit of the occasion and times. The success of the story bespeaks the success of the picture, and many will be made happier thereby.

Another added good of Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm lies in the fact that it is a safe picture; that is, one which can be shown anywhere. There is a great and growing need to-day for pictures that can be shown in institutions, schools and even churches, and which can be designated as safe pictures. This is a valuable addition to that somewhat limited number, thereby increasing its welcome to a larger audience. We can only repeat—that we wish there were more of it.

W. H. J.

The Warrior

THIS great picture, in which Maciste of Cabirian fame is the hero, is well worth the attention of every lover of great pictures. Not a war picture, yet founded upon a military conflict between Austria and Italy in the cause of Italian freedom, occasional conflicts are depicted, in each of which Maciste becomes the warrior, hero and conqueror. There are those who see in Maciste a rival of Douglas Fairbanks. True, there are many thrills common to both men—perhaps it is because they two alone are equal to the many acrobatic feats they perform which cause his classification—yet despite similarities they each possess and show an individuality of great power and attractiveness. One of the chief points in this film is the beautiful production of the scenic Italian Alps upon whose snow clad slopes Maciste performs some wonderfully heroic acts, and leads the soldiers in many desperate thrills, such as climbing up the sides of precipitous rocks, crossing ravines hand over hand upon a cable, a scene which is watched in breathless suspense. The whole picture is one happy blending of beauty and power, heroic deeds constantly spiced with the most pleasant humor, so that the audience both applauds the power of the deed and laughs at the way it is performed; it should further be added that nearly every strong act is for the purpose of some happy deliverance from a dire fate. Not only is the picture all round good, but it may be classified as safe in that it can be shown anywhere, in any building, before any audience, without a single exception of any kind. It is worthy of especial note that the military scenes upon the Italian frontier are not staged but actual scenes in the present war, and so reveal some of the great difficulties of mountain warfare and the methods of overcoming them. This film can be placed upon all the good classified lists. The educational list will profit by its addition, as it is as abundantly educational as it is entertaining and thrilling.

Hutchinson to Spend More Money

American's President, Back From Santa Barbara, Announces a General Expansion.

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, Inc., who has just returned to the home offices in Chicago from survey of the studios in Santa Barbara, has declared himself for a general plan that will include largely increased expenditures for the company.

"We expect to put all our productions on a still higher basis in point of quality," says President Hutchinson, "and to keep our pictures at the standard of excellence for which we plan will mean the expenditure of even larger sums of money than we have been using in the past. Our aim is always for the very best that can be produced in pictures.

"I have recently added Margarita Fischer to our stars, and this gives us an organization of the highest class of screen artists, comprising Miss Fischer, Mary Miles Minter, Juliette Day, William Russell, and Gail Kane. In order to reach their best development each department connected with our production must maintain a corresponding degree of quality in other directions, as well as in production."

Triangle Litterateurs at Full Speed

Julian Johnson Now in Charge—All the Rest Busy With Forthcoming Triangle Stories.

WITH the arrival of Julian Johnson, former editor of Photoplay Magazine and now editor-in-chief of the Triangle literary department at Culver City, all scenarios are being carefully vised by the new chief after they leave the hands of Editor Cunningham, whose large force of writers is busily engaged on a variety of stories. Most of the scribes are back from their vacations and are getting acquainted with the new additions to the staff, among whom is a California lawyer, recently enrolled under the Triangle banner.

Grant Wallace, seasoned war correspondent and chum of the late Richard Harding Davis, has put over his first big western story, which promises to present something new in the way of western drama. Mr. Wallace has tramped the West and Southwest and knows his locale as well as he knows Park Row, where he worked for many years.

Lillian Ducey, the short story writer, who has lately been added to the staff of the Triangle scenario department, is now working on her first script.

Will Levington Comfort, the novelist, was the guest of Jack Cunningham, the scenario editor, at the Triangle studio, last week, and although he has heretofore rather shied at considering one of his novels for the screen, he was so interested that he inquired into the possibility of putting one of his stories before the camera. The result was that the Culver City readers are taking a long delayed squint at several of Mr. Comfort's stories.

R. Cecil Smith has conquered his almost irresistible smile for the time being and is closeted in his Culver City home with a story by Earl Derr Biggers, which is soon to be screened for the Triangle program.

Joseph Anthony Roach, staff writer at the Triangle Culver City studio, has been examined and declared 100%, physically, by the local exemption board, but notwithstanding the excitement of knowing that he is U. S. inspected, he expects to finish his new story for Olive Thomas before the U. S. N. A. takes him away from Culver City.

Verne Hardin Porter, story writer and former magazine editor, is quite inured to the hardships of continuity writing at the Triangle Culver City studio, and is now entering into the travail of his third continuity.

H. B. Daniels, by profession a San Diego lawyer and by choice a writer of very fine screen stories, has joined the staff of Triangle writers.

George Elwood Jenks has just finished the script of H. O. Davis' patriotic story, in which Ruth Stonehouse is being featured, and is now devoting his talent to a comedy drama script for Olive Thomas.

George du Boise Proctor, veteran of the Long Acre Square table d'hote, has forsaken comedy drama for the time being and is writing a really serious drama for Triangle.

NANON TOBY WITH OUIDA BERGERE.

Nanon Toby, formerly engaged in the Triangle publicity department in the capacity of writer for the fan magazines, has become manager for Ouida Bergere's New York exchange.

Now for Adult Shows.

PRACTICALLY every part of the country reports good results from special Saturday morning performances designed especially to meet the requirements of the children. How would it do to offer a weeky program designed particularly for the adult? We do not mean those "Children under sixteen not admitted" affairs. Those are never to be recommended. What we have in mind is rather a weekly performance of particular merit that will appeal to the really intelligent. About eighty per cent. of the present output still, consciously or otherwise, caters to the child mind, on the broad, but mistaken, idea that motion picture patrons are largely composed of persons of unformed intelligence. A very large majority of the plays are elemental in theme and dependent upon sight thrill for suspense—the sort of stuff a child can understand. A prevalence of this sort of stuff has kept from the theater a very desirable class of patronage; a class of persons who, by reason of their other activities, are unlikely to become daily fans and yet who might become regular weekly patrons could they be assured of seeing plays that were not insults to their intelligences. Why not set apart one night a week on which to give a program of unusual merit? Get after the better class of your regular patrons and the people who might but do not attend picture performances. Exercise unusual care in the selection of your features and be most particular in your choice of comedies. Do not offer a Vicar of Wakefield and follow it with a junk comedy. Trust rather to a travel or news feature of recent date or a Drew or Christie comedy with a story and without horseplay. Select a musical program, if you feature your music, that is a shade above the usual. There is plenty of good music that is also tuneful—that will appeal to the masses and still be recognized by those who know good music. If you have a dead night in the middle of the week you may be able to make it one of your best nights by catering to the class of persons who can appreciate the best and are willing to pay for it. Ask a quarter instead of ten or fifteen cents. The people you are catering to will not care about the extra dime and will feel that the increased price will be some assurance that the audience will be above the average. But be careful in your advertising not to give offense to the people who form the bulk of your patronage. Do not say that you are offering something they cannot understand. Don't make any such break as that. Announce a series of literary nights or de luxe nights or anything of that sort. The ten and fifteen-cent people you want to keep out will quickly learn to stay away because they will figure that these programs at the higher prices are not worth while, and will leave the house free to the others. We know one man who likes the pictures, but he stays away because most of the houses in his neighborhood are overrun by noisy children. He waits until he can get into town for the Rialto or the Strand, though he objects to the "airs" these houses put on and longs for the more comfortable atmosphere of the neighborhood theatre. Doubtless there are many like him who would appreciate a performance practically free from the younger children. Another acquaintance says he would go more often if he could be assured a worth while show, but titles mean nothing to him and he is not so keen for the pictures that he is willing to "study the dope" and pick out the plays he knows will be good. He, too, would come with the assurance that the bill, regardless of the title, would be worth his while. The idea seems to have large possibilities and where it can be worked without giving offense to the regulars the idea should be worth a trial.

Wented.

Real Reels, the organ of the Notable Features Film Company, of Salt Lake City, has wented. We announced recently the resignation of George Editor Carpenter, its founder, and now it has been decided by the new publicity man to drop the house organ and substitute a publicity department. Mr. Carpenter made the sheet more or less a national institution, in addition to doing powerful work for the exchange in its own territory, and we are sorry to note the passing of the reel. It will be missed. Even a publicity department needs an organ, for that matter.

Bone Dry Drinks.

There must be a lot of advertisers of the real sort down in De Queen, Ark., or else A. L. Middleton writes all the trade ads for his program, for the Queen's Amusement Herald has a lot of good ads. One late one advertises "All kinds of bone dry drinks," which is a sufficient contradiction to excite interest. Since we'll all be bone dry pretty soon, make a note of the line and suggest it to the confectioner whose advertisement you are trying to get.

A Pickford Pointer.

Star weeks for Paramount rebooks will be common under the new system of second runs by stars and Con Jones, of the Orpheum, Vancouver, (B. C. or Washington?) gives a good suggestion for the Pickford revivals. The handbill program is not a very good example of typographic work, but it is a good example of getting up the big lines. Mr. Jones booked Rags, Fanchon, Dawn of Tomorrow, Madame Butterfly, Hulda of Holland and Poor Little Peppina, and on the back page plays on the fact that each represents Miss Pickford as of different nationality—American, French, English, Japanese, Dutch and Italian. Here is a point worth taking up, and yet one which many would overlook. The inside page is set as a double with an overall catchline, and here, too, the days are all named and dated, the same on the back. It is always a good idea to date every date, no matter how often repeated. Mr. Jones does. The inside gives four to eight lines to each story, but the essence of the plan is found on that back page, and nothing can give a clearer idea of the wide range of Miss Pickford's work than this "All-national" week.

The Wrong Idea.

We clip from a letter a paragraph that, in some form, turns up almost every week.

> We are personally acquainted with your two "steadies"—Ralph Ruffner and "100 per cent" Fullerton and, although we would like to take issue with them occasionally, through your columns, we refrain because we are advertising the Rialto and not ourselves.
> For the same reason, you will please accept the typewritten signature attached hereto.

This is all wrong. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and his hire is not merely the money he finds in his pay envelope. The man who works merely for money is the most unfortunate individual in the universe, for he has nothing to look forward to and no retrospect. If he takes a real pride in his work it is no longer work but occupation, and the same man who is so lacking in pride that he thinks it wrong to seek appreciation is as much to be pitied as that man who objects to constructive criticism. Egotism is a contemptible thing, but pride is not egotism, and the man that takes no pride in his work is seldom capable of work in which he may take pride. There is no incentive to better things, no urge toward results. Even a ditch digger can aspire to be so good a ditch digger that he is made foreman, and if he wants to be made a foreman merely because it pays more money and not because it means superiority of workmanship, his chances of ever becoming a foreman are too slight to be considered. Ruffner and Fullerton and Udell and Brooks and hundreds of others send in their stuff to this department because they are proud of their work and because they know it to be good, and knowing it to be such want to pass the ideas along. Ruffner, in particular, is an ideal man. He knows a lot more about real lobby decoration than most men, and he not only takes a pride in the fact but a decent price that appreciates the acknowledgement of others More, he knows that passing along his ideas will help others. Ruff, Barret S. McCormick and Gordon Fullerton, to mention but three of the faculty of this school of advertising, put out prettier and more effective advertising than the New York houses; not because they take more space, but because they make more intelligent use of it, and if they were not proud of that fact they would not be worth while and probably unable to get these results. Do work you can be proud of and be proud of your work.

or a two week's program. It will be noted that the days are dated in italic, with full face for the titles and the names of the stars thrown up in capitals. It might be well to give some prominence to the small subjects where more than the feature is run; perhaps in italic, and it would help to use a large point for the full face, as the body of the letter is small in proportion to its ascenders and descenders. The sample is a good form for any small page issue or vest pocket and for this reason two reproductions are given. The real programs are printed of heavy stock, which is advisable where the program is to be carried for two weeks. For a weekly program the size might be cut down with three days to the page and the back for house talk and underline, but this is a matter of detail; it is the general form that is important. We would particularly call attention to the neatness of the front page. This is so much better than smearing the face with black type when a light line, without competition, will serve so much better.

A Brooklyn Program.

Henry G. Merry sends in the program for his Atlantic Theatre, Brooklyn, and writes that for a long time he has wanted to send his program in for comment. We are sorry he took so long to make up his mind. He uses a five by six sheet, colored stock, well finished; perhaps almost too good a stock in these days of high prices, but if he does not find the cost excessive it is better to use good grade, for the same reason that a manager dresses well to impress his patrons, though he could probably run his house as well if he looked like a tramp comedian. One submission is pink stock printed in black and the other is an effort at blue on orange, but the ink does not work as well as it might on that stock. Blue on orange, at best, should be held for large letters. The printer might do more than he is doing to carry out Mr. Merry's ideas. His display face used for titles on one program is not as easy to read as would be a simpler letter. Display faces should be severely simple that they may easily be read, and this face is one of those fanciful cuts that would work well enough, if sparingly used, on certain jobs, but not where legibility is the first consideration. Printers like such faces because they consider only the physical appearance of the job and not its ability to pull. If it looks well, they are contented, but the manager profits only if the lines are legible and easily read. On the other hand the printer has done a good job on the front page, made up with rule and ornament, and gets the general effect of a drawn design, but here, too, he errs in setting the house title on a slant. This looks ornamental, but so does backhand writing with a stub pen until you try to read it quickly, and what a house needs first of all is legibility, which is lacking in the title here. The front should be reset to get the house name on its feet. Inside the page layout is good, and we regret that there is not a copy we can reproduce to show the design. The essential is that the middle is set as six boxes, three to a page, held by rule running from one set of boxes to the other, but where the jump is made, to avoid the dead effect that would come from a straight rule, there are set in at top and bottom shallow panels, giving but one line each, the top giving the hours of showing and the bottom the prices. This makes for regularity and yet avoids monotony. The rule work is not always properly locked up and evidently small pieces of rule are used instead of single rules for all lines. Here the printer has been careless. Where the same printer is regularly employed he should be required to cut rule to fit the job and keep the rule for that purpose and no other so long as the job remains in the office. The type work on the pink program is better than that on the yellow stock. Here a regular letter is used, but it is not quite black enough to work with so much other type. It would be all right were there a little white space above and below the letter, but the majority of the boxes are set solid, with no leads whatever. It would be well to gain a little space—by cutting—to use a two-point lead above and below all titles. Mr. Merry has some good ideas and so has the printer, but the manager needs to ride herd on the printer a little more and have a voice in the choice of types and the general layout. Printers are to get the type into the forms properly, but the manager must supply the advertising experience and see that the type is so placed as to do the most good for the house. At that we wish Mr. Merry would send in a white proof from which we can reproduce his inside page arrangement.

Praise to the Lady.

Gordon M. (100%) Fullerton, of the Liberty, Seattle, Wash., sends in two window cards, some newspaper advertising and this letter:

How are these for ads and window cards turned out by a girl?

Because of the opening of Jensen and von Herberg's new Liberty in Portland, I took a rather hurried and prolonged trip to that fair city organizing the publicity and advertising department there. During my stay there the young lady who presides over the keyboard (Miss Southard) was left in charge and turned out the work inclosed. The test of the advertising is of course the business done. On Charles Ray's Sudden Jim—in spite of the fact that the city was tied up with a street car strike, the receipts were close to the house record and The Little American is going strong with the car strike still on.

That is a record for anyone to be proud of, I think, especially for one who has never written an ad before—so here's to the weaker sex—the female of the species.

We reproduce two of the advertisements. The window cards are about the same thing, save that they are in color and carry less text. The right-hand advertisement is for Charles Ray in Sudden Jim. The window card (13 by 21 inches) shows the same drawn design, but the complete log, and a tree to the left of the standing figure. The base tint is yellow with the cut in black, but the tops of the mountains are picked out in white, giving a double white line across, about the middle portion of the card. The house name is lettered in the familiar shaded white and below, also in white on a black ground, appears "Charles Ray in Sudden Jim. 7 Reels." The Pickford card is on a grey ground, lettering (except the house name) in black, the house title being in white. The circle is blue with white stars, and red and white stripes, waved, ornament the canton within the circle, the figure being done in black. Both are good, but the yellow and black is by far the more striking bill, both in color scheme and in build. The black mass runs up to the strongly drawn figure, and it is the figure of the central character in the play. That is the centre of attraction. In the Pickford bill the eye first gets the flag design and then Miss Pickford. The national colors are more important than Miss Pickford, but in a poster Miss Pickford is more important than the patriotic design. There is another angle to this as well. The use of the patriotic design is ill-advised because there is so much other window and wall stuff using the colors. It is apt to become lost in the general mass of red, white and blue, and this holds good, though the card may be in a window all by itself. It may be alone there and stand out with startling vividness, but to the mind it is "another of those recruiting posters." It may even be passed over by many. This is a point that hundreds of exhibitors are overlooking at the moment. The use of the flag, at this time, does not attract attention, but, to the contrary it evades attention because there is so much use made of the same scheme in more legitimate fashion. Get something that does not depend upon a suggestion of the flag and you have something far more likely to attract general attention. For this reason we think that the Ray poster is much superior to the Pickford design, both in newspaper work and for the windows, but particularly for window work. Both of the advertisements reproduced are half pages, one the entire depth of the page and the other less the space taken by the heading of the amusement section. Mr. Fullerton is fortunate in having so able a lieutenant and courteous in that he is willing to give credit to others for good work instead of seeking to take it to himself. Regular readers will remember that the Liberty makes a very lavish use of window cards as one form of advertising. They cost money to print, but they seem to bring returns. This is an advertising aid barred to the small house, but some window display can be made by clipping from the house advertising and the pages in the trade press and mounting this material on cards attractively lettered.

Cost $3.95.

It's not what a lobby display costs but what it gets that counts. N. Hearne, who does the lobby displays for the Saenger Amusement Co., of Shreveport, La., writes that this lobby display cost him just $3.95. The cut is rather small, but you will note that it is a muslin tent built within the lobby space and decorated with a couple of real circus posters. The front paper is that for the attraction, which was Bessie Love in The Sawdust Ring, but the back paper was a holdover from some show. Any poster house can supply stock sheets, without names, and rush the order right off. It would perhaps be better than that carrying the name of some actual road show. Additional to the front, Mr. Hearne writes:

> We used a local band at night, and with a few fellows dressed as clowns we pulled the thing off big. We also gave away free in the afternoon pink lemonade to the children. The interior of the tent was filled with sawdust. We gave a popcorn vender permission to put up a stand in front of the theter. And altogether it lent an air to the attraction that was closely akin to a circus. We reaped good results.

All of this will work just as well for Polly of the Circus or any other drama based upon circus life. It has a strong appeal and can be amplified clear up to a grand free street parade. It is not only cheap but good, and with so many circus plays going the rounds, it will be well to note this scheme for future use. Note, too, that a red ticket wagon in place of the usual kiosk would be good.

Two Good Ones.

Two good ideas come from Poll's Theater, Scranton, Pa. The first of these is a ticket scheme that can be worked with an infinity of variations, starting with the basic idea. It is a ringside seat for the Greatest Fight on Earth if presented to the recruiting officer of the district. The draft has replaced the enlistment, but the scheme can still be worked. It would be better to more closely suggest a real ticket, playing up the top bank and maintaining the mystery a moment longer. It might even be used in regular theater ticket style. The other idea is a new business getter along somewhat familiar lines, but with a new kink in the wording. It is not practicable to reproduce the style, but the wording reads:

> IT WORKED GREAT. We wanted a capacity audience for the Monday night showing of "The Bar Sinister" so we sent out 1,000 passes, good for reserved orchestra seats. 753 of these passes were redeemed at the box office. 753

In the original this is printed on the inside pages of a four page folder. The first page gives the copy down to "Here's a free ticket for you" which starts the second page as a three line head, flush with the left hand margin and with the body type indented about four ems. We believe that the house plays stock or vaudeville through the regular season, and this seems to be a drive to get the strangers in. A number eleven Manila envelope, specially was printed, and this served as a further advertisement for the attraction. It is much better to use some such scheme as this to get started than to distribute the tickets without any care, and very evidently the first use of the scheme brought results.

Good Throwaways.

Here are three good examples of throwaways from the Hardwick Brothers, Clovis, N. M. Evidently they are newspaper advertisements lifted from the form and run off as throwaways, but while this cuts composition cost it does not argue that as good results cannot be had on straight throwaway composition. That the Hardwicks can lift the form is merely an advantage and not the basic reason for good work. Because the throwaways are cheap and to be given a wide distribution is no reason why they should not be well done; indeed, they should be well done in order to attract the attention of the man in a hurry. The material may be cheap, for it does not pay to waste good stock, but the composition should be attractive. Note that these say "Tonight" and add what night it is. One of the most common errors is to trust to the "Tonigat" on the proposition that the bill will last but a day. As a matter of fact a man may see it and not be certain of the night and so stay away where he might have been attracted.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

The Requirements.

CONSCRIPTION has shown that a startling percentage of our population is unfitted for war service. This is partly due to the exacting standards adopted, but these standards are necessary if we are to send to France only those who are fit and unlikely to become a clog upon the war machine. It may be that among those left at home there are many who might become signally distinguished for personal bravery, did they get the chance, but it would be fatal to success of the operations to take along five hundred unfit on the off chance that one of these might prove a hero.

The army of authors, if selected with similar exactness, would be greatly improved. It was the boob who aided the adoption of the staff writer system, it is the boob who still confirms the manufacturer in the belief that it is useless to consider the free lance generally, for the boob loads the mail with his puerile product and obscures the occasional story of real merit. It is useless to suppose that the boob will be deterred by any considerations of fitness, for he sees only that there is money in writing pictures, because the advertisements tell him so, and he wants that money, but it may interest some to know what an Author's Conscription Board would require.

In the first place, the author must have imagination. Without imagination he cannot be an author. And this imagination must be of the peculiar sort that gives a new viewpoint to the author; that enables him to see commonplaces in a different and more interesting light than other persons. Moreover this imagination must be trained to the highest state of efficiency. It must be able to take the commonplace and not only change and better it, but present the new viewpoint so vividly that it becomes the new viewpoint of all who hear.

The author must have infinite patience, the patience to take pains, to acquire proficiency through laborious practice, to wait through long months or even years for success to come. He must have the patience to meet, without irritation or disappointment, the unending procession of rejection slips, and to stand rebuff after rebuff without losing heart. He must have the patience to work without seeming reward. He must have the patience to do his work slowly and carefully instead of dashing off the thought and hurrying on to the next; the patience to stick with an idea until he can do no more with it.

He must have tact, for without tact he will not prosper, and the final test of success is having stories paid for; not for the sake of the check, primarily, but because the check represents in concrete fashion the approval of the literary world. Without tact the author will make enemies before he can make selling connections. He will follow his submission with a demand for immediate action, he will complain of the slightest infraction of the code of ethics as he misunderstands them. In a word, he will become a nuisance long before he becomes an author.

An author must have enthusiasm. Perhaps this should be placed even above patience in the list of requirements, for it requires unbounded enthusiasm for the work to meet the disappointments that are the invariable prelude to real success. The author must find his real payment for work in self-expression. This is the true reward of the born author. He must write because he must give this expression to his thoughts. Without enthusiasm even imagination is as naught. He must take a pride in his work, and it must be the gratification of this pride, through the admiration of others, that forms his desire to succeed.

But the author must be modest, as well. He must realize that in undertaking to entertain and thrill millions he has assumed a gigantic task and must approach it with confidence, but with a thorough realization of the work he has taken up. He must be modest, lest he be led astray by the unconsidered adulation of his friends. He must learn to appraise their appreciation at its exact worth as an insincere tribute.

Add to these a capacity for work and for taking infinite pains, a wide knowledge of other literature, a grasp on the human emotions, a keen appraisal of the foundation facts of success, and the candidate at least has a chance to succeed, but even with all these requirements there is still a chance that he will fail. It is no easy matter to become a real author, and few find lasting success.

Making Them Real.

In working out a plot it should be the effort of the author to hide the fact that it is a story and make it seem real. Some writers never seem to catch the trick of making a story intimate. It may be good plotting when judged by the rules of technique, yet somehow it lacks appeal. The work is correct, but unenthusiastic. Four weeks ago we moved into a camp cottage. It was newly built, and we were the first tenants. The furnishings were complete, but they did not look homelike; not half as inviting as some other camps we had seen which were in use last summer and before. In a few days this was all changed. A lot of little home-made devices added to the comfort, from slats across the joists for book cases to a candlestick made out of a condensed milk can with a pair of tinner's snips. Now the place looks even more homelike that some of the camps we had seen. It has been given the stamp of individuality. It is the same way with a story. You must make it seem real and comfortable. It is the only way to sell.

Conviction.

If you do not care for a story yourself it is almost impossible to make anyone else care for it. Write it down and let it ripen, but do not send it out on the off chance that it may sell. Hold it and look it over now and then to see if you get the idea more clearly. When you do see a real story in the idea then write it and send it out, for then others may share your conviction because you have written convincingly. The machine made story seldom sells, yet some writers send out the stories as they come because someone may possibly purchase. It is a poor plan because it holds your average so low that presently intelligent editors will avoid your submissions. If you have a plot germ it almost always follows that you will be able to make a story from it if you wait long enough, but you may have to wait some time before it fully matures.

Care in Synopses.

Since you can sell only the synopsis of your story be most careful of your synopsis. One of the last brain-tester synopses carried this line: "Robert, who's never had much to do with girls——" it happened that the "who's" came at the end of the line. Unconsciously we read it in the possessive and got it "whose" in spite of the form of the word, and when the next line was taken up there was a brief period of shock while we readjusted to the new meaning of the word. Most readers would probably have made the same mistake. Such writing is slipshod. The writing of "who has" means only an additional letter without the trouble of using a shift key, and so the author makes no gain in time, but even if he did make a gain in time, if he makes a loss in interest then he loses more than he gains. Spend more time on the synopsis. Make it fluent and easy to read. The editor is reading in a hurry, and has no time to stop and puzzle over meanings. He knows that "who" with an apostrophe and an s is not the possessive "whose," but he does not stop to think of the niceties of typography. He is reading for sense, and he does not want to be misled. Even at best he will unconsciously resent careless work, and a story filled with contractions, elisions, figures of speech and the vernacular will not impress him favorably. He may buy the story for the plot, but it will have to be a specially good plot to win through. Spend an extra hour or so on your synopsis and it may mean a sale.

Plot Exercise.

If you find it difficult to think plots suppose you change for a time and watch the methods of others. Take up a magazine and read a story. Then see if you can figure out how the author came to invent the story. You may not find how he really did come to write the story, but you can perhaps find a way in which he might have originated that plot, and when you can do this then you will be better able to find the way to invent your own plots. Go through the entire magazine, go through several magazines, and you'll probably get a better idea of plot invention than you can obtain in a similar time from your own unaided efforts. Studying plots and plot formation from any angle is good practise for the beginner, and this really is a very helpful way.

Technique of the Photoplay

By

EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A book replete with practical pointers on the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which immediately present themselves when the first script is attempted. A tested handbook for the constant writer of picture plots. "Straight-from-the-shoulder" information from an author with a wealth of real "dollars-and-cents" experience.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Not True.

Somewhere, somehow the rumor originated and spread that the Baird Company had ceased the manufacture of projection machines, and had turned its entire plant over to the manufacture of munitions of war. This I find is not true. Robert Emory, President of the Baird Motion Picture Machine Company, says: "Dear Mr. Richardson: Replying to your letter of inquiry, asking if we have stopped or temporarily suspended the manufacture of Baird projectors, I wish to inform you that there is no truth whatever in the rumor to which you refer. We have not stopped or suspended the manufacture of Baird projectors, nor have we any intention of so doing."

So that settles that. How such rumors start is past understanding, but they do start, and under the conditions surrounding this case may gain wide circulation before we think of investigating. I myself believed the Baird story. Why would I not. I heard it first on the Pacific coast, and there was no reason for questioning its correctness. In fact I wrote mainly with the view of finding out whether suspension would be temporary or permanent. And with all due respect to the Baird company, it is my belief it makes a serious error in not doing as others do in keeping its name before the fraternity through established channels. Yes, I mean advertising. Suppose all companies took the same view the Baird seems to of this matter. In a few weeks every trade paper would automatically go out of business, or else dwindle to a mere review of films. And now, Mr. Man, you just squat down and scratch your head until you stir up your grey matter. When it is all said and done, where would the industry be at without its trade papers? Don't sneer, but THINK. Take this one department of this one paper, WHAT HAS IT DONE FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF RESULTS ON THE SCREEN DURING THE PAST EIGHT YEARS? But for the knowledge it has dug up and dissemminated during those years, would you now have the splendid screen presentation of the splendid modern photoplay you have today? I speak briefly of this one department and this one paper, because I know both the department, its work, and the paper. Let others speak for themselves. But the fact remains that all those who make money from the industry are making money from something the papers have done very much to build up and make possible. And I certainly do believe it is not only foolish, but distinctly unfair for a company to withhold that patronage it ought of RIGHT to give, when it is reaping direct benefit, and in the very nature of things must reap direct benefit from the toil of the years which have gone before. And in some of those years the sledding was most decidedly not easy. There were some of the earlier years when the Moving Picture World gave of its best to the industry for precious little in return. And it was then, if ever, the work was sorely needed. There were times when J. P. Chalmers did not know Monday whither Saturday would see him bankrupt or not, but he worked on, just the same, as earnestly and as hard as though the income was entirely satisfactory. And those companies who entered later, as the Baird, for instance, must, willingly or unwillingly, reap reward for the things done in other days, as well as for things we now do, and expect to continue to do for many years to come.

Now please don't get me wrong. I most emphatically am not seeking to induce the Baird, or any other company, to advertise, except insofar as the pointing out of what I firmly believe to be the truth may be construed that way. Had the Baird company been regular advertisers, even though the space be small, in the trade papers, this rumor could not have gained credence. Mr. Emory, in an unpublished part of his letter, intimates his belief that business competitors started the rumor, and I am using the incident to point a moral—the first time I have ever taken up the cudgel on behalf of that very necessary part of the proceedings, the advertising department.

Wants Advice.

Fred B. Williams, Bay City, Michigan, wants advice as follows:

> In preparing the equipment for our new theater, just nearing completion, we are meeting with some problems requiring reliable advice of a scientific nature pertaining to proper projection, the solving of which I know you have at your finger tips, therefore am going to impose upon your valuable time to the extent of asking assistance with regard to the following: (A) Our throw is 150 feet, at very slight angle, and it is our intention to, if possible, project a 20 x 24 foot picture. What would you suggest as the best lens? (B) Do you consider a white sheet with specially prepared paint as equal to the various makes of metalized screens? (C) For perfect projection, would you suggest high amperage, say somewhere between 75 and 100? (D) Could you impartially recommend any one make of rotary converter or motor generator set? (E) Could you, impartially, advise me as to which make of projector is meeting requirements, such as I have outlined, with satisfaction, and one that would practically eliminate all flicker from the screen. (F) Which do you consider best, the solid machine base or four legs for a projector—which holds the machine most steady; floor of operating room is cement? (G) What size condensers would you suggest for best results?
> Doubtless you will consider this request as a gross imposition, but I assure you that you have long held my confidence as "the" authority on projection problems, therefore, I but follow the adage, "Seek and ye shall find".

Far be it from me to criticise Brother Williams. He has asked certain questions in good faith, probably without realizing that several of them could not be answered in this department without creating a near-riot. Also he, like many others, has not noticed the publication of the fact that replies by mail cost a minimum fee of one dollar. There are many thousands of operators and managers in this country and Canada. If I answered letters by mail free of cost, how much time do you really suppose I would have for anything else?

And now as to the questions: (A) You cannot project a 20 x 24 foot picture. If it is twenty-four feet wide it will be three-quarters that height, or 18 feet. I would strongly advise against a picture of this size. I think there can be no real necessity for it. It will produce on your screen a lot of huge giants. It will magnify every defect in photography, as well as every mechanical defect in the films. It will magnify the effect of every imperfection in your projector which has to do with film movement and, above and beyond all this, it will render your front seats much less valuable. With a twenty-four-foot picture the front row of seats should not be less than 30 feet from the picture, and 40 would be better. If, however, you persist in projecting a picture of this size, I would advise a Gundlach No. 2 lens, stopped down to the actual carrying ray, or a Crown or Bausch & Lomb of equal diameter. (B) That depends. I cannot recommend any special screen paint. In my opinion, you can follow Handbook directions, page 184, and equal any of them at a fraction of their cost. Personally, I would prefer a calcimined surface to a painted one, unless it be exposed to the weather, as in an airdome. You can get just as excellent a picture on a properly-prepared, non-reflective surface, such as calcimine, as on any surface yet discovered, but you can, on the other hand, get practically as good a result with a scientifically-made semi-reflective surface (metalized) and get it for a lot less money—less amperage. With the metal surface I would, however, advise the use of what is known as the Amberlux lens, or ray filter. I would also advise the purchase of a screen without any yellow in its surface. (C) I would not advise the use of more than sixty-five amperes direct current. To set forth my reasons would consume too much space. See "Limit of Amperage", page 292 of the Handbook, for my reasons. (D) I could, provided I wanted to, receive a crown of roses from the manufacturer of the machine recommended, and be forever accursed by all others. This is properly a projection engineering question and such questions can only be answered by myself or someone else in that capacity. Fees for such information range according to how much is wanted, and it would be better for the business if advice of this kind were more often sought. As a matter of fact, there is no single machine of this kind which could be named as "best", but some are much better than others. (D) Reply to "C" applies. (E) Reply to "C" applies, except that no machine will "practically eliminate all flicker from the screen under all local conditions and at all possible projection speeds. This brings up a rather large matter, having many angles. It is much more difficult to eliminate flicker at a given speed where the picture is large and the throw short than where opposite conditions prevail; in other words, where the projection lens has very short E. F., and if it be so short that the aerial image of the condenser is inside the lens barrel when the condenser system is right, then it will be very difficult indeed. (F) The spread of four legs naturally gives a wider base, but all modern projection machines have their bases so designed that there is little to criticise, and little choice in this respect, with the notation that with the Motiograph you should slip an iron washer about ⅛ inch thick under each base bolt hole, so that the anchor bolt pass through it. These washers should be of the wide variety. (G) This depends entirely upon amperage. With sixty amperes I would advise meniscus bi-convex set, either both lenses 7½ or the meniscus 7½ and the bi-convex 8½, with about 18 inches between center of condenser combination and aperture, with the two lenses set as close as you can get them without actually touching. I advise either of two combinations because the curve for sixty amperes comes almost exactly between the two combinations named. Use the one which works best.

No. Brother Williams, I do not consider your questions at all in the light of an imposition. I think you just did not stop to consider. So far as answering queries which may be answered through the department, why I am paid to do that, and you or anyone else is entirely welcome to ask as many as you like. Also if you send two two-cent stamps I will send carbon copy of reply, so that there will be a minimum of delay. But questions which compel a comparison of the merits of different makes of apparatus cannot be answered in this department.

Incandescent Light for Projection.

J. S. Lindsey, McGregor, Texas, sends in subscription to the World, orders a Handbook and says:

> Mr. Smith, owner of the Opera House here, and of a show in Crawford, a small town just above here, is considering the installation of a Delco incandescent lamp for the Crawford house. We have not, as yet, seen one in operation, but intend to before he buys. What do you think of the Mazda lamp for projection, both as to screen results and cost, as compared with the arc lamp? They tell us we can save money and have fully as good a light. Cost of lamp $6.50; consumes 600 watts and will last about 100 hours. On the other hand, 50 carbons at $3.75 last me about a month, running an average of about five hours per day. This may have been fully discussed in the department, but I was unable to renew my subscription promptly and missed a few numbers. I think a great deal of the World, and felt I just could not get along without it any longer; same way with the Handbook, of which I have the second edition. Have wanted it ever since it was published, and am now just simply appropriating the necessary coin from other things to get them both.

With regard to the World and Handbook, Brother Lindsey, your words of approval are appreciated. I only hope and trust I may continue to merit your friendship for a long time to come. And now as to the incandescent proposition; as I have already said, I am not yet in position to pass my final opinion on that particular thing. I am right now taking the first steps to ascertain, from first hand, exactly what has been the experience of those who have already put in the incandescent outfits. To this end I have induced a large manufacturer of projection apparatus to give me a list of all sales made to date, and have written an even dozen of the purchasers, propounding the following queries, viz: (A) How long have you had the equipment in actual use? (B) Are you using it in a regular theater, or for what purpose? (C) Please give exact width of picture you are projecting. (D) What kind of screen are you using? (E) what is approximate distance from lens to screen? (F) How does the illumination compare with former illumination? (G) WHAT WAS THE SOURCE OF FORMER ILLUMINATION—kind of current and number of amperes? (H) What advantage do you find in the new equipment? (I) What disadvantages? (J) How do the lamp filaments stand up? (K) Any other information you think will help, remembering this is for the benefit of fellow exhibitors and the industry.

To date two answers have been received, one from El Paso, Texas, promising a full report soon, and one from the Delco-Light Products Company, Bangor, Maine, which reached me under a different name, calmly sidestepping all the questions and merely saying: "the incandescent motion picture machine I have is working very satisfactorily, and seems to be better and cheaper than the arc system," which is perhaps the reply we might expect from a Delco-Light concern. When the other replies come in, if they do, I will have more to say on this subject. If not enough satisfactorily complete answers come to justify a conclusion, then I will adopt other and perhaps more strenuous means to bring out the facts.

And now let us consider: The man who tells you you will get "just as good a light" is either uninformed as to the facts, or is referring to a local condition with which he is familiar, or is taking something more than ordinary liberties with Miss Truth. It is quite possible that, in a small town, where the current supply is very poor and the available operating talent decidedly below par, the incandescent would give better general results, because the arc light results might be very bad, indeed. This is particularly true where the small town theater has been using a small amperage of A. C. at the arc. But with a properly handled arc, using D. C., or even with a properly handled A. C. arc, using enough amperage to enable the operator to get a decent result on the screen, there is, at this time, from what I have myself seen, no comparison. The arc is far ahead of the incandescent. The illumination is more brilliant and of much purer tone. On the other hand, the light from the incandescent is steady, and once it is properly adjusted, the illumination is perfectly even all over the field. We may therefore be willing to sacrifice considerable in brilliancy and light tone, thus losing the finer values of the photography, in order to escape the continual, and sometimes awful discoloration on the screen where a low amperage arc is handled by an operator whose chief claim to that title is that he knows what "juice" means and that when a fuse blows a new one must be put in, or where low amperage of A. C. is used for projection, with consequent results falling in the doubtful column.

And now as to cost of operation: Will the seller give you a written, iron-bound guarantee that those lamps will last 100 hours? Try him and see! But if they do, then that is 6½ cents per hour, or 32.5 cents per five hour day. At 600 watts you will be consuming 3 watt hours per five hour day. Assuming that you pay 6 cents per watt hour, this would be a total of 18 cents per day for current. You thus have a total expense at the lamp of 32.5 plus 18 equals 50.5 cents per five hour day.

With the arc, assuming that you use twenty amperes at 100 volts, you would have a total of 2,200 volts, or 2.2 x 5 equals 11 watt hours per day, which, at 6 cents, equals 66 cents per day for current. If you use 40 amperes, then the current would mount to twice that sum, or $1.32. To this we add the item of carbons consumed, which, according to your figures, would be about 12 cents per day, so that we have a total of 66 plus 12 equals 78 cents per day if using 20 amperes and $1.44 if using forty.. It is therefore seen that, with these values we have an apparent difference of 78 — 50.5 equals 27.5 cents in favor of the incandescent if twenty amperes are used at an arc, and 144 — 50.5 equals 93.5 if using forty amperes. In this I am assuming that rheostats are used. If it be A. C. through a transformer, then the difference in favor of the incandescent would not be nearly so great.

You will, however, note that I said "an apparent difference," because we must carefully reckon on what, if any difference, the substitution of incandescent for arc will make at the box office. If it decreases sales of tickets by more than 30 cents per day in one case, and by more than 95 cents in the other, the apparent saving is wiped out entirely. On the other hand, if conditions are such that the screen illumination is uneven and very poor when working with an arc, then it may be the substitution of an incandescent will not actually save you in expense of operation, but may even increase the patronage, which means sales at the box office. Prospective purchasers of this apparatus should proceed with due caution. This department intends to keep in close touch with the situation, and will keep you posted as fast as anything of value and interest appears. Meanwhile it is to be noted that the Delco folks have as yet apparently nothing in which they feel sufficient confidence to present it to this department for examination and test, and they surely have no right to expect you to have more confidence in their product than they have themselves. Be very sure, Mr. Theater Manager Prospective Buyer, that you are not going to transform your operating room into an experiment station for the benefit of those who are trying to perfect this light.

Just Hates the World.

George F. Blethen, owner Wigwam Theater, Kingston, Oklahoma, writes interestingly, as follows:

> Herewith our check for subscription renewal. An exhibitor without the Moving Picture World can accomplish about as much as a one-legged man in a football game. The writer is owner of the Wigwam, just a "store show" in a small town—population 1,000. Our seating capacity is 250 and the theater is cooled by a 30-inch ventilation fan and eight buzz fans. And, by the way, I have the world skinned on the system I am using for buzz fans. Gets the air to the walls, as well as everywhere else in the room. If you want the dope on it will be glad to furnish particulars. Don't think Richardson ever thought of it. And that man Richardson! Some guy, isn't he! Yes, I have the latest edition of his Handbook, which is the reason I have not had to write and ask him a lot of questions. Am using Power's 6A, projecting a nine-foot picture, and I supply my operator with all he asks for in the way of equipment and repairs. Moreover, I, myself, see to it that he does ask for what is needed to put good results on my screen, and keep them there at each performance.
> This is, as I well know, saying a whole lot for a small showman, but the "picture peddlers" tell me we are putting on as good, and in some respects, a better screen result than they find on some of the Oklahoma City and Dallas screens. But I don't think this so much to boast of, because any theater can do it if its manager really wishes to. The trouble with all too many managers is, however, they are confirmed tightwads, and have the mistaken idea that they can make money without spending any of it for projection. But that won't hold the trade, and, bye and bye, they go bluey. Our programme consists of two Paramounts—one Gold Rooster, one Bluebird, one Artcraft-Paramount; the other day of the six I book specials, keeping about a month booked in advance. Wanted to hear Richardson when he was in Sherman, but business prevented. In closing, let me assure you that I consider the Moving Picture World to be, from any and every standpoint, without an equal as the exhibitor's champion.

Such letters are encouraging. Sorry we could not meet, Friend Blethen. Your letter is interesting; also you spoke gospel truth as regards certain men who are tightwads when it comes to the final, big important item, projection. And it is funny, too, for many of them are liberal to the very point of prodigality, until they arrive at the operating room. They will pay large sums for service, and then kick like a bay steer if the operator requests one poor, lonesome, God-forsaken dollar, with which to replace a two-year-old gear, which wobbles like a drunken sailor on a stormy night. I sometimes think this particular type of manager (and he is some considerable crowd) ought to be arrested for indecent exposure of his intellectual apparatus. Pay one hundred and fifty pieces of silver for film service, and then roar like an elephant with a sore toe because friend operator wants a chance to put that same service on the screen decently. Huh, I'm glad you are not of that brand, Brother Elethen. Shake. I'm proud to know you! As to the buzz fan plan, why by all means send it in. If it looks good, we will pass it along for the benefit of all.

He Agrees.

Samuel E. Wishank, Brooklyn, New York, arises to make the following remarks:

> With reference to article by Lester Bowen, June 23rd issue, concerning high amperage, I am inclined to agree with you that excessive amperage is not necessary. I am working at the Sheffield Theater, Brooklyn, using alternating current supply, pulling 65 amperes through a transverter. The throw is 190 feet, and the picture a twenty-two footer. The result is excellent. In fact, I do not believe anyone could wish for better screen illumination. I tried raising the amperage, but there was very little improvement. Of course, as you say, the proper matching up of the optical system of the projector has much to do with the final result at the screen. With a given amperage I believe a correctly matched and lined optical system will deliver a fifty per cent. better screen result than when the optical system is not right. The quality and combination of carbons has also much to do with it. Inclosed find forty cents stamps for both sets of questions. Your articles are both interesting and educational, and I presume the questions will be the same.

The questions are designed as a guide to study, Brother Wishank. Without some such guide the student is likely to waste much energy. With the questions, which cover about every phase of knowledge necessary to projection, he can select such topics as most interest him, or as he thinks will be most beneficial in his case, or he may start at Question No. 1 and wade right through. And if he goes through that list of questions, you may accept it as fact that he will have done considerable work by the time he reaches Question No. 150—that is, if he masters each question. And I'll bet a twenty dollar bill to a Mexican plugged dime that he will grapple with some of the problems presented and roll in the mud several times before they are finally subdued and made to feed out of his hand. The answers have already been published in the department. I asked you, gentle reader, quite a while ago whether or no you wanted me to start in at the beginning and publish that set of questions again, but there were no replies. How about it? As to the amperage matter, why there is nothing more to say, I guess. But I don't agree with that 22-foot picture. Why create a race of giants on your screen? And in the process render your front seats comparatively undesirable. Your manager is, in my humble opinion, committing a serious error in that item.

Opinion Wanted.

From Theodore Garretson, Davenport, Iowa, comes the following letter:

> Since the introduction of the new theories in the matching of the projector optical system there is one point upon which I would like very much to get your opinion. In the old practice it was considered that the double cone shutter was an advantage in that it allowed more light to reach the screen. This refers to the Motiograph projector. We now know that by placing the shutter at the narrowest point of the light beam we are enabled to, among other advantages, get the maximum amount of light to the screen. The point I now have in mind is, will the double cone shutter allow more light to pass than the outside shutter of the machine in question, provided the lens system be matched according to the latest practice? I have my own opinion with regard to this matter, but feel sure you are in much better position to know than am I. I will therefore highly appreciate an expression of your views. I have very good reasons for wishing to know, which same will be communicated to you later. Your lecture, given here last July, interested the members of local union 433 a great deal, and you will hear from them later. In closing please accept my best regards.

In so far as the actual amount of light gain as between the outside revolving shutter of the Motiograph, with the same set in accordance with modern practice, and the double cone inside shutter, I could not answer accurately without making actual experiments, or without knowing the focal length of the objective. With a very short focal length objective, say 2½-inch e. f., I should say there would be decidedely more light passed by the inside shutter; also the general condition would be better. With ordinary objective e. f., however, there would be but little difference, I believe, in so far as actual light percentage be concerned. Theoretically the double cone shutter was an extremely economical shutter because it only closed the aperture when its blade edges reached the center of the same, hence the maximum amount of light possible under a given condition was allowed to pass. In practice, however, there had to be a considerable amount of lap to the blades, else there would be travel ghost as soon as there was the slightest bit of wear; also setting the shutter was extremely difficult The first Motiograph cone shutters were trimmed down to the very limit, and I speak from experience when I say that it was an awful job to set them. Later the blade width was increased on this account.

In practice, I think, as I have said, that there would be but slight light gain with the three-wing outside shutter properly placed, and a possible actual loss if wrongly placed, still the outsider is to be preferred by reason of the fact that there is less flicker at low speeds, and less complication of the mechanism. I must correct you in one item. It does not follow that the proper position for the outside shutter is at the "narrowest point of the light beam." As a matter of fact the light beam may be, and often is, of practically the same diameter for a considerable distance, yet there is only one certain place for the shutter, and that is the aerial image of the condenser, which is found as I showed you when in your city.

Self Delusion?

D. S. Vermillion, Los Angeles, California, is in trouble, though whether imaginary or not he is uncertain. He describes the difficulty as follows:

> Don't know whither my trouble is imaginary or not; would like your opinion. Placed new motor generator set in rear of operating room. The picture was unusually brilliant, and I was entirely satisfied, except that the machine caused too much vibration, and made too much noise. To obviate this I moved to the basement. This, of course, settled the noise and vibration, but it seems to me I have lost considerably in screen brilliancy by the change. The distance from generator to arc lamp is 70 feet; the wires No. I. I use 45 to 50 amperes. Generator is rated 55 amperes at 75 volts. Every one says I am getting the same result as formerly, but I cannot see it that way. Am I the victim of self delusion?

In the first place, Brother Vermillion, if you will turn to General Instruction No. 2, page 369 of the Handbook, and read it through, you will find that the vibration could have been cared for by means of a felt or cork pad of proper kind and thickness. With vibration eliminated there should have been little or no noise, provided the commutator is smooth, the armature properly balanced, and that the brushes have proper tension. If you have No. 1 wires, and the circuit is seventy feet in length, the resistance will be only about .02 of an ohm, and the voltage drop at 50 amperes would be only one-tenth of a volt, which is too slight to affect the screen result appreciably. It is, however, possible that you have changed something else. Are you using the same condensers? Have you done anything to your lenses at all? A very slight change in your optical system might make quite an appreciable change at the screen. I assume that your wire joints, etc., are all tight. It is also possible your commutator or brushes have lost some of their efficiency. In fact, many things besides lengthening your wire circuits might operate to lower the current flow.

San Francisco Operators Dance.

The editor of this department is in receipt of an invitation to attend the fifth annual ball given in aid of the sick and death benefit fund of Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 162, of San Francisco.

And I'd have liked to have been there all right, too, but three thousand miles on top of what few I've already done this year is seven miles too much. By the time this is printed the ball will have been held, and I hope that it was a stem-winding success. Incidentally, while I think of it, will Dolliver act as my agent and tell Operator Tex Combs, for me, that he is quite some prevaricator himself. Solemnly he promised, but did not perform!

THE VISION.—The vision includes all of those effects which are produced by double exposure with the exception of the split stage. The split stage is a term used for those doubles in which a portion of the stage is taken at one time and the remaining portion taken at another. The resulting scene having no line of demarcation to show the double and making it possible for one or more characters to appear two or more times simultaneously.

For vision and split-stage work, inside and outside mattes are used. Inside mattes are those inserted between the lens and the film. Exterior mattes are those used outside the camera between the object and the lens. Inside mattes are usually of thin metal finished to a dull optical black. For their use the camera should be fitted with a slot, permitting the mattes to be inserted just in front of the film in the aperture plate as close as possible without actually coming in contact with the film. Inside mattes placed in this position produce sharply defined division line on the film, whereas exterior mattes which are held before the lens by being attached to the lens hood, give diffused vignetted effects because they are not in focus. As the ordinary lens hood seldom has sufficient extension to give any variety of diffusion a supplementary hood is generally used, called a double exposure hood and sometimes miscalled a shadow box. Shadow box is a term which should only be used for the structure previously described for producing a black background. Double exposure boxes should be easily fastened to the front of the camera in a rigid position, and consist of two or more telescopic sections with a grooved section in front for the reception of mattes. An additional hood should project beyond this groove so as to protect the mattes from extraneous light, the telescopic sections being provided with thumb screws or other means so that the mattes may be placed as close or as far from the lens as may be thought desirable.

Inside mats are of infinite variety but the most common forms are the circle and double circle for representing vision through the telescope and binoculars respectively. Key-hole, star, heart, leaf shapes, etc., may be made to suit the fancy of the individual operator. Beside these are a number of mattes made in matched pairs so that one of a pair exposes one particular section of film, while its complementary exposes the remainder and protects the portion already exposed. The most used of these matched pairs are those which split the stage into even vertical halves, or two-thirds and one-third, pairs split horizontally and some other pairs which cut a circular segment from the upper left or right hand corner for the introduction of visions. These last are not so much used as formerly, since most vision work is now done with exterior mattes. The matching of these pairs of inside mattes is a very particular job, since the slightest variation will show a light or dark line of demarcation upon the screen if they are not correctly made. Unless inside mattes are made correctly so that no demarcation line is visible on the screen, it is much better to do split stage work with exterior mattes. In using exterior mattes for split stage work their adjustment is, of course, harder than the use of accurate inside mattes, but the results are worth the extra trouble. The slightest camera movement will make even the accurate inside matte line visible, whereas the blend of the vignette line of exterior mattes will not be visible unless the vibration of the camera is considerable, and then it only shows by the slightest blurring of a band across the screen at the line of split.

All vision and split stage work, of course, requires elaborate rehearsals and the counting of crank turns in order to co-relate the action between the different exposures, yet it is possible, working accurately, that an actor may be shown shaking hands with himself or exchanging documents or other articles.

Take, for example, the case of an actor playing himself and his twin brother in a scene where they must shake hands with one another. The stage is split either in half or one-third, according to the requirements of the scene. The spot where the hand-shaking is to take place must be very accurately located. Preferably just over a table or a chair-back. At the first exposure some one standing outside the split line must double his hand for that of the actor. On the instant of the count, say 47, the hand of the double is extended over the line indicated by the chair back or table and clasped by the actor. At 48 the two hands descend a pre-determined distance. At 48 they ascend. At 49 down. At 50 up and unclasp. Now when the second exposure is made the actor must extend his hand over the split stage line at the exact height as performed in the previous scene by his double and the action be repeated in exact unison with the count as just described. If the action has been exactly in time the result will be a perfect representation on the screen, but if the action is off a one-half beat the result is ludicrous, for it will appear as if he had shaken the hand off from the arm of his twin brother and that it suddenly snapped back into place again. The same principle applies to the exchange of articles across the split stage, although this is not quite so difficult, since there is only one beat which must be in absolute registry.

Many other variations of the split stage will suggest themselves to the ingenious camera operator but need not be dwelt upon here as the principle has been explained.

Visions proper are either a scene within a scene, generally representing a dream or mental process of a character in the remaining portion, are of two types. The first is closely allied to the split stage inasmuch as the characters appearing in the vision are not visionary; that is, semi-transparent, but appear to be material within the confines of the representation of the vision. Take for example a scene representing the Reveries of a Bachelor, as he sits smoking before the fireplace. He is thinking of his boyhood sweetheart. In front and a little above him appears a scene of himself and his boyhood sweetheart, the background of the room having faded away, giving place to the scene painted by his memory. In a case of this kind it is necessary that the vision exposure be taken upon a portion of the film which has not already been exposed. To protect this portion of the film where the vision appears from the action of light during the taking of the first exposure, it is necessary to introduce a matte in front of the lens which shall protect this portion of the film from the action of light while the first exposure is being made. In this particular case it might be accomplished without the use of the matte provided that that portion of the scene upon which the vision is to be superimposed is in deep shadow. In that case, there would be probably no light action upon the film, thus obviating the use of the matte. However, should there have been brightly illuminated bodies in this space a matte is prepared which may be quickly slipped into place in the double-exposure box. Mattes for the double-exposure box may be made of metal like the interior mattes, but as they are so seldom twice of the same shape, it is generally easier to cut a new one from black cardboard to suit the requirements of each particular case. In taking a scene of this character, when the director announces "vision appears" the matte is slipped quickly into place while the memory is being portrayed, then quickly removed again when the director announces "vision disappears." It is now necessary to prepare a matte which will protect the exposure already made and allow a space through which the vision may be taken. The film may now be rewound either in the camera or the dark room, according as the vision is to be immediately taken or whether the first exposure is to be reserved for a time when the vision shall be taken later. With a second matte in place the vision scene is focused on the ground glass. The first exposure is then re-threaded in the camera, taking care to register the proper perforation as indicated by the pin prick upon the claws. To insure against mistakes all of the conditions, such as exposure and crank turns with reference to action, etc., should be recorded carefully in a note book to avoid as much as possible any mistake through not being able to remember the exact count. Suppose that in taking the first exposure for the vision scene the matte was introduced at turn 23 and withdrawn at turn 40, a short dissolve or overlap should be made of one and one-half feet, so that the dissolve is commenced at turn 20 and is brought full in, at turn 23, then reversing the process at 40, fading completely out at 43, thus lapping the vision over at both ends. Then in the scene the vision will commence to form against the background of objects in the room, the objects disappearing as the vision gains full strength, thus giving an unobstructed vision scene.

In this manner vision scenes which are not ghostly may be produced of any character desired. Sometimes visions of this character are required in the center of a scene where the matte can not be supported from the side of the double-exposure box. In this case a glass matte is used. A glass matte is a piece of perfectly plain glass with no imperfections to which a small matte may be fastened with adhesive, the matte being slipped into place as quickly as possible when the vision is to appear. Sometimes in a case of this kind it is necessary to use a hold in order to slip the matte into place without its appearance being shown on the screen, since its appearance as it is slid into place produces a black ghost travelling across the screen. If it can be snapped into place quick enough, however, the hold is not always necessary. Also there are scenes of this character in which the double extends through the entire scene and a matte may be placed previous to taking the scene. For example: a close-up of a beautiful flower with a portrait of a girl in its center.

The Roll of Honor

HERE is one corking likeness of Clarke Irvine, for several years Los Angeles correspondent of the Moving Picture World, and later publisher of The Screamer. It will be instantly recognized by the western film colony host, all the members of which know Clarke well and every last one of which like him; for he is in all truth a most likable chap. Deep sea sailing will be no novelty to the newspaper man, for several years ago he made a trip to the Orient. It was on that journey he made the acquaintance of Roscoe Arbuckle, then in musical comedy and giving no thought

Ben H. Grimm, the World man, who last week forsook his old associates and enlisted in the Signal Corps of the United States Army, writes from Camp Vail, Little Silver, N. J., that he has received the wrist watch presented him by his fellows. "This is the life" says Ben. "Nothing to do but get up at 5 and work twelve hours. Work? Say, I've worked and eaten more in the past few days than I ever have before in two weeks; and the 'chow' is good here and plentiful." Ben adds word may be passed around that letters and postals are most welcome.

A testimonial was arranged for him upon his departure for the capital.

George H. Harrison, well known on the Pacific Coast for his connection with aviation work a few years ago, is going from Kansas City to the aviation camp in Texas, where he will be a high private for a while. Mr. Harrison has, for the past three years, been developing historical film work in the Mississippi Valley through the Pageant Film Corporation. Nine states have been planning centennials, and all of them are working moving pictures in connection with the celebrations, both for the recording of historical scenes and data and for the stimulation of interest in the celebrations by the showing of the pictures. The war has temporarily suspended the work of the historical societies. The Pageant Film Corporation is continuing in business, however, on commercial work. Captain Cleaveland Hilson, who is also connected with the Pageant Film Corporation, is more or less occupied with National defense work. He earned his title during service in the Philippines. Mr. Harrison was the first man west of the Mississippi River to get a pilot's license. In those days ballooning was the only feature of aviation, and he did a lot of work in that department. He had a part in filling many contracts for Mack Sennett. He has made many ascensions in air planes, and now will be driving them himself.

Leo Nomis, a Paramount player, who is noted for his daring, has received a commission as first lieutenant in the United States Army aviation corps, and will leave the western studios shortly for the East to start training. Out of a class of twenty-seven Nomis was the only one to pass successfully all the severe tests and was the only one accepted by the Government.

Edwin Simone, eldest son of Charles Simone, the well-known motion-picture producer, is now a member of Uncle Sam'e fighting legions and doing much intensive training "somewhere in America" preparatory to his going "over there." Young Simone is a native of New York City, where he received most of his education. He quit school at an early age to follow in his father's footsteps, and for the past five years has been associated with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at the Bayonne and Fort Lee laboratories. Lately he was head of the negative department. He is an amateur athlete of great merit, as his numerous medals readily prove.

HARRY POPPE GOES TO CAMP UPTON.

Harry H. Poppe, long time with David Horsley as a publicity representative and more recently with the publicity department of Metro, has resigned and departed for Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I. to join the national army. His many friends in the trade will wish him the best of luck and success.

FAIRBANKS DISCOVERS BOY WONDER.

Douglas Fairbanks has discovered another youthful "wonder." His new find is Frank Clark, ten years old, and a most expert rider of bronchos and bulldogger of calves. The tiny cow-puncher was met on a Wyoming ranch while the player was staging "The Man from Painted Post," and immediately engaged him to play a part in the film. Upon completion of the photoplay the Artcraft star took his find to California for further use. It is the boy's first experience in city life and already he has become the pet of the Lasky studio.

RALPH INCE PICTURE AT THE BROADWAY.

The date for the presentation at the Broadway Theatre on October 7, of the new Lois Weber production "The Price of a Good Time," under the banner of Jewel Productions Inc., as announced, has been changed, and instead, the same company at the same theater on the same date will present Elaine Hammerstein, in the "The Co-Respondent," a Ralph Ince production, from the play of the same name by Alice Leal Pollack and Rita Weiman.

KERRIGAN BACK AT THE STUDIO.

J. Warren Kerrigan has recovered from the broken leg he suffered several weeks at Santa Barbara, and is back at the Paralta studios at Hollywood, at work on a feature to be incorporated into his second Paralta play, "Turn of a Card," which was substantially finished at the time he was injured.

L. B. Burstein, President of the King-Bee

THE man who profits by his experiences in the past is the man whose future is successful. 'Old man Experience' comes to us all and, with his son 'Good Advice,' shows us where we were wrong, and then disappears. How soon he is forgotten by most of us! To those who remember his visit success comes and stays. To others, they keep struggling, and soon find themselves in the 'subway' of life."

Louis B. Burstein.

This is the philosophy of Louis B. Burstein, president of the King-Bee Films Corp., which has in the short space of six months made itself one of the most successful comedy companies in the film world.

Mr. Burstein was one of the original organizers of the New York Motion Picture Co. and Reliance Stock Co., which at that time had in its roster Philip Smalley, Lois Weber, James Kirkwood, Arthur Johnson, Jack Adolf, Marion Leonard, Henry Walthal, Anthony Sullivan, Gertrude Robinson, Flora Finch, E. L. Taylor, and Eugene Sangor. During his years in the film industry, he has made and supervised over two hundred comedies, all of which have shown a profit. Mr. Burstein, previous to his present vocation, was a successful lawyer. He practised law for twenty-one years.

William S. Davis Metro Director

WILLIAM S. DAVIS, one of the most successful motion picture directors in America, has been added to Metro's directing staff. His first work for Metro will be the direction of a multiple-reel Super-Feature starring Emily Stevens, a screen version of Blair Hall's story, "Alias Mrs. Jessop."

Mr. Davis has written almost every feature he has ever produced, and he has never directed a production which has not been successful. He knows both stage and screen from every angle, having been identified with the life of the theater since his boyhood. His latest affiliation was with the Fox company. Among the features produced were "Slander," "Destruction," "Dr. Rameau," "The Fool's Revenge," "The Straight Way," "The Family Stain," "The Victim" and "Jealousy," among the stars represented being Mme. Kalich, Theda Bara, Frederick Perry, Virginia Pearson and Valeska Suratt.

William S. Davis.

Nine montl with the Life Photo company preceded this engagement, and he was previously associated with Ramo, Republic, Yankee, Universal, Edison and Biograph. Mr. Davis is credited with having made the first two-reelers for a regular program.

Mr. Davis was born in Philadelphia, where he began his theatrical experience with the old Forepaugh stock company, going from there to the Girard Avenue stock company. Valerie Bergere and George Learock were among the leading players. He was determined to be an actor, but every little while someone would insist on his being an assistant stage manager or going around to the box office to count up the receipts. It was as a stage manager that he finally became firmly entrenched in the "show business," and as a director, primarily, that he later entered the newer field of motion picture work. He handled the direction of Broadway productions under the management of Charles Frohman, Daniel Frohman and Harrison Grey Fiske.

Mr. Davis is a tireless worker, enthusiastic about both the present and the future of the screen industry. He is one of the best known directors in the business.

Thomas Holding Leading Man for Petrova

MADAME OLGA PETROVA, who recently engaged Thomas Holding to play the part of the Crown Prince of Belmark in the first of the eight pictures to be made by the Petrova Picture Company this year, has just signed a contract with Mr. Holding whereby he becomes her leading man for the next four pictures. A clause in the agreement also gives her an option on Mr. Holding's services for further pictures.

Thomas Holding.

The first picture in which Mr. Holding appears with the Polish star will be completed on Wednesday or Thursday of this week and will be released on or about Oct. 22. The second picture will be started almost immediately after the completion of the first one.

Thomas Holding first went on the stage under the management of Charles Hawtrey, with whom he appeared in "A Message From Mars," "Tom, Dick and Harry," "In the Soup" and other London productions. He then attracted the attention of the late Charles Frohman and signed with him for the juvenile lead in "Are You a Mason?" After a Shakespearean tour through Australia in which he appeared in the principal role of ten of the Bard of Avon's plays, the versatile young Englishman returned to the Strand theater, London, to sing the leading baritone's part in "The Chinese Honeymoon." At the end of two seasons of musical comedy he went back to the dramatic stage in Edward Terry's company.

It was Charles Frohman who first brought Thomas Holding to America. In this country, Holding has played the leading man with Billie Burke, Maxine Elliott and many other equally well known players. His portrayal of the joung Jew, Ben Hur, for two seasons, under Klaw and Erlanger's management, brought him considerable praise and recognition.

In the motion picture field Mr. Holding's career has been no less distinguished. His first picture was "The Eternal City" for the Famous Players, and while he was still in Rome, Oliver Morosco signed him up for the revival of "Peg o' My Heart" as soon as he should again reach America. After a season with "Peg," Holding returned to the Famous Players under a yearly contract as Pauline Frederick's leading man. More recently he has been seen on the screen with Jane Grey in "Her Fighting Chance," with Doris Kenyon in "The Great White Trail," and with Clara Kimball Young in "Magda."

FRENCH BUYER ON WAY TO AMERICA.

Funkhouser Still Rampant

An Amendment to the Moving Picture Ordinance Being Considered by the Judiciary Committee of the City Council to Curb Him.

At a meeting of the judiciary committee of the city council of Chicago, Tuesday, Sept. 25, Alderman Walter P. Steffen was appointed chairman of a sub-committee of that body to consider an amendment to the moving picture ordinance which will curb the powers of Major Funkhouser and the Chicago censor board. The amendment provides that where a picture is rejected, the entire censor board shall pass judgment on it.

If the committee passes favorably on the amendment, Major Funkhouser will be shorn of much of his power. As matters stand under the present ordinance, there is no appeal from the decisions of the Major except in the courts.

Circuit Court Judge Robert E. Crowe on Monday, Sept. 24, declared, in the case of "Within the Law," that Major Funkhouser's attitude toward questionable pictures was "a shame and an ourage."

"There are affidavits on file in this case uncontradicted," said Judge Crowe, "which allege that Funkhouser has openly stated he intends to harrass every film company that seeks permits for films that are questionable. He intends to do this without regard to the merits of the films, and this attitude is an outrage.

At the meeting of the judiciary committee of the city council, on Tuesday, Wm. A. Brady, president of the N. A. M. P. I., was present. He had come on from New York for the occasion, and was the chief speaker.

"Major Funkhouser is unfair and unjust in his rulings," Mr. Brady declared. "The power of censoring films should be taken from him. The manufacturers send their pictures here and they are submitted to the whim of one man.

"We are not second-story workers. Our industry is willing to co-operate with the country in every possible way. Why, this week we are sending three films to Russia, France, Italy and the Scandinavian countries to show just how this country is preparing for the great war.

"Major Funkhouser some time ago rejected a film entitled 'A Social Highwayman,' yet Richard Mansfield was the star when that play was shown all over the country. Funkhouser, in rejecting the film, said it was 'five reels of crime.'

"Recently 'Carmen' was shown in Chicago. I pointed out to Funkhouser that this film displayed five murders and two suicides, but he said it was opera.

"The Secretary of the Treasury says we are doing our bit. He says he owes more to moving pictures for the success of the first Liberty Loan than to any other factor.

"We will send a committee of the largest producers of the country to talk this over with you. All we ask is a square deal."

Lewis F. Jacobson, attorney for the film, "Within the Law," declared that Major Funkhouser had asserted that he intended to punish the men who over-rode his decisions by appealing to the courts.

The Major Cites Authority for His Actions.

Major Funkhouser cites Ordinance No. 1627, amended July 2, 1914, as authority for his actions. It provides that if a picture "portrays any riotous, disorderly or other unlawful scene, or has a tendency to disturb the public peace, it shall be refused a permit for exhibition."

This ordinance, according to a Supreme Court ruling, as shown in the Illinois reports, may be a guide to censors, Major Funkhouser declares. Particularly does it hold, the decision states, in the case of 5 and 10 cent theaters, where children form the greater part of the attendance.

"I have censored motion pictures on the above standard in the past and shall continue to do so until the courts and city ordinance-making body lay down a clear interpretation of our ordinances contrary to the one now existing," the Major emphatically states.

Leading Chicago Newspapers Against Funkhouser.

The leading Chicago dailies are opposed to the Czar-like rulings of Censor Funkhouser. The following editorial from the Chicago Tribune of Sept. 27, is an allustration of the attitude of the press.

Censorship, by its very nature, is likely to be stupid and blundering. A wise censor could not help making mistakes, because he necessarily suffers from human limitations—limitations that manifest themselves in the form of imperfect understanding, imperfect sympathy, and imperfect vision.

A military censorship is justifiable, but it is hard to find justification for Chicago's censorship of films. When the photoplay business was in its adolescence it knew no restraints; it went for excesses of all kinds, and vulagrities and indecencies were common. The creation of censor boards was the result.

But the film business has long since developed restrictions and conventions that are certainly quite adequate for the protection of adult morality. It is difficult to see the necessity for further maintaining a guardian to decide what we are permitted to see and what is verboten.

It might not be advisable to abolish the Chicago film censorship all at once. There is a good argument for a censorship of films for children, and children make up a large part of the audience in many movie theaters. At the same time there is no reason why the censor board should be allowed to continue to exercise the broad powers that it has wielded in the past.

The proposed amendment now before the city council is designed to restrict or modify these powers. It may not be the best amendment that could be devised, but any legislation tending to curb the film dictatorship with which Chicago is afflicted is certainly a step in the right direction.

"Brown of Harvard" Now Being Produced by Selig.

During the past two weeks the Selig Polyscope Co. has been busy filming exteriors of Harvard University, at Cambridge, Mass., for the forthcoming production of "Brown of Harvard."

Headed by Tom Moore and Hazel Daly, a company of twenty people proceeded to Cambridge, where Director Harry Beaumont secured a number of scenes showing the historic old campus and buildings, some of which were erected over 200 years ago.

Permission to take the pictures at Harvard was secured through the kindness of former President Roosevelt, who, as an alumnus of Harvard, has recently been appointed one of its overseers.

It will be recalled by dramatic theater-goers that Henry Woodruff ,who was himself a Harvard graduate, starred in "Brown of Harvard" about ten years ago and that the play met with decided success throughout the country.

Upon completion of the work at Harvard the entire Selig company was brought to Chicago, by special car, where Director Beaumont is now engaged in making the interiors at the Selig studios.

Among the people in the cast are: Tom Moore, Hazel Daly, Sidney Ainsworth, Nancy Winston, Walter McGrail, Kempton Greene, Warner Richmond, Walter Hiers, Arthur Hausman, Johnnie Walker, Francis Joyner and Alice Gordon.

Picture Enterprises in Chicago.

A new corporation was recently organized to take over and operate the moving picture enterprises of Alfred Hamburger in Chicago with the object of broadening the scope of the business and improving the bookings in the various theaters. Under the new arrangement Mr. Hamburger retains charge of the bookings, while the houses will be operated by the Continental Theater Corporation, a chartered organization.

The reorganization was conducted by Attorney L. A. Berezniak, who has said of the object in view: "It is not only our plan to improve our properties in Chicago and secure the highest class bookings obtainable from the picture standpoint, but we have in mind the building of two additional theaters in the "Loop," and the taking over or building other theaters throughout the Middle West."

The Hamburger enterprises in Chicago include the Ziegfeld, the Twentieth Century, the Willard, the new Grand Oak, the Pine Grove, the Panorama and the Gayety in South Chicago.

Chicago Film Brevities.

During my brief stay in New York recently, I had an exceptional and pleasant experience during a visit to a moving picture theater in that city. It was after 10 o'clock one night when I entered the Globe theater on Broadway, where "The Conquerer" was being run. At the box office, where I was unknown, I tendered 50 cents for a seat, but was politely advised by the gentleman on duty that the presentation was half over and that it was the last for that night. I was so pleased with the experience—not for the saving of the cost of the ticket, but because of escaping the disappointment of having a fine picture destroyed for me—that I gladly recite it here so that moving picture theater owners throughout the country may profit by the example. I saw "The Conquerer" (Fox) at the Globe afterwards and was indeed glad that my pleasure in viewing it had not been marred by seeing it in sections, at different sittings.

The case of "Within the Law" (Vitagraph), now pending in the Circuit Court before Judge Robert E. Crowe, has been postponed until Monday, Oct. 8. H. J. Bayley, manager for the Chicago Vitagraph office, states that things look very favorable, and that they are in hopes of winning the suit.

Referring to a statement in one of the articles in my Chicago Letter of Sept. 22, H. H. Buckwalter, the well known film man of Denver, writes as follows: Why do cowboys wear fringes on their trousers—chaps? I am one of the many millions who don't know."

So am I, "Buck!" I should like to know myself, but forgot to ask Mr. Dixon.

Bryant Washburn recently resigned from the staff of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co. and left for New York. It is rumored that he will join the Pathe forces, and that he will possibly appear in a forthcoming serial made by that organization. His numerous friends in Chicago wish him all success in his undertakings.

The suit instituted by the city to have the injunction under which "The Spy" (Fox) is being shown, dissolved, was postponed from Monday, Sept. 24, until Friday, Sept. 28, when it will come up before Judge Samuel Alschuler in the U. S. District Court. Major Funkhouser of the Chicago censor board is determined to fight the case to a finsh.

George M. Cohan arrived in the city Sunday, Sept. 23, to attend a dress rehearsal of his Spanish drama, "The Judge of Zalamea," which opens at Cohan's Grand Opera House Sunday, Sept. 30. In a brief interview with the representative of a Chicago paper, Mr. Cohan stated that moving pictures have created a new demand for the spoken drama, as many people who never attended a dramatic theater several years ago, have now been educated by the film plays and are patronizing the regular houses. Mr. Cohan expects that in time moving pictures will be a part of the theatrical business, and that dramatic managers will interest themselves in film and spoken plays. He is also of the opinion that the war has had an important influence on the rehabilitation of dramatic business. Mr. Cohan is accompanied by Steve Reardon and they are motoring across the continent to California, and may pay the Hawaiian Islands a visit.

Douglas H. Bergh, traveling personal representative for George Kleine, arrived in the city Thursday, Sept. 27, after an absence of several weeks, during which time he covered a large section of country. He reports a constantly increasing demand for pictures of the Perfection brand, the Essanay product particularly being in high favor everywhere visited. The big publicity campaign accompanying the launching of the Perfection product is producing very marked results, and all indications point to a steadily increasing popularity for the films released through the George Kleine System.

The marriage of Pauline Frederick and Willard Mack took place in Washington, D. C., Monday, Sept. 24. Miss Frederick is well known in Chicago by her acting in the principal role in "The Fourth Estate," which had a long run here some time ago. Mr. Mack, who is known in private life as Charles McLaughlin, has also had a dramatic career, and can claim some credit as a playwright. "Kick In," one of his dramas, scored a success here. This is Miss Frederick's second venture in the matrimonial line, and Mr. Mack's third.

At a meeting between the executive committee of the Chicago Local and the committee representing the operators' union of Chicago Local No. 110, I. A. T. S. E., held in the league's headquarters, in the Masonic Temple, Friday afternoon, Sept. 21, the following arrangements were agreed upon: The scale of wages for operators will be 75 cents an hour in all houses seating 300 or less; for houses seating between 300 and 900 there will be a bonus of $2 per house in addition to the 75 cents per hour; for houses of 900 to 1,500 seats there will be a bonus of $4, and for houses seating from 1,500 and upwards thre will be a bonus of $7 per house. Several important concessions were also agreed upon concerning the hiring and discharge of operators. All over time will be considered as straight time, that is it will be paid for at the rate of 75 cents an hour, and for houses which run every day, running straight through Saturdays and Sundays, the scale will be $42 per week.

M. J. Weisfeld, general manager of the Wholesome Film Corporation, with offices at 207 S. Wabash avenue, this city, desires to correct an error which appeared in the Sept. 29 issue of this paper. Under "Current Releases" in that issue, "The Penny Philanthropist" was referred to as a five-reeler. This feature is in seven reels.

PLAYHOUSE NAMED FOR MARGARET MAYO.

Those who are in need of testimony to what woman is doing in the world of art need only point to the announcement just issued from the offices of Selwyn & Co., New York theatrical producers, that they will open in West Forty-second street, New York, a commodious new playhouse to be known as the Margaret Mayo theater. Miss Mayo is a member of the advisory board of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and does active work at the studio in all branches where her expert knowledge may be of service.

ing agent for the British Army, and will open headquarters in his hotel in each city on his travels and accept recruits to be sent home for service. It is expected that Mr. Maude will announce his mission from the stage on the occasion of his arrival in each city.

One of the prettiest and cleverest of screen comediennes is Kathleen O'Connor, who has just joined the ranks of the Universal laughmakers, and is romping through Victor comedies with Harry Mann under the direction of Al Santell. She has been seen in leading roles in a number of Keystone pictures, and lately has been working opposite Toto, the circus clown, in Rolin comedies.

Henry Lehrman has just completed a new Sunshine Comedy entitled "Wedding Bells and Roaring Lions." Mildred Lee played the leading part, and three "ferocious" lions were included in the cast.

Thomas H. Ince was the guest of Henry McRae, manager of production at Universal City, one day this week, and the two producers spent several very pleasant hours together. Ince saw more than twenty companies at work on the immense stages and at the various exterior locations on the several hundred acres of the plant, and frequently expressed his surprise at the magnitude of filmland's capital.

Leila Leibrand, who has made a name for herself as a scenario writer with the Fox and Balboa companies, has been given a long term contract by Pathe to write exclusively for Baby Marie Osborne. Miss Leibrand is noted for her delineations of child life, and her latest story for Baby Marie entitled "The Little Patriot" has won considerable favorable comment from the members of the western film colony. Miss Leibrand has left Los Angeles for the eastern office of Pathe to take up her new work.

George Beban will shortly begin work at the Lasky studio under the direction of Donald Crisp. Mr. Crisp has been responsible for Mr. Beban's previous Paramount productions, but this is the first time the star has ever worked at the Lasky plant, all of his productions having been made at the Morosco studio. The character which Mr. Beban will play is that of a French Canadian, and the story is strongly dramatic. Following that, Mr. Beban will play lead in a picturization of one of William DeMille's plays. Donald Crisp has been engaged in directing Julian Eltinge, whose first picture, "The Countess Charming," made a big hit at Clune's Auditorium. William DeMille will direct Eltinge in his next picture.

William S. Hart narrowly escaped serious injury recently while making the last scenes for "The Narrow Trail," the first Thomas H. Ince production to be released by Artcraft. The scenario called for Mr. Hart, mounted on his famous pony, Fritz, to ride across a narrow chasm during a chase in the mountains. The means selected for passage was an old tree, half rotted with age, that was though sufficiently strong to carry the weight of Hart and the pony; but it proved otherwise, for, as the screen star was half way across, the tree gave way, and horse and rider were precipitated to the bottom of the chasm. Hart stuck to his mount. Both were severely bruised, but no serious injuries were sustained.

Two Pasadena theaters, Clune's and the Crown, have been traded by the owners, M. Pierce and A. L. Phillips, for two large tracts of land. The Clune theater building was exchanged for fifteen hundred acres twelve miles from Bakersfield. A. L. Caldwell, of Los Angeles, is the owner of the building. The Crown theater property was exchanged for a one hundred and eighty-three acre ranch six miles from Chino. The new owner is Mrs. L. F. Pine, of Chino.

Harry Lee Wilbur, formerly of the Los Angeles Times, will manage the new Rialto theater at Fullerton, which opens Monday, October 1. "Jack and the Beanstalk," the William Fox ten-reel super-feature, has been secured by Mr. Wilbur as his opening attraction. The Rialto music is from a new $5,000 photoplayer organ.

Irving Lesser, manager of the All-Star Feature Distributers, has departed from the Sunset climate for Frisco, relative to the every increasing business secured by the office under his managership.

Charlie Croog, popular Bakersfield exhibitor, was in Los Angeles this week on business, which has to do with the purchase of a new car.

* * *

Triangle-Keystone production manager, Albert Glassmire, ever on the alert for new writing talent, has secured the services of Roy Del Ruth, Walter Newman and Rudolph Bylek. Jay Dwiggins, Triangle-Keystone character actor and author, has also been engaged to write exclusively, for a while at least.

Murdock MacQuarrie has been assigned by Henry McRae, manager of production at Universal City, to the Neal Hart company. He has begun work on a two-reel western Bison entitled "The Keeper of Hellgate," in which Eileen Sedgwick will play opposite. MacQuarrie, while affiliated with the Universal Company several years ago, produced a large number of strong dramas, which were released under the Gold Seal and Big U brands.

Director William Beaudine started work on his first Triangle-Keystone comedy this week with an array of stars that assures its success. His cast includes Fritz Schade, Paddy McGuire, Peggy Pearce, Joseph Belmont and Claire Anderson.

Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, with a large company, have gone to Arizona, where they will make important mining scenes for a forthcoming production. Among the members of the company were Mildred Harris, Clara Whipple, William Stowell, Frame Williams, and others.

Considerable anxiety is noted at the Christie studios in Hollywood, where a large expanse of new diffusers has been erected over a part of the big east stage, which has heretofore not been required for production work. Although no definite statement has been given out, it is reported another producing unit will commence work almost immediately.

Director E. J. Le Saint began production this week on a new five-reel photoplay, in which Louise Lovely is the featured player. The story was written and prepared for the screen by Charles Kenyon, and is entitled "The Straw Cellar." Others in the cast are Alfred Allen, Lewis J. Cody, Hector Dion, Mrs. A. E. Witting, Beatrice Van, Betty Schade and Fred Church.

Betty Compson, who lends charm to so many of the Christie comedies, has returned from her month's vacation, and director Al Christie obliged with a story which gave her an opportunity to go to the beach and wear a bathing suit. The picture is called "Their Seaside Tangle," and in the cast are Lois Leslie, Jay Belasco and "Smiling Billy" Mason.

Arthur Moon has been added to the Triangle-Keystone forces, and has been cast for the leading comedy role in a new picture started under the direction of Henry Kernan. Others in the cast are Caroline Rankin, Charlie Dill and Marianna De la Torre.

The latest addition to the comedy forces at Universal City is Harry Mann, who for some five years has been one of the leading actors here, and who, while playing in comedies, developed an original type which so appealed to the production manager that Mann was placed at the head of a company. He made a distinct impression by his work in the Universal serials, "The Broken Coin" and "Lucille Love," and later as leading support to a number of the Universal stars. Prior to entering pictures Mann had played at various theaters in New York, but until recently never had attempted strictly comedy parts. He is under the direction of Al Santell, who directed Kolb and Dill and the Ham and Bud comedies, and Miss Kathleen O'Connor is playing opposite him. King Vidor of the Universal staff is writing the comedies for Mann.

Douglas Gerrard has returned again to the Universal fold. Gerrard, it will be recalled, was formely associated with the Big U organization in the capacity of director, acting leading roles for some time before his promotion to a directorship.

"The Heart of Ezra Greer"

Pathe-Thanhouser Five-Reel Subject Features Frederick Warde in Story with Strong Heart Interest Theme.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS feature number, written by Lloyd Lonergan and directed by Emile Chautard, tells the story of an aged butler and his daughter. The latter is wronged by a wealthy young man, who afterward deserts her and leaves her to shift for herself and child. By a series of coincidences the principals are brought together some years later in the city, and the young man sees the error of his ways and marries the girl.

The plot, as may be seen, is one of a rather obvious type, but it is at the same time a type of general appeal. With the advantage of quiet, sincere acting, such as Frederick Warde does in the part of the butler, the events pictured get quite a strong hold on the sympathies. Leile Frost is also pleasing as Mary, the daughter. George Forth plays the role of the wealthy young man who causes all the trouble, and Lillian Mueller appears as a cabaret girl, known as "The Baby Vamp."

The story is very simple in construction. It begins with the flirtation of John and Mary at a co-educational institution, where the girl is employed as waitress. He lures the girl to the city, where he lives with her for a time, intending to marry her, or at least promising to do so. He decides to desert her after conferring with his guardian. After the girl disappears Ezra Greer, the father, who is "in service" near the school, gives up his work and sets out to hunt for her. Much of the story concerns the old man's pathetic wanderings and the adventures which befall him.

After leaving Mary, John becomes enamored of the cabaret girl. Mary reads of their engagement and leaves her child at his apartments with a note stating that he must care for it. In the meantime Ezra has obtained employment as John's butler, not knowing of his former relationship with Mary. The denouement is reached after a number of dramatic scenes. Both of the Badgley children appear to advantage in this number.

"The Painted Doll"

Pathe Releases First of Russian Art Film Pictures, Enacted By Proficient Cast of Russian Performers.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS first number of the Russian Art Film series of features tells a story of grim tragedy. It was written by A. Pauzakin, directed by Cheslor Sabinsky, and the four principal characters are portrayed by Russian players, Ivan Mozakin, Mme. Lesinko, Tanya Fetner and P. F. Sharoff. The settings are Russian, the costuming and general appearance of the performers are Russian, and the note of high tragedy running through the story reflects the dramatic passion we have come to associate with Russian literature. It is stronger fare than the average American story.

American critics have long contended that the book and magazine publishers of this country are too prone to bring out fiction of the happy type alone and many Russian novels have been translated and found a warm reception at the hands of our reading public. Now the picture-going public, which is increasing each year by leaps and bounds, is to be put to the test by genuine Russian tragedy enacted on the screen. It remains to be seen how great its popularity will be.

"The Painted Doll" is a six-reel offering, telling a gripping, consistent story of its type. Ivan Kreslof, a rich steel magnate, estranged from his own wife because of her social activities, turns to Tanya Lensky, the wife of one of his poor employees. Practically the whole of the sad story centers about these three characters. Kreslof invites Lensky to his home, under pretense of giving him special work and promising him an increase in wages. Later he sends Lensky on a mission which will keep him away for an entire month, and in the meantime installs Tanya in sumptuous apartments, playing upon her love of fine surroundings and social ambitions. The situations leading up to the seduction of the wife are frankly but delicately handled.

With the return of the husband, tragic consequences rapidly follow. During his altercation with Kreslof, the latter kills a servant and blames Lensky for the deed. Lensky is tried and put to death for the crime. Kreslof broods over his crime and becomes almost insane, being pursued by visions of the murdered servant. He tries to confess at a social affair, but is prevented by his wife, who has learned the story. Kreslof then kills himself, to save the honor of his name, and Tanya, "the painted doll," dies before a large portrait of herself.

The development of the story, from the standpoint of general construction, is unusual. Long explanatory subtitles are employed at the beginning, embellished by artistic drawings. The fine dramatic work of the actors gets an immediate hold upon the interest, that of Tanya Fetner and Ivan Mozakin being particularly strong. The continuity is excellent throughout.

"The Silence Sellers"

Five-Part Metro Photoplay from Story by Blair Hall Starring Mme. Petrova Is Mildly Entertaining.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A DECIDED improvement would have been observable in "The Silence Sellers," a five-part Metro photoplay founded on a tale from "Snappy Stories," if Mme. Petrova, the star, had shown more animation during the performance. The story is mildly entertaining and exposes the methods of a class of social blackmailers that work by threatening to publish any bit of scandal in a sheet called "Tattle Tale" that they are able to unearth. The heroine, Laura Sutphen, is obliged to dismiss Scene from "The Silence Sellers" (Metro).

her lover, Donald Loring, on account of his drinking, and finds out later than he is employed by the blackmailers. A wealthy married woman becomes involved with one of the gang, a foreigner of birth and breeding, and he also gets a hold over Miss Sutphen. She is forced to assist him for a time but manages to help prevent him from compromising the other woman. She is also delighted to learn that young Loring has been misleading her and the blackmailers as well and is instrumental in effecting their capture. He is quickly forgiven after that and restored to favor.

Blair Hall, the author of the story, has not contributed anything new to the large supply of modern fiction, but his surprise finish will please some persons and they will enjoy many of the incidents in "The Silence Sellers." Burton L. King has directed the production in good style, and it has been given a fair cast. Mme. Petrova looks and dresses the part of Laura Sutphen admirably, but considerable more animation in her acting would be appreciated. Mahlon Hamilton, Violet Reed, Charles Dungan, Myles McCarthy, Wyndham Standing, Henry Leone and Edward James are other members of the cast.

"The Secret Man"

Five-Reel Butterfly Production Features Harry Carey In Strong Story of Western Plains.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel Butterfly number, written by George Hively and directed by Jack Ford, contains more plot than is found in the average Western subject. The action is good throughout and holds the interest well. Good photography and a generous lot of picturesque scenes, flooded with California sunshine, also make a pleasing impression.

The story begins with a girl named Molly, sister of a sheriff in a Western town, the part being portrayed by Edith Sterling in an acceptable manner. Molly has been secretly married to a ranch owner, named Henry Beaufort. The latter is forced to keep the marriage a secret until the death of his uncle, who would otherwise disinherit him.

Molly leaves her child in the care of a Mexican and his wife. The child, a girl of some four or five years, is portrayed by Elizabeth Janes, and plays an important role in the story. Because Molly has no more money to pay for the child, the Mexican decides to make away with the little girl. He takes her with him in a wagon, after he has been drinking heavily, and the horses run away with him. The Mexican is killed and the girl temporarily stunned.

Cheyenne Harry, who has recently escaped from a nearby penitentiary, comes riding along and discovers the child. He immediately decides to get her back to some sort of civilization, and finally surrenders to a pursuing posse on her account. This part is played as usual by Harry Carey. His escape from the penitentiary, the scenes on the train with Henry Beaufort, and the subsequent finding of the child, are all very interesting. Later in the story he is instrumental in restoring the child to her mother and bringing about the reunion of husband and wife. The action is nicely developed in this offering.

Others in the cast are Morris Foster, Vester Pegg, Bill Gettinger, Steve Clemente and Hoot Gibson.

"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp"

Fox Kiddies in Eight-Part Screen Version of the Old Fairy Tale Display Remarkable Ability.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE Fox production of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," an eight-part screen version of the old fairy tale, scenario by Bernard McConville and directed by C. M. and S. A. Franklin, again utilizes the remarkable ability of the Fox Kiddies, Francis Carpenter, Virginia Lee Corbin, Violet Radcliffe and Gertrude Messinger being almost of equal prominence and merit. Contrary to the "Jack and the Beanstalk" picture, the rest of the characters are taken by grown-ups, and the children are called upon to play a number of serious scenes, some of them of an intensely dramatic order. The work of Violet Radcliffe as the Magician is frankly burlesque and is always amusing, but Francis Carpenter commands respect for his scene in the desert where he nearly dies of thirst and exhaustion, and Virginia Lee Corbin's expression of grief or fear comes very close to the real article. Her childish grace and winning sincerity are also greatly in her favor.

The production is elaborate, several of the scenes having marked beauty. The magical effects demanded by the story have been supplied by the resources of the screen, no task imposed upon the slave of the lamp being beyond the skill of the producer. The palace of the Sultan, the scenes in the desert and the interiors of Aladdin's magic palace are all fine examples of their kind, and the atmosphere of the East is never lost during the unfolding of the story.

Two improvements were possible in making "Aladdin." The scenes might have been given a more humorous treatment and Messrs. Franklin refrained from teaching all the children the same set of gestures. Some of the scenes could still be shortened to advantage. Gertrude Messinger deserves special mention for her performance of Yasmini. She adds to a "cute" personality an excellent quality of dramatic art. Elmo Lincoln is an impressive Genie and the other characters are well acted.

"North of Fifty-three

A Cave Man Melodrama, with Dustin Farnum as "Roaring Bill," a Wild Hill Miner, Who Steals the Girl and Takes Her Off to His Cabin.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE recent Fox five-reel picture, "North of Fifty-Three," has the quality usually found in the cave man love stories and it seems to this reviewer that it is a little franker and a little rougher than the usual film of its kind. This is partly because the script doesn't take enough pains to develop the character of "Roaring Bill," played by Dustin Farnum, and to make the spectator enough of a partisan for him. The story opens with a scene in which we see him fondling children; but that is before we know what it is for, and the incident fails to sink deep into consciousness. He enjoys a fight; he goes 50-50 on a gold mine with a poor lunger just because the sick man can put up a stiff fight, and we can see that he has a bluff and hearty way with him. Then he steals the girl right out of her room at the boarding house and carries her off to the cabin in the mountains. The girl is taken by Winifred Kingston, but she does too little acting and her unconvincing attitudes rob the picture of effectiveness on her side. Yet the picture is real to this extent that, as nitrate acid always makes nitrate of silver on silver, so this picture will affect audiences as cave man stories are wont to do, and will do it markedly. This is what the picture is worth to the exhibitor who considers his audience.

One of the picture's big assets is the background characters, of which there are many kinds, and nearly all good. Then it has some mighty fine natural backgrounds and sets. The acting, with the exception of the leading woman, is excellent. The young actress tries her best and is intelligent, but unimaginative. She will be better able to act a grown woman's knowledge of life when she is a few years older—how can she expect to do so before?

The plot is clear. Its introduction scenes are not needed, are not made use of in the plot, and are rather unconvincing, and the same is true of the final denouement. It is a picture more apt to please men than women, or so it seems to this reviewer, and he is not certain on this point by any means.

Follies Gang Support Ann Pennington.

The Famous Players studio recently has been more like a girls' seminary in appearance than a perfectly good institution for the taking and making of motion pictures, for the reason that Ann Pennington, whose new Paramount Picture, "The Antics of Ann," is now in the making under direction of Edward Dillon, brought her Follies "gang" with her to use in the extra roles of the schoolroom scenes. Work is progressing splendidly on the "Antics of Ann," which will be an October release.

"The Fibbers"

A Comedy Drama of Unusual Interest by Essanay, Featuring Bryant Washburn and Virginia Valli—Directed by Fred E. Wright—Script by Tipton Steck.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE FIBBERS" is based on the story of that name by John W. Adams, a magazine writer of some note, the adaptation being the work of H. Tipton Steck, of Essanay's scenario staff. While the story can lay no claim to greatness, the adaptation exercises a peculiar interest that holds the spectator until the final climax is reached, and this climax creates a great wave of pathos that surges through heart and brain, compelling the best that is in all of us to recognize the good that is in the worst of us.

The comedy vein is rather light, depending altogether on complications which arise in the happy home life of a husband and wife, each of whom tries hard to hide from the other the great good fortune that has come just in the nick of time to stave off the horrors of a "busted" bank account. The drama is didactic as well as amusing, and the lesson is reserved until the close, when the climax already referred to carries it home to the heart with overwhelming effect.

Peter Hedrick Cort (Bryant Washburn) is a rising young architect, whose heart is sometimes larger than his purse. Barbara (Virginia Valli), his wife, is a lovable helpmate, whose dearest object in life is to make "hubby" happy.

When the family bank account is at its lowest ebb, a railroad accident takes place near their home, in which an aged tramp is severely injured. Peter has the hobo carried to his home, where a fractured limb keeps him abed for a long time. Peter and Barbara are at their wits' end how to meet the bills for doctor and nurse, and other expenses, when, as if by sheer good luck, Peter secures the contract to build a great mansion for a millionaire, and Barbara succeeds in selling a play written during her stay at college. Estrangement follows because of seemingly compromising incidents, but everything is cleared up when husband and wife learn the secret of the other. The tramp disappears, to the great joy of Peter, but he and Barbara learn soon afterwards that they owed all their success to the influence of the poor outcast.

Bryant Washburn and Virginia Valli are certain of a warm welcome in the roles of Peter and Barbara. The home life of these young married people is appealingly drawn, until it is shattered by the secrets referred to. The family discords are most amusingly shown, while reconciliation is effected in a very whirlwind of action.

The tramp is excellently impersonated by Mark Elliston, and John Cossar, with his usual care and art, gives a fine portrayal of Philip Allen, the famous New York play producer.

The release will be made Oct. 15, through the George Kleine System.

"Baby Mine"

An Amusing Goldwyn Comedy Presenting Madge Kennedy in a Delightful Characterization—Support Flawless.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

BABY MINE" is an exception among plays adapted from the stage product, partly because it lends itself to the transformation through bright lines and good original construction, but mainly through skillful scenario arrangement. Its success, like that of most popular screen stories, results from a nice harmony of authorship, handling and interpretation. The three principal artistic requirements are present in an attractive blend, with the scientific end well taken care of. High lights of merit are the marvelously "practical" and wholly convincing interiors and Madge Kennedy's delightful personality.

Somewhere in the modest background minds have been busy to contribute thorough workmanship in settings, all in entire accord with the mood and atmosphere of the story, and without thrusting upon notice that staginess so destructive of illusion, and so unnecessary in moving pictures. This true craftsmanship is a heavy contributor to the spectator's satisfaction, but the audience merely enjoys, without noticing critically, such essential details. Madge Kennedy's personality is thus suitably framed and placed. Further impetus is given by character-revealing humor in the sub-titles, which are admirably selected and get most of the laughs.

The characterization, especially that laying bare the mind and heart of a wife so beautiful as to be almost childish, is both delicate and delightful—it would be almost too subtle for the screen under ordinary circumstances, but it is brightly and clearly enforced throughout by the author and by Miss Kennedy. The young star gives a most convincing interpretation of a girl-wife, matured physically, about twelve mentally, and cheerfully irresponsible, childlessly selfish and untruthful, yet so sweet, loyal and ardent that our affections are won and her artless lying forgotten. Miss Kennedy sparkles like a true star throughout: the support is flawless, and the whole picture should be a friend-winner to the new art.

A Couple of Kalems

Two Stirring One-Reel Features Culled from the Adventures of "Grant, Police Reporter."

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE success of the Kalem series, "Grant, Police Reporter," which had its initial release in Oct., 1916, has inspired the management of the Kalem Company to release four or five adventures culled from among many. The excellent plots of these stories, provided by Robert Welles Ritchie, suggests that they may be acceptable to the public as one-reel features. A review of two of these one-reel adventures, teeming with interesting incident, justifies faith in their success. They are stirring tales of adventure, developed consistently.

"A Deal in Bonds."

It will be remembered that George Larkin, blessed with remarkable acrobatic skill, plays the role of Tom Grant, and that Ollie Kirby plays opposite him. The story of "A Deal in Bonds" centers about the eccentricities of a rich old woman who believes that the cardinal sin to a lack of economy, and the cardinal virtue the hoarding of money. Finally, her hoarding propensities are her undoing, when she is kidnapped for the purpose of stealing from her twenty-five thousand dollars worth of bonds. In the telling of the story the comedy side is not forgotten, and the result is as good a one-reel feature as could be desired.

"The Mystery of Room 422."

The lifeless body of a woman revealed by the bursting open of the door of Room 422 at a certain hotel sets the ball of adventure rolling in this instance, and opens the way for some thrilling events in which Grant is the chief performer. In following the clues of the murder he does some dare-devil stunts that are intensely interesting. A good fight takes place in the room of the murderer when Grant finds the missing part to a tell-tale note, and also the mate to a cuff link found in the woman's room, and the blood-stained shirt sleeve in which the cuff link is fastened.

The public will be pleased with the release of these one-reel adventures, which present, as before said, good stirring tales.

Kate Price and Billy Ruge Mated.

New principals are featured in the fourth of the series of Sparkle comedies just finished by the Jaxon Film Corporation for release by General Film. Billy Ruge and Kate Price, both well known to fandom, will entertain the public during the coming weeks. Kate Price is well remembered for her excellent work with John Bunny some years ago, and both are old favorites with fandom. Sparkle releases in this new series, which is better than ever, are "Week End Shopping," "Pals," "Ambition," "In High Speed," "Monkey-Maid-Man" and "A Bargain—$37.50."

"The Sunset Trail"

Lasky-Paramount Production Features Vivian Martin in Five-Reel Story of Marked Emotional Appeal.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE SUNSET TRAIL" is a five-reel adaptation, by Beulah Marie Dix, of a story by Alice McIver. It provides a strong medium for Vivian Martin, who plays the pretty young country girl lured into the clutches of a fast social set, in this instance by her own wayward mother.

The contrast of situations found in this offering is one of perennial appeal, perhaps because it is repeated over and over again in real life. This story puts new vitality into a familiar theme, and the director, George H. Melford, has made it equally enjoyable in a pictorial sense. The settings and photography are remarkably fine.

Vivian Martin is excellent as the country girl, Bess. She appears first as the simple farm girl, unaware of the world about her. Later, when the city men invade the scene and one of them entices her mother away, she experiences real sorrow for the first time. The girl is then left with her stern old father, admirably portrayed by Charles Ogle.

Five years later, the mother, now married to the city man, appears at her husband's hunting lodge near the farm. She meets Bess and induces her to come to the lodge for a month. Judd Aiken, the father, agrees to this, reluctantly, though he is not afraid of the girl's strength of character. But the test which is put upon Bess through her weak mother at the house party is a severe one, and it requires all of her own will power and that of her lover, Kirke, to save her. The situations here developed are quite powerful in their emotional appeal, and all of the principals contribute to their success. In the end the girl breaks away from her mother's control and starts back through the woods to her own home. The father arrives just after she has gone, and he and the lover institute a search for Bess. The closing scenes bring happiness.

Others in the cast are Carmen Phillips, who does fine work as the mother; Henry A. Barrows, Harrison Ford and Billy Elmer.

"The Princess of Park Row"

Vitagraph Five-Part Blue Ribbon Feature by Paul West a Piece of Unabashed Fiction of the Zenda Type.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A PIECE of unabashed fiction is a tale that doesn't give a rap for probability and that is the precise state of mind of "The Princess of Park Row," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature by Paul West, directed by Ashley Miller. A princess who hails from the mythical principality of Bellaris, comes to the United States with her father, strikes up an acquaintance with a young reporter who takes her to Coney Island, shows her the wonders of Luna Park, helps to save her father from a band of crooks, and is made a prince of Bellaris that he may wed the princess. There is a rather indistinct serious motive to the story about stolen land the father of the princess is trying to recover for his king that it may be restored to the people of Bellaris, but the love affair between the princess and the reporter dwarfs, in interest, anything else that takes place. In fact, the serious motive merely gets in the way of the real entertaining part of the story, owing to its unconvincing qualities and the disjointed construction of the plot.

Some persons will laugh with "The Princess of Park Row," others will laugh at her and be extremely doubtful about the reporter really being made a prince and marrying a princess. It is only fair to add that Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald, who play the two parts, seem well suited to each other and are refreshingly human. William Dunn, John Costello (badly made up) and Anne Brody have important roles which they play very well.

"Stranded in Arcady"

In a Strong Pathe Melodrama Mrs. Castle Scores as a Straight Screen Player and Not as a Dancer.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

NOT as a dancer does Mrs. Vernon Castle appeal to her admirers in "Stranded in Arcady," the five-part melodrama produced by the Astra and released by Pathe on October 14. Not a single step of the light fantastic variety is she seen to take in the course of the story. She comes to us as a straight screen player—and she makes good. There's no doubt of that. To be sure, in the opening she portrays the part o. a teacher of dancing to the well-to-do, but it is only a bit. The story quickly settles into action that interests and holds throughout.

There is a distinct air of mystery about the major part of the tale, which is not cleared up until near the closing. This in no way detracts from the interest, from the suspense, if you will. Distinctly it adds to it. While we are guessing on one track the plot is rapidly moving in an entirely different direction. Practically all of the picture is staged in the open, in the north woods—wildly picturesque and good to look upon. Thrilling moments there are, too; not the least of these are the scenes of canoeing in turbulent streams, demonstrating that Mrs. Castle has plenty of nerve and that she is a good swimmer.

The chief player has the role of Lucy Millington, who looks upon men with indifference, if not contempt. Elliott Dexter is Donald Prime, who has written a book about women. The two are thrown together in the woods—in order to prevent their sharing in an inheritance, as it later turns out, although in the meantime we are under the impression the singular happenings have been caused by the enthusiasm of an overzealous friend anxious to convince his author-friend his knowledge of women is nil. The increasing regard of the two for each other is convincingly delineated, and forms one of the attractive features of the story.

Mr. Dexter makes a likable opposite for Mrs. Castle. He has reserve, and he has force. Frank Crane directs the script, which was taken from the novel of Francis Lynde.

Triangles

"Ashes of Hope," Five-Part Photoplay of Western Life, Starring Belle Bennett, and "The Sultan's Wife," Keystone Comedy.

"Ashes of Hope."

NO less a person than Thomas H. Ince is the author of "Ashes of Hope," a five-part Triangle photoplay in which Belle Bennett impersonates a dance hall queen who falls honestly in love with a worthless specimen of a man and tries to go straight. The sentimentality has been laid on with a heavy hand, and the girl displays the usual amount of virtuous feeling given to heroines of this class. The author, however, has refrained from reforming her completely and marrying her off to a respectable man at the finish. Finding that the chap for whom she is willing to quit the old life is already married, she saves him from the vengeance of the proprietor of the dance hall for the sake of the man's little son, by agreeing to become the gambler's wife.

The story is without a hero and its revelation of human nature is not particularly edifying, but it moves with spirit and reproduces life in the raw with considerable fidelity, when not engaged in whitewashing the character of the heroine. A novel feature of the plot is the absence of any really decent men or women. It must be admitted, however, that reckless souls such as people "Ashes of Hope" are quite apt to supply plenty of excitement, and this quality is generally present in the picture. The play will find many admirers, the acting of Belle Bennett and the production, as a whole, being of so excellent a sort that they will have little difficulty in beguiling most spectators of their sympathy. As Gonda, the dance hall woman, Miss Bennett makes the character sufficiently realistic, without losing a certain womanliness that belongs to the actress herself. Jack Livingston, Jack Richardson and Josie Sedgwick are as melodramatic as their characters demand. Percy Challenger has an amusing comedy bit as "Flat Foot."

"The Sultan's Wife."

This Keystone comedy introduces the diving girls as wives of an eastern potentate, and supplies them with a swimming pool in the palace of their lord and master. The gentleman undertakes to steal an attractive little American girl and add her to his harem, but is defeated by the combined wits of the girl's lover, an intelligent dog and a clever monkey. The comedy is acted in lively fashion and has the average amount of humorous situations.

"The Spotted Lily"

Five-Part Bluebird Production Featuring Ella Hall Displays Considerable Artistry of Presentation, but Fails to Satisfy.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story of "The Spotted Lily," as presented in the Bluebird five-part production is more of a narrative than a drama; and as such is lacking in those moments of suspense attendant on incidents leading to the climax of a drama. In spots the picture, which was directed by Harry Solter, is good. There are touches of genuine artistry to be found in the development of atmosphere and in the getting over of the various details of the story, but in spite of this, as the picture progresses there is a distinct impression of "drag," with a question arising in the mind of the spectator as to what the "punch" of the picture is to be. The latter fails to develop, however, and the story breaks off so abruptly that one can almost hear it snap.

Ella Hall is the featured member of the play, with Gretchen Lederer and Victor Rottman carrying the leads in the supporting cast. Charles H. Mailles and Wilton Taylor are also striking members of the support. The story opens with some pretty pastoral scenes, after which Yvonne and Anatole, the lovers of the early portion, are separated by the appearance on the horizon of a young nobleman, who lures Yvonne away, mistreats her, and leaves her stranded with a child. The girl then seeks the protection of her former lover, who, to drown his sorrows, has entered a monastary. The girl dies, leaving her child to the care of the monk. The tale then skips several years to the budding womanhood of Yvonne the second, following her love story with a young violinist from Europe, when, with Father Anatole, Yvonne and Jean, her lover, flee to America to escape the ravages of war. Poverty overtakes them in America and Jean pawns his violin for food, after which Yvonne, discovering what he has done, sings in a cabaret to gain money to reclaim the instrument. When she arrives home with the violin she finds that Jean has left her and gone to seek fame and fortune with a rich woman who has patronized him for his musical ability. The close of the story leaves him on her threshold about to return to Yvonne.

The characters of the story are well delineated, and Ella Hall is very charming in the role of Yvonne. That of the violinist, while perfectly faithful to that peculiar type of musician, lacks the virility that we love in the hero of play.

"Married in Name Only"

Entertainment Value Slight—Melodrama With Plea for Eugenic Marriages—In This Case, After the Horrors, "Tainted" Hero is Proved an Adopted Child.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IF scenes full of loveliness when taken by themselves could give entertainment value to a motion picture, a recent Ivan offering, "Married in Name Only," would be an excellent picture for the people. Its scenes, when considered as not a part of a story, are charming. They cannot be so considered and the story is far too morbid and distressing to be acceptable to the healthy minded. I believe that to the majority this picture will be much more an offense than a pleasure. It drags; there is too much play on morbid conditions and not enough actual motion to the story. It is in six reels and we are given not one picture of the hero's insane mother, but many. One glimpse would have carried the story and, if the director wanted to create horror, it could have been done solely by the facial expression of her relatives. We get so much insanity that it is a positive distress and no pictures of insanity ever carried a story more than one short step, except where the mad person is about to act on a sane person, say cut his throat.

This mother knew her father and grandfather had been insane and that she herself had sojourned in the border land. Her son is engaged to marry and has just published a book dealing with tainted children of abnormal parents. She holds in till she and the son reach the bride's house and the wedding guests are present. Then she tells him that he, too, is tainted. The marriage goes on. The pretty wife begs for a nuptial kiss in vain. The door between the rooms is locked and the key thrown out of the window. The maid, who makes the beds, sees the situation in the morning and has a gleeful time telling it to the butler. Meanwhile the mother goes mad and there's horror enough for all. Then it is found that the son was adopted, though the mother was too sick when her baby was born to know that it was dead and that another had been substituted.

There is much poetry in the scenes, sets and backgrounds. The acting is fair, not great. The photography is perfect. Edmund Lawrence is the author and director of the picture.

"Conscience"

Allegory and Realism Share the Action of Five-Part Fox Photoplay Featuring Gladys Brockwell, and Written by J. Searle Dawley and E. Lloyd Sheldon.

FORTUNATELY, for the world at large, there are but few women in high social life as low and degraded as the heroine of "Conscience," a five-part Fox production, written by J. Searle Dawley and E. Lloyd Sheldon. The story attempts to disguise its true character by pretending to teach a moral lesson with the aid of allegory, but, stripped of its thin veneer of being inspired by Milton's "Paradise Lost," it is revealed as a sordid tale of the physical wrong doing of a fair but frail young woman whose promiscuity threatens to embrace every man in the cast. The manner of making this clear to the spectator is accomplished with the delicacy of touch that characterizes a sledge hammer when swung by a husky son of Italy. The fact that the lady is supposed to be the reincarnation of Serama, the consort of Lucifer, and that she is under his dominance all through the play; also, that she repents and is seen, at the finish, climbing up to the heaven from which she was driven, does not excuse the bald suggestion with which her frequent falls from virtue are shown. To prostitute Milton's noble work in such a way is an artistic crime.

So much for the story The production is not without merit. Bertram Bracken has directed the picture with considerable artistic effect in the allegorical portions, and Gladys Brockwell is faithful to the task assigned her by the exigencies of her dual role. She wears a number of striking costumes, a dancing dress being excessively bold in the back. Adequate portrayals are contributed by Marjorie Daw, Eugenie Forde, Eve Southern, Genevieve Blinn, Douglas Gerrard, Edward Cecil, Harry C. Lonsdale, Colin Chase, and Bertram Grassby.

Eight Reels of Amusing Photoplays and Well Chosen Educationals Make an Excellent Entertainment—Released by George Kleine System.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

CONQUEST PROGRAM No. 10, released by George Kleine system, is made up of eight reels and comprises "The Pied Piper of Hamelin," a version of the Robert Browning poem; "Your Obedient Servant," a three-part story founded on Anna Sewell's familiar tale "Black Beauty"; "A Duke for a Day," a comedy, featuring Mildred Havens and Ray McKee, and two half-reel subjects, "Angling for Trout" and "Raising Ostriches in South Africa." The program is well chosen. "The Pied Piper of Hamelin" tells the legend in a condensed but entertaining form, and "Your Obedient Servant," cleverly acted by a cast headed by Peggy Adams and Pat O'Malley, records the adventures of a faithful horse who is supposed to relate his own history. The animal used in the picture is an unusually intelligent beast and has been carefully trained. The story he tells is laid at the time of the Civil War and has plenty of heart interest and some good comedy touches. The production is creditable.

"A Duke for a Day" was written by Homer Croy and is not at all novel in plot, but Ray McKee's facile acting of the hero makes it enjoyable. He plays a happy-go-lucky sort of a chap, who is led to suppose that he is the long lost heir to a dukedom and finds out it is all a mistake, after one day of high life. His support is satisfactory.

"Angling for Trout" is attractive as a scenic and also gives a practical illustration of how the sport is conducted. "Raising Ostriches in South Africa" shows the method from the hatching of the brood to the full grown bird.

"The Apple-Tree Girl"

Edison Five-Part Perfection Picture, Featuring Shirley Mason, Novel in Treatment and Decidedly Pleasing—Released by George Kleine System.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ALTHOUGH the original "Apple-Tree Girl" was a lady by the name of Eve, she is not the heroine of the Edison five-part Perfection Picture of that title, released by the George Kleine System. Charlotte Marlin is the young person in question, and she is a very up-to-date product; also an interesting one, as played by Shirley Mason. Other things that add to her popularity is a refreshing novelty of treatment in handling the story, and excellent photographic reproduction of a lot of charming New England scenery that is all too seldom thrown upon the screen.

"The Apple-Tree Girl" is a photo novel and has but few touches of the dramatic. The story is simple—just the adventures of an artless little country girl who dreams her dream of becoming famous and marrying a millionaire, makes herself a golf champion and then decides that true love is better than any of the things money can buy. It rings true from first to last, however, and although it will appeal strongly to the juvenile element among picture patrons, it is bound to please all the older heads that are wise enough to be in sympathy with youth.

An interesting feature of the picture is a game of golf, played on the links of the New London Golf Club. It is cleverly managed and the players show unexpected skill. A rescue scene—the one dramatic bit in the story—is also neatly handled.

Shirley Mason has done nothing better than her impersonation of the heroine. The unaffected sweetness and fine nature of the little girl are indicated by a combination of natural gifts and deft art that win the spectator from the start. It is to be hoped that Shirley Mason will be seen in more of the same line of characters. Joyce Fair is an excellent foil as the purse-proud and rather spiteful cousin, and Ray McKee gets all that is possible out of the role of the hero. Jessie Stevens, William Wadsworth, Paul Perez and the remaining members of the cast are up to the requirements.

"Her Country's Call"

Five-Part American Drama Featuring Mary Miles Minter Moderately Entertaining.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

HER COUNTRY'S CALL" has a slight patriotic ring to it, and is infinitely more professional in style than some former Minter pictures. There is still, however, a tendency to keep the star skipping through "girlie" bits, which in themselves are attractive, but which, like too much of any good thing, becomes monotonous. Miss Minter at odd moments in this picture shows what she has had little opportunity to do before, that she is able to express something more than girlish sweetness. Altogether the production makes a pleasant offering, and one that will fill the bill on a patriotic program.

As the story runs, a pretty little mountain maid living with her supposed father discovers that he has an antipathy to the militia, and in being told the reason why is ordered not to betray allegiance for the American flag. In the course of events the man, who is a moonshiner, is tracked to his cabin by revenue officers, and a shot fired at him wounds the girl, who is carried to the home of a young captain of the home guard, who afterward falls in love with her. Here she is invited to make her home with the captain and his sister while her father goes to prison. One night, piqued by the treatment she has received from neighbors and girls of the village, who have shunned her because of her father's crime, she runs away, and on her way to the old cabin overhears a plot which is being hatched by a band of Mexican raiders to gain possession of the ammunition storage. Stealing one of the horses belonging to the raiders she rides back to the village and sounds the alarm, thus saving the situation. At this point of the story a note is received by the father of the chief of her girlish persecutors to the effect that the mountain girl is his child, stolen in revenge by the mountaineer in her babyhood for a wrong inflicted on him by her father, who is a colonel in the army.

Members of the supporting cast are Alan Forest, George Periolat and Margaret Shelby.

General Film Company.

THE MYSTERY OF ROOM 422 (Kalem).—One of the several adventures of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series, which are to be released by the Kalem Company as one-reel features. The story, which is reviewed at length elsewhere, follows the search for the murderer of a woman whose body is found in room 422 of a certain hotel. An interesting and stirring release.

A DEAL IN BONDS (Kalem).—A story culled from among the "Grant, Police Reporter" series, has been used for this picture, which is one of several releases about to be made as one-reel features. The picture will be found reviewed at length elsewhere. George Larkin, as Grant, does some daring stunts which will be appreciated. The picture is an excellent one.

SELIG WORLD LIBRARY NO. 19.—An unusually interesting number containing the following subjects, which will be found reviewed in the educational department of Oct. 21: "Cabaret Entertainers of Tokio, Japan," "The Cocoanut Industry," "Ostrich Farming," illustrated, and "Jerusalem, the Holy City."

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE SPOTTED LILY, October 1.—A five-part production directed by Harry Solter and featuring Ella Hall. The production is good in spots, always clean in quality, but without the necessary "punch" to make it a strong feature. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Butterfly Pictures.

THE SECRET MAN (October 1.—A strong Western subject, written by George Hively, and directed by Jack Ford. It features Harry Carey, Edith Sterling, Elizabeth Janes and others. There is a stronger and more entertaining plot in this than is found in some Western subjects. The photography and settings are also attractive. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation.

NORTH OF FIFTY-THREE, Released September 23.—A five-reel "cave man" melodrama, in which "Roarin' Bill" (Dustin Farnum) steals the heroine and takes her to his cabin in the mountains to teach her to love him. It is not a picture to please the average woman, this reviewer believes, but it has several points in its favor, such as interesting lesser characters, good backgrounds, clear photography, etc. For a longer notice see another page of this issue.

CONSCIENCE, Sept. 30.—Allegory and present-day realism divide the interest in this five-part photoplay, which describes the life of a lady of loose morals. Gladys Brockwell has the leading part. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Goldwyn Pictures.

BABY MINE (Goldwyn).—A thoroughly delightful comedy skillfully adapted from a stage success of the same name, admirably handled and presenting an attractive star in Madge Kennedy.

Greater Vitagraph.

THE PRINCESS OF PARK ROW (Vitagraph), October 1.—Paul West is the author of this five-part photoplay, which is more amusing than convincing. An American newspaper reporter woos and wins a real live princess after risking life and limb in her father's defense. The picture is very well acted. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE STORY OF YBARRA (Vitagraph).—The second installment of the serial, "The Fighting Trail," explains the secret of the mine that John Gwyn is interested in, and tells the story of Nan's real parents. The number carries the plot along smoothly and has plenty of action. It is well acted.

WILL YAQUI JOE TELL? (Vitagraph).—The third episode of the serial, "The Fighting Trail," contains plenty of excitement and shows how faithful Yaqui Joe was to the trust imposed in him. A good installment.

PLAGUES AND PUPPYLOVE (Vitagraph).—Lawrence Semon makes most of the fun in this one-part "roughhouse" farce. The action is lively and amusing.

THE HELPING HAND (Vitagraph).—Another Bobby Connolly one-part story, it shows this clever youngster at the pleasant task of doing good to others. The picture is on a par with the rest of the series.

Ivan Productions, Inc.

WIFE IN NAME ONLY (Ivan).—A six-reel picture dealing with demented parents and general eugenic warnings. The entertainment value of it is small and it has much that is truly morbid. This reviewer found it a most painful picture to study. That it has many artistic scenes and many beautiful packgrounds is undeniable. A longer notice will be found in another part of this issue.

THE FIBBERS (Essanay), October 15.—An enjoyable comedy drama in which Bryant Washburn and Virginia Valli take the principal roles. The story holds interest to the close, where a strong climax thrills the spectator. A detailed review is given on another page, this issue.

CONQUEST PROGRAM NO. 10 (Edison), September 15.—This number is of eight reels and consists of drama, comedy, scenic and educational subjects, all of good quality. The number is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE SILENCE SELLERS, September 24.—A five-part screen version of a detective novel showing the workings of a gang of blackmailers, the picture is of fair quality. Mme. Petrova is the star. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 143 (Gaumont), September 26.—Interesting items of this number are an historic march of the American troops through the streets of the British metropolis, New York City's famous 12th off for camp, fall fashions by courtesy of Vernon-Warner, Fifth avenue, the opening of the racing at Reno, Nev., and motorcycle practice for war.

JERRY'S BIG DEAL (Cub), September 27.—One of the George Ovey comedies that is just a trifle more entertaining than the majority of Cub comedies. In this number Jerry gets away with a parson's outfit, merely by accident. Unintentionally happening at the railway station where the parson is being expected by his church members, he is given a ringing welcome, but lives to rue his part in the proceedings when the parson arrives on the scene.

REEL LIFE NO. 74 (Gaumont), September 27.—The subjects contained in this issue are "The Soldier's Staff of Life," showing how our soldiers are supplied with bread by competent bakers employed at the camps; "The Correct Time," giving a fully detailed illustration of how the correct time is calculated at the U. S. Observatory and signaled to all parts of the country; "Beans and Lady Bugs," showing how lady bugs are used to destroy insects on bean vines; "The Lamprey, a Blood-Sucking Fish," and "Making Eyeglasses."

HER COUNTRY'S CALL (American), October 1.—A Mary Miles Minter patriotic feature that is much better than some of the preceding ones in which we have seen this pretty little star. The picture shows her as a mountain maid, whose supposed father, a moonshiner, is arrested and put in jail. She is accidentally shot and taken to the home of a young captain of the home guard. When she discovers that she is despised by the neighbors because her father is a convict she runs away, and is the means of saving the ammunition storage from a raid by the Mexicans. Rushing back and blowing the bugle call, she is the means of having the troops on the ground when the Mexicans arrive. It is then discovered, through a note from the convict, that she is the daughter of one of the head military men in the town, who was stolen in revenge by the moonshiner.

SOME NURSE (Strand), October 2.—An amusing comedy in which two young men in love with the same girl, Billie Rhodes, by-the-way, try the same plan, that of getting themselves injured in front of her house, to win her. They are, of course, carried into her home, where she discovers the ruse and puts the doctor wise. What happens to the two lovers, who are put through a process of steaming and packing in ice, will amuse most audiences.

REEL LIFE NO. 75 (Gaumont), October 4.—This number of Reel Life contains the following interesting subjects: "Dogs of War," "Making Army Rifles" and "Japanese Dwarf Plants." These subjects are well illustrated.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

CAMPING (Klever), September 10.—In this Victor Moore comedy he takes his family to the country, where he pitches his tent. Various amusing incidents take place, but the climax comes when, after settling themselves comfortably in their sleeping bags, a rain storm comes on in the middle of the night, drenching them and carrying their tent away. Very funny.

THE SUNSET TRAIL (Lasky), September 17.—A strong five-reel subject, adapted by Beulah Marie Dix from a story by Alice McIver. It features Vivian Martin as a simple country girl, whose mother runs away with a city man. Later the mother invites the girl to a house party and the resulting scenes severely test the girl's strength of character. The number is excellently produced and has strong emotional appeal. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

IN BED—IN BAD (Klever), September 24.—An amusing comedy in which Victor Moore is featured. The plot of the comedy centers about an amusing situation which arises through a man's friends insisting that he is ill when he is not. A doctor is telephoned by his wife, who is told over the phone to put him to bed immediately. The doctor arrives with a nurse, who flirts with her patient until driven from the house by the wife. Kindly neighbors also call their own family doctors to diagnose the case, each differing from the other. The patient finally becomes desperate and at a consultation lays them all out, dresses himself and makes a getaway.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

FEEDING AN ARMY (Pathe-International), September 30.—Picturing the tremendous scale on which foodstuffs are provided for troops in American cantonments. Very instructive and interesting.

BY THE SAD SEA WAVES (Pathe).—On same reel with above. This is a laughable series of animated drawings featuring the original Katzenjammer Kids in various escapades. Several good laughs in this.

THE HEART OF EZRA GREER (Pathe-Thanhouser), October 7.—A five-reel number, by Lloyd Lonergan, featuring Frederick Warde, Leila Frost, George Forth and Lillian Mueller. A heart interest story, with a somewhat obvious but effective plot, which follows the fortunes of an aged butler and his daughter. The latter is wronged by a wealthy young man, but later finds happiness. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

BIRDS OF A FEATHER (Pathe), October 7.—A two-reel knockabout comedy of a highly diverting sort, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. Lonesome Luke is seen at the beginning as proprietor of a chili parlor in Hottentot Hollow. He suddenly inherits a million dollars and a big estate. His social functions in the new home bring out some very funny action. A good number of the type.

THE PAINTED SAFE (Pathe), October 7.—Episode No. 14 of "The Fatal Ring." This number contains numerous startling incidents. Carslake and Pearl are rescued from their peril under the ferryboat. Carslake then dives into the river and is thought to be drowned. But he turns up later and deposits the diamond with a loan broker. Pearl and The Spider make a sensational raid on the loan shop at night, and are caught by the police after recovering the diamond.

THE PAINTED DOLL (Pathe-Russian Art Film), October 14.—A six-reel offering of an intensely tragic sort. The cast is largely composed of Russian players and the scenes are laid in that country. This contains long explanatory subtitles, embellished by special art drawings. The story concerns a wealthy employer who wins the affections of the beautiful wife of one of his employes. The resulting tragedies are enacted in compelling fashion. This is much sterner in theme than American audiences are accustomed to, but is given excellent presentation. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 90 (Universal), September 19.—Military precautions along the Canadian boundary line, recruiting on Dry Land Battleships in Union Square, visit of Japanese Commission, scenes on the French front and numerous other topics of timely interest are included in this number.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 20 (Universal), September 29.—Many interesting topics are pictured in this number, including baseball, the Chicago dog show, motorcycle recruits in Los Angeles, and a variety of war subjects.

THE WART ON THE WIRE (Joker), Released Week of October 8.—A comic number, by Tom Gibson and C. B. Hoadley, featuring Gale Henry, William Franey and Milburne Moranti. Gale appears as Polly Piffle, who has invented a wartless pickle, and Franey, as a Sherlock Holmes detective. The action is laughable and nonsensical. This will amuse the average audience immensely.

HOT APPLICATIONS (Nestor), Released Week of October 8.—A comedy number by Frederick A. Palmer, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts. Lee dresses as a girl to help Eddie gain his inheritance. They go to a small town and conduct a beauty shop. This is entertaining in character and settings, but is not quite so strong on humor as other offerings have been. A fair subject.

THE NINTH DAY (Gold Seal), Released week of October 8.—A three-reel story of the Mexican border by Col. Jasper E. Brody. Neal Hart appears as Private Burke, and in this number wins the love of a girl and a lieutenant's commission. The chief scenes occur in and about a cavalry barracks. The story is entertaining and presented with strength. There is good suspense in the closing scenes. Others in the cast are Janet Eastman, Joe Rickson, Howard Crampton, Dick La Reno and Willard Wayne. A pleasing subject.

THE NURSE OF AN ACHING HEART (L-KO), Released Week of October 8.—An extremely laughable number of the burlesque knockabout type, featuring Eddie Barry as a gay Lothario who falls in love with a hospital nurse. His efforts to gain admission to the hospital and final success are very funny. The scenes and settings are bright and attractive, the characters are amusing and the action, while slightly rough in places, brings much laughter. A very successful offering of the type.

A PRINCE FOR A DAY (Star Featurette), Released Week of October 8.—A three-reel number featuring Lena Baskette, the child actress. In this number she plays a dual role. The picture is more a visualized fairy story than anything else. It tells how a little flower girl becomes a Prince for a while. The picture gives many charming little touches to the childhood tale and is an acceptable number. With little Miss Baskette in the cast are Fred Montague, Albert McQuarrie and Martha Mattox.

A WALLOPING TIME (Victor), Released Week of October 8.—An amusing character story, by Ruth Stonehouse, who plays the part of a young girl raised in a tenement section. Lydia Yeamans Titus does excellent work as the Irish mother, whose chief joy in life is fighting with the "wops." The party, in honor of the father's return, brings some good types to the fore. It winds up in a funny rough house. A good subject.

SAVING THE FAST MAIL (Bison), Released Week of October 8.—A two-reel railroad story by James D. Davis, featuring Helen Gibson, M. K. Wilson and others. This has brisk action in the second reel, where the girl operator rescues the hero from a runaway engine. The first part of the tale shows how the son of the manager takes a "job" as fireman and the rivalry between himself and the engineer for the girl's affections begins. The production is put on entertainingly and makes a good romance of the road.

RAINSTORMS AND BRAINSTORMS (Joker), Released Week of October 8.—An ordinary one-reel knockabout comedy number. The locale is back stage of a vaudeville theater and the usual slapstick things occur. The picture has a scant few laughs. Max Asher, Kewpie Morgan and Wadsworth Harris are among those in the cast.

Triangle Film Corporation.

ASHES OF HOPE.—Written by Thomas H. Ince, this five-part melodrama of the West is full of excitement. The heroine is a dancehall queen and is finely played by Belle Bennett. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

"Italian Battlefront" as Special Attraction

War Pictures Will Be Given Metropolitan Presentation in Every Large Center.

ACTUATED by the desire to give to the exhibitors of the entire country the advantages enjoyed by those in New York and Chicago through metropolitan presentations of special features, William Moore Patch, of the Fort Pitt Theater Company, under the direction of which the American tour of the Royal Italian Government's official war film, "The Italian Battlefront," is being conducted, has arranged to produce the picture in every big city in America, investing it with the same musical and atmospheric effects that contributed so materially to its appeal when presented at the Forty-fourth Street Theater, New York.

The production will be routed in the same manner that "The Birth of a Nation" was when it was first presented. It will carry its own scenic effects, projection machines and will have its own orchestra leaders, traveling managers, advance men and the necessary stage crews. It will play in each city at the scale of prices which prevailed in New York; namely, 25 cents to $2.00. Likewise, it will be extensively advertised, not only through the newspapers and billboards, but by means of effective direct advertising material, to be distributed through the mails.

In addition to New York, where the picture did a "turn away" business for four weeks, it has already played in Philadelphia, for three weeks; Chicago, for three weeks; Boston, for two weeks; Pittsburgh, two weeks; Buffalo, one week, and Newark, one week. Among the other cities scheduled for metropolitan showings of this production are Norfolk, Richmond, Atlanta, Birmingham, Savannah, Little Rock, New Orleans, Dallas, Houston, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Sacramento, Seattle, Spokane, Portland, Salt Like City, Denver, Des Moines, Indianapolis, Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Kansas City and Minneapolis.

After the picture has been given the publicity and prestige which accrue from such presentations, it will be distributed generally throughout the territories of which those cities are the centers. The names of the distributors will be announced as each big city is played.

Finishes "The Dead Line" and Commences on "Just Squaw," a Story of the West.

BEATRIZ MICHELENA announces from her producing headquarters at Boulder Creek, California, that she has completed all photographic work on "The Dead Line," the first of the Western features to be produced by her own company, and that activities have already commenced upon her second picture, entitled "Just Squaw." This new photodrama, so the announcement says, gets its name from one of the inserts which marks a distinct turn in the plot. It reads, "She is just squaw an' fair game." The manuscript has been prepared specially for the star by Earle Snell, author also of "The Dead Line," and is being directed by George E. Middleton.

Like "The Dead Line," "Just Squaw" is a story of the primitive West and is said to take advantage of all the possibilities offered by the most romantic era of California's history. Miss Michelena plays a halfbreed type and is supported by an unusually strong cast. William Pike plays opposite her as the vengeful son of a murdered sheriff. Andrew Robson impersonates "Snake" Le Gal, the suave ruler of "Rogues' Roost," and Albert Morrison finds strong role in a halfbreed "good-bad-man." Others in the cast are Jeff Williams, D. Mitsoras and Katherine Angus. Andrew Robson, who had been one of Miss Michelena's most notable supports in many of her past productions, and won particular distinction in such features as "Mignon," "The Unwritten Law," "The Woman Who Dared," etc., was brought out from New York specially for the particular purpose of assuming his role in the present picture.

Although all the scenes of "The Dead Line" are now photographed Miss Michelena announces that it will be at least sixty days before the sample print is shipped to New York, since much time and pains are to be given to the cutting, assembling and editing of the picture.

State Rights Department

Activities of General Enterprises, Inc.

Company Moves to Larger Quarters, Big "Warrior" Campaign for Canada—Novel Advertising Books Issued.

OWING to the extraordinary volume of business developed in the disposition of territorial privileges for "The Warrior," the seven-part film starring Maciste, A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin have announced the removal of their headquarters from the Mecca Building, Broadway and 48th street, to the Longacre Building, at 1476 Broadway, New York, where an extensive suite of offices occupying a large part of eleventh floor has been especially fitted up for the accommodation of General Enterprises, Inc. The taking over of the new offices has also been necessitated by the establishment of new departments under the direction of Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin. Chief among these is a foreign film department, under the supervision of M. R. Fink, and it is the intention of General Enterprises, Inc., to devote serious attention to this branch of the motion picture industry. A complete exploitation and advertising bureau in charge of Bert Ennis will take care of the publicity for the various interests handled by the firm. Harry C. Kosch, attorney for General Enterprises, Inc., will also have his offices in the new suite in the Longacre Building.

Globe Films, Ltd., of Toronto, Canada, which controls the Canadian privileges to "The Warrior," starring Maciste, announced this week that two road shows for the purpose of presenting the film spectacle in all of the prominent theaters of the Dominion have been organized. Under the direction of Bert Lubin, brother of Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., a traveling "Warrior" company will tour the western part of Canada, while another organization presenting the seven-part feature will cover the eastern territory. Extensive preparations for advance billing and country-wide exploitation prior to the initial presentation are now under way under the supervision of Phil Kauffman, vice-president of Globe Films, Ltd.

As an adjunct to the extensive exploitation material which has been prepared to assist the showman in the proper presentation of "The Warrior," Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., are now issuing a novel advertising booklet done in two colors with a four-page insert, setting forth the merits of the screen spectacle of the Italian battle front. The booklet also contains a resume of the newspaper and trade criticisms and deals comprehensively with the line of paper which has been made for "The Warrior" by Erie Lithograph Company. It has considerable "advertising punch" in its make-up. General Enterprises, Inc., also have in course of preparation an elaborate eight-page press book, edited by Bert Ennis. This will contain program and newspaper material; a lay-out of the available cuts, exploitation hints and complete musical setting prepared by M. Winkler.

ATHLETIC FEATURE FILM COMPANY.

Marty McHale, at one time a crack pitcher of the New York American League Baseball Club, has formed the Athletic Feature Film Co., with offices at 218 West 42d street, for the state rights sale of pictures showing famous stars of the diamond in action.

Tris Speaker, one of the foremost ball players of the age and last year the leading batsman of the American League, will appear with McHale in the first picture to be offered, which will be five reels in length.

McHale first attracted attention as a pitcher on his college team. He was signed by the Boston Red Sox and after sold for $10,000 cash to the New York Yankees. McHale was a star of the New York team for two seasons and then wrenched his back so badly that he had to give up the diamond forever.

He then formed a vaudeville combination with Mike Donlin and the pair were headliners over the Keith circuit in 1916.

RUSSIAN REVOLUTION PICTURES NOW IN EIGHT REELS.

The new pictures of the Russian Revolution and Behind the Russian Battle Lines, recently purchased from the representative of the Skobeleff Committee, who brought these official reel-records from Russia, by the New Russia Film Company, and distributed by the Overland Film Company, are now ready to be shown to the public.

After their presentation at the Rialto, New York, in spite of their success, Samuel Krellberg, president of the Overland Film Company, felt that the pictures could be even better arranged, and engaged one of the most experienced film editors and title-men in the business. From twenty-four thousand feet of film, the editor has selected the choicest material and put it into eight reels of one thousand feet each, and has managed in that short footage to tell the story of the great crisis in a masterly manner.

The pictures are being run this week at the 81st Street theater, New York, in their new arrangement, and all criticisms so far have been most favorable. The theater has put aside their entire program, as was previously done at the Rialto, in order to give them the showing that they deserve.

Mr. Berg, General Manager of the Overland organization, is starting on a trip covering all the important film centers of the country, where he will screen the picture for the various state rights buyers. In addition to this, an extensive advertising campaign is under way, which will greatly benefit both exchanges and exhibitors.

PIEDMONT CLOSES BIG DEAL.

Through Joseph Lamy, export manager of the Piedmont Pictures Corp, 729 Seventh avenue, a deal has been consummated with the Kalem Company for the sale and distribution of the "Stingaree" and "The American Girl" series by the Piedmont people. The territory to be covered by Piedmont includes the entire world outside of Europe, the United States and Canada.

The "Stingaree" and "American Girl" series are to be recut and titled and put into serial form. The demand for serial pictures from foreign markets is very strong at this time.

JOSEPH S. KLOTZ ON TOUR.

Joseph S. Klotz, of Klotz & Steimer, left New York on Friday, September 21, to stop at Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, Kansas City and Cleveland, to close for these respective territories on "Whither Thou Goest," and at the same time make arrangements for the handling of the future releases.

Mr. Klotz has closed contracts with John Kunsky Enterprises for the state of Michigan, and with Jake Wells Enterprises for North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee. Both Kunsky and Wells hold charters in the first National Exhibitors' Association.

"AUTOMANIACS."

"Automaniacs," the second of Alice Howell's Century Comedies, is being released by the Longacre Distributing Company, sole distributors of these two-reel farces. Released is scarcely the word for this particular production, for it breaks loose on the screen like a Ford with a self starter. In "Automaniacs"

Scene from "Automaniacs" (Century).

Alice Howell has a job as a cleaner in her step-father's garage; and, being in love with her co-worker, a machinist, who in turn is lured away by a vampire of the worst character, Alice tries suicide. She takes gas, inflates and floats away through the roof. Alice has a fairly poor time of it all the way through, although right finally does manage to triumph; by a hair's breadth.

HAROLD J. BINNEY COMES TO TOWN.

The President and Director General of Masterpictures Visits World Office and Tells His Plans.

HAROLD J. BINNEY, the president and director general of the Masterpictures Company, producers of the new Lion Comedies, arrived in the metropolis on Friday, September 21, after a four days' trip from Houston, accompanied by Judge Charles Taylor of the same city, who is the secretary of the Masterpictures Company and its legal representative.

Harold J. Binney.

Mr. Binney came to New York to conclude business arrangements with the A. Kay Company, who are the universal distributors of the Lion Comedies; and also to find out how his product was taking to the market.

Mr. Binney brought with him the latest Lion Comedy, entitled "The Account of a Noaccount Count." This comedy was screened for the executive staff of the A. Kay Company and met with favorable comment. The story, as the title implies, is of a bogus count who is after an heiress and her fortune. The comedy is replete with funny situations and features Nathan Dewing and Fred Bezerril, two comedians of the first magnitude.

In an interview with a representative of the World, Mr. Binney said:

"I came to New York for the purpose of closing a new contract with the A. Kay people. I also came to find out how the Lion Comedies were making out. In connection with the latter, I am glad to say that the reports are most favorable, and this is an indication that Lion Comedies are filling a long felt want in the independent field. My pictures are all of a slapstick nature, and I have found by coming in personal contact with over three thousand exhibitors that good slapstick is in great demand.

"I made an extended trip throughout the country seven months ago, just before I began to make Lion Comedies. I purposely made this trip so as to ascertain just what the exhibitor wanted for his program. Over more than three-quarters of the exhibitors I met spoke to me in favor of the slapstick comedy. They said that a new organization specializing in slapstick comedies only would be a success, if the pictures were any good. I believe what they said was right, because good slapstick has always been a success.

"So you see that there was a big demand and a good market for slapstick comedies when I entered the field about seven months ago. And when I got this positive information from the exhibitor himself I immediately formed the Masterpictures Company to make Lion Comedies.

"I have been making Lion Comedies since then, and I will continue to make them so long as there is a market for them. I am inaugurating new plans for the coming winter, and intend to make bigger and better comedies as time progresses. I am signing up several big people to take down to Houston, and I am going to make a superior slapstick release for the independent market."

STATE RIGHTING OF POPULAR PATHE PICTURES.

Following the recent announcement that the Civilization-Pioneer Film Corporation had bought the New York State Rights on Pathe's "Today," with Florence Reed, and "The Mad Love," with Robert Warwick, it is now stated that All-Star Features Distributors, Inc., of which Sol. Lesser is the head, has obtained the rights to these pictures in the states of California, Nevada and Arizona, paying a record price for this territory.

Sol Lesser is one of the best-known state rights men in the motion picture business and also has a reputation as one of the most unerring judges of box office value. He states that these two Pathe pictures should break all records in his states. He ranks these pictures very high from every commercial standpoint, and the tradepaper and newspaper reviewers have already praised them highly from that of art.

The list of pictures which the All-Star Company is exploiting in the far west includes "The Garden of Allah," "The Ne'er Do Well," "Where Are My Children?" "Civilization" and "Intolerance."

Pathe is being deluged with inquiries about "Today" and "The Mad Lover" from exhibitors and state rights men, and as fast as deals now pending are closed, announcements will be made.

Until announcements are made as to how the pictures will be handled in their particular state, it is suggested that exhibitors make inquiries direct to Pathe's New York executive offices.

INTER-OCEAN PUSHING RUSSIAN PICTURE.

M. S. Epstin, formerly with the Marcus Loew interests as a vaudeville agent, and for the past six months connected with the state right department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corp., has secured for United States and Canada an authentic set of motion pictures of the Russian Revolution, with Premier Krensky in action, entitled "Kerensky in the Russian Revolution of 1917," brought to this country a few weeks ago by a director of one of the firm companies of Petrograd.

The subject is in four reels and will be exploited for state rights by Mr. Epstin, who is leaving New York for an extended trip throughout the United States.

Gus S. Schlesinger, of the Inter-Ocean Film Corp., just returned from the Dominion of Canada, reports the sale of "Kerensky in the Russian Revolution of 1917" for the Dominion to Chas. Stevens, general manager for Super Features, Ltd. During his trip to the Dominion he spent a few days with his brothers, Richard and Mayer, who operate the Royal Alexandria theater at Lachine, Quebec.

"THE BIRTH OF DEMOCRACY."

"The Birth of Democracy," released by the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., has been given several private showings for the benefit of various critics, and in every instance the picture has been well received.

The story deals with that period of the French revolution, known as the "reign of terror," and shows the final winning of liberty through the sacrifice of the French people. The picture is a faithful reproduction of the life of that strenuous period. All the famous characters of the time are portrayed to the life; the tumbrels on the way to the guillotine, the tribunal where accusation means death, and, lastly, the portentious scenes in the Convention, depicting the fall of the tyrant Robespierre and the end of the reign of terror which had plunged all France into a bloody nightmare.

Throughout all this is entwined a love story of remarkable interest.

SALT LAKE MAN GETS "I BELIEVE."

J. L. Adams, general manager of the Deseret Film Company, with headquarters in Salt Lake City, Utah, has been in New York recently looking over the film market in the interests of his company. During his stay in town Mr. Adams spent the greater share of his time at the offices of the Cosmofotofilm Company arranging for the purchase of the exclusive rights to "I Believe," the screen adaptation of George Loane Tucker's story of the same name, for the following states: California, Nevada, Arizona, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico and Utah.

BILLY WEST UP AND DOWN.

The King-Bee Films Corp. have started their national advertising campaign. On all the elevated and subway stations a very attractive one-sheet of Billy West, their star comedian, will be found. They are spending three thousand dollars a month for one year. This advertising is being handled by the Bee-Hive exchange, who have taken over the New York and New Jersey state rights for all the Billy West comedies.

SOMBORN COMMENCES TRIP.

H. K. Somborn, general manager of the Longacre Distributing Company, has set out from New York for a two months' swing around the circle, during which he will touch at the studio, at Hollywood, Cal., and at most of the Longacre exchanges. The object of his tour is to perfect further arrangements for taking care of the rapidly increasing demand for the Alice Howell comedies, of which the Longacre people are the sole distributors.

BERNSTEIN SELLS TWO PICTURES.

Isadore Bernstein, president of the Bernstein Film Productions, announces the sale of the world rights to his two productions, "Loyalty" and "Humility." The foreign rights have been taken over by the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., and the American and Canadian rights by the H. Grossman Distributing Company.

FRANK J. WARREN IN NEW YORK.

Frank J. Warren, one of the executives of the Standard Film Corp. of Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis, Minnesota and Omaha, is a visitor to New York and is being entertained by the King-Bee Films sales manager, Nat. H. Spitzer. Mr. Warren is high in his praises of the Billy West comedies and says they are the best comedy box-office attractions that they handle.

"THE CANDY KID" NEXT KING-BEE RELEASE.

The next release of the King-Bee Films Corp. following "The Chief Cook," released October 1, will be Billy West in "The Candy Kid." In this picture President Burnstein has his daughter Naomi playing an important part.

ELK PHOTO PLAYS, INC.

B. H. Mills has incorporated in New York State under the name of the Elk Photo Plays, Inc., to handle state right productions. The offices of the concern are located at 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

PIEDMONT'S BRIGHT PROSPECTS.

The Piedmont Pictures Corporation report an auspicious opening of the fall season. The latest three Ivan films shipped to Brazil, "Married in Name Only," "Babbling Tongues" and "One Law for Both," are reported to have met with great success. Several Ivan productions have been placed this week for the Pacific Coast, of South America and the Philippines.

The coming production of Ivan Abramson, "Sins of Ambition," has already been conceded in several territories on the strength of the success of the previous Ivan productions.

The Ed. Warren production, "Warfare of the Flesh" or "Souls Redeemed," is in big demand.

The serial, "Jimmie Dale," has met with appreciation everywhere, and several very complimentary reports have been received by its producer, the Monmouth Film Corporation.

"Mysteries of Myra" has been placed for another Latin-American country.

The Essanay serial, "The Strange Case of Mary Page," has been closed for a Far Eastern territory.

The Essanay Max Linder comedies have been placed in the West Indies.

The Rex Beach production, "The Barrier," is closed for a West Indian territory.

The Paragon production, "The Whip," is closed for India.

The Warner production, "Are Passions Inherited," is closed for a Far Eastern territory.

The Fox production, "The Daughter of the Gods," has been closed for India, Burma, Ceylon, Straits Settlements, Dutch East India, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

Thanhouser-Pathe Gold Rooster and Thanhouser-Mutual features proved to be a big drawing character all over South America and the Far East.

OVERLAND FILM CO. SECURES BARBARA CASTLETON.

Harry Berg, of the Overland Film Company, is preparing to place several excellent releases on the market. He has just secured a two-year contract with Barbara Castleton, who will appear in forthcoming Berg productions

In a recent interview at his office, at 729 Seventh avenue, Mr. Berg spoke of his plans for the coming season:

"My idea in forming this new company is to produce all our pictures up to a certain standard; that is, so that they answer the qualifications of a real state rights production. For this reason, I have selected a star of Miss Castleton's popularity. She has an excellent record in the motion picture field, and has played in many notable successes. George Sheer will personally supervise every feature that we turn out, which eliminates any doubt as to finish and care in production. A company has been selected which will render Miss Castleton the support that her work deserves, so that from the point of view of acting nothing will be left to be desired.

"In a short time we will be in a position to make a definite announcement as to the date and names of Miss Castleton's releases."

Mr. Berg has already started on a tour of the film centres of the country in the interests of the Overland Company, where he will screen the productions of the company for the various state rights buyers, and develop the various territories for the coming Berg releases.

SHORT FEATURES GET OFFICIAL WOMAN SUFFRAGE PICTURES.

The Short Features exchange, whose offices are now located on the sixth floor of the Godfrey Building, has acquired from the New York State Woman Suffrage League their official pictures, which are to be used in connection with their campaign in the coming election. The pictures, which are one thousand feet in length, tell a story in a most unique way of what the woman does in war times, showing the woman at work in the fields, in the factories, in the home, in the Red Cross service, and in nearly every branch of endeavor. The pictures wind up with several scenes of a patriotic nature to prove the contention that women are as patriotic as men.

The pictures serve as a treatise on Woman Suffrage, and cover that subject most completely. Through this medium the Woman Suffrage Party endeavors to convince the public that they are worthy of the vote in the Empire state.

Henry Ginsberg, manager of the Short Features exchange, reports that he has booked the pictures in twenty-five houses of the Marcus Loew circuit for an extended run. Other bookings indicate that the picture is going big.

"MOTHER" OFFERED STATE RIGHTS BUYERS.

The film of "Mother," produced in England, amidst the beautiful scenery of the Dartmoor section—the country of "Lorna Doone" and "Westward Ho"—has been secured by McClure Pictures and will be offered by this company on a state rights basis.

Elizabeth Risdon, who makes her appearance this week on the American stage as leading lady in William Faversham's production of Shaw's play, "Misalliance," and who starred in Mr. Tucker's production of "The Manx-Man," plays the title part in "Mother."

The film is a rendering of Eden Philpott's novel, "A Mother of Dartmoor," and the story deals with the influence a mother's love has over her wild, headstrong son.

MAJOR FILM GETS "THE LITTLE MOTHER" FOR NEW ENGLAND.

The Ultra Films, Inc., through General Manager Jacques Kopfstien, have disposed of "The Little Mother," featuring little Emma Gorman, to the Major Film Company for the territory embracing Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut. The deal was closed the early part of last week in Boston.

The Major Film Company, which is well known in Boston, is one of the livest exchanges in the New England states. It is known as a quality exchange because it only exploits pictures of quality. And in securing only quality pictures, the Major Film Company displayed sound judgment in getting for the exclusive New England territory "The Little Mother."

The picture was recently screened for several exhibitors in Boston, and bookings for many days were immediately secured. In Providence, the Martin theater, one of the finest theaters in that town, was booked for a week's run, while in many other towns other bookings from a week to three days were secured.

KOPFSTEIN GOING STRONG.

Jacques Kopfstein, general manager of Ultra Films, Inc., reports the following sales:

The Cnristie comedies for Argentine, Uruguay and Chile to the Sociedad General Cinemetografica, of which Leroy Garfinkle is the American representative.

The New England rights to the Pioneer Film Producton entitled, "The Little Mother," to the Major Film Company of Boston.

The Horsley feature productions for Argentine, Uruguay and Chile to the Sociedad General Cinemetografica.

The feature productions of the Van Dyke Film Company for Argentine, Uruguay and Chile to the North American Motion Pictures.

Mr. Kopfstein has arranged to distribute through the Ultra Films, Inc., the five-reel feature entitled, "The International Spy." This production features Neva Gerber, star of the Universal series success, "The Voice on the Wire."

PARENTAGE SOLD FOR AUSTRALASIA AND SOUTH AFRICA.

From Frank J. Seng's office in the Times Building comes the announcement that "Parentage" has been acquired for Australasia by J. C. Williamson, Ltd., for a price said to be one of the largest ever paid for any feature that has gone into this territory.

The deal was consummated a few days ago and the prints are now on their way to Australia.

Almost simultaneously with the announcement that Australasia had been closed out, Mr. Seng's organization, through its foreign representative, Miss Edna Williams, also concluded negotiations with Louis Brock, of the Inter Ocean Film Corp., to take "Parentage" for South Africa.

The J. C. Williamson, Ltd., purchase was negotiated through Sanger & Jordan, and the prints were inspected by B. F. Howells.

ENTIRE FOREIGN TERRITORY SOLD ON "THE LUST OF THE AGES."

Charles E. Carlton, president of the Crest Pictures Corporation, and Jesse J. Goldburg, of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, closed a contract late Thursday night, September 27, whereby the entire foreign rights to "The Lust of the Ages," the initial production of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, starring Lillian Walker, and the remaining eight releases of the Ogden Corporation to be made during the next twelve months, were sold to the Crest Corporation.

CHADWICK TO SUPERVISE MERIT FILM CORP.

The scope of the operations of the Merit Film Corporation for the coming year will be greatly enlarged. I. E. Chadwick, General Manager of the Ivan Film Productions, will supervise the management of the exchange, which will be conducted by Mr. Willis, who for some time has been the manager of the Boston branch of the Merit Film Company.

All Ivan releases, both regular and special, will be exploited by the Merit Film Corporation. Moreover, there are some special deals pending for exceptional productions of other companies, which will be concluded in time for the fall season

BUYS "LUST OF AGES" FOR GREATER NEW YORK.

Harry Samwick, on behalf of the Producers Feature Service, has purchased the rights to "The Lust of the Ages," the first Lillian Walker release of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, for Greater New York, Long Island and Westchester County. Mr. Samwick intends to exploit this production as an extraordinary attraction and has contracted for a full showing of twenty-four sheet stands in New York and Brooklyn.

U. S. AND WORLD RIGHTS OF "LORELEI OF THE SEA" SOLD TO RANKIN.

M. Phillip Hansen, of the Marine Film Company, on Monday, September 24, closed negotiations whereby he disposed of the United States and world's rights of "Lorelei of the Sea" to Charles Rankin, of Suite 705, 729 Seventh avenue.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Laughs and Thrills in Big U Program

Five Rattling Good Comedies and Two Dramas of Action on Forthcoming Schedule for Week of October 9.

NEAL HART, one of the most likable of the virile school of western actors, is the star of the Gold Seal drama, heading Universal's regular schedule of releases for the week of October 8. "The Ninth Day" is the title of the military play in which Hart will make his appearance. It is from the story by Colonel Jasper Ewing Brady, picturized by Karl Coolidge. George Marshall directed the production, which deals with life at any army post on the Mexican border. Jerry Burke, a humble cavalryman, is in love with Lucy Ashton, the daughter of the storekeeper at the post, and incidentally the prettiest girl for miles around. His rivals are Lieut. Standing and Manual Cespedes, a Mexican, who, under guise of filling some legitimate job about the post, is really interested in shipping contraband arms and ammunition to his turbulent brothers across the border. The manner in which Jerry becomes implicated in Cespedes' nefarious schemes, and thereby comes within an ace of being declared a deserter from the army, besides losing the heroine, furnishes the tense moments in a plot of decided interest. Neal Hart is supported by Janet Eastman and other capable players.

"Hot Applications" is the title of the Nestor Comedy in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will be featured Tuesday, October 9. Written by the two principal funmakers, scenarioized by Fred Palmer, and produced by Roy Clements, this is the most hilarious farce in which Universal's favorite comedy team have been seen in many moons. Edith Roberts and Fred Gamble also have prominent parts in the funmaking.

Wednesday, October 10, is L-Ko Comedy Day, as usual, signalized on this occasion by the release of an unconventional but highly diverting commentary upon the medical profession, subtitled, "The Nurse of an Aching Heart." Eddie Barry, Bob MacKenzie, Eva Novak and Chester Ryckman furnish most of the merriment. Archie Mayo and J. G. Blystone are credited with the direction, which is in the traditional L-Ko manner. The 93d issue of the Animated Weekly will also make its appearance on the same date, containing a pictorial record of the most interesting news events of the week.

Lena Baskette, the ten-year-old dancing prodigy, will be the star of "A Prince for a Day," the tabloid feature released Thursday, October 11. In the story written by J. B. Shillingford and prepared for the screen by Nan Blair, Lena takes a dual role, and puts over two distinct characterizations which show her versatility as a dramatic artist. Fred Montague, Allan MacQuarrie and Nigel Debruiller are prominent in the cast. "The Wart on the Wire," a burlesque of Universal's popular serial thriller, "The Voice on the Wire," will be released at the same time, featuring Gale Henry and William Franey.

Ruth Stonehouse and Harry Mann are the featured players of the Victor comedy scheduled for release Friday, October 12. Their joint vehicle has the significant title of "A Walloping Time." Both story and production are credited to Miss Stonehouse. The 40th issue of the Universal Screen Magazine bears the same release date, and will contain among other features the travels of a check, from the time it is written out until it finally comes back canceled, a pictorial record of the making of maple syrup, and a series of interesting pictures of dress creation done on the instant by Madame Haverstick with Mlle. Desiree Lukowska, the Russian dancer, as her model.

Helen Gibson, the athletic railroad heroine, is the star of the Bison drama which will be shown Saturday, October 13. "Saving the Fast Mail" is the title of the play in which Miss Gibson will make her latest appearance. Written and produced by James D. Davis, this swiftly moving story of adventure by rail has both dramatic punch and effective character work by its principals. "Rainstorms and Brainstorms," a Joker comedy, featuring Max Asher and Gladys Tennyson, will also be released on that date. R. A. Dillon and Craig Hutchinson are responsible for story and production. The 22nd issue of Current Events, featuring up-to-the-minute happenings, concludes the week's regular list of releases. In addition, the concluding episode of "The Gray Ghost," Arthur Somers Roche's mystery serial, taken from his Saturday Evening Post serial, "Loot," will be released for exhibition outside Greater New York.

FOURTH SERIES OF JAXON COMEDIES.

The new series of Jaxon comedies, just completed by the Jaxon Film Corporation, for release through General Film Company, are by far the best yet put out by this company. The new series consists of six new subjects in which clean, rollicking humor is offered by Pokes and Jabs. The subjects in the latest series are: "From Bad to Worse," "A Day Off," "How It Happened," "Too Much Alike," "Barnyard Frolics" and "Breaking In."

Triangle Working On Many Plays

Eight Productions Are Under Way and Seven Have Just Been Completed.

EIGHT productions are in progress, seven have just been completed, and the scenario department is working on scripts for a score of others at the Culver City plant of the Triangle Film Corporation. At present in the cutting room and soon to be released are "Ashes of Hope," featuring Belle Bennett, under the direction of Walter Edwards; "A Phantom Husband," starring Ruth Stonehouse, directed by Ferris Hartman; "One Shot Ross," featuring Roy Stewart, under the direction of Cliff Smith; "Wild Sumac," with Margery Wilson and Director William V. Mong; "The Firefly of Tough Luck," starring Alma Ruebens, under the direction of E. Mason Hopper, and "The Stainless Barrier," with Dorcas Matthews, directed by Thomas Heffron.

The most elaborate production of those now occupying the seven big glass and concrete stages at the Culver City plant and the 1,800-acre ranch at Hartville, in the Santa Monica mountains, is "Doing Her Bit," in which Ruth Stonehouse plays the leading role and Jack Conway wields the megaphone. This play was written by H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of Triangle, and centers about the adventures of a girl of the New York tenement district who undertakes to recruit all the bums in the Bowery to the cause of Old Glory. An entire block of New York's East Side was reproduced at the Triangle studio to form the principal setting for the piece and hundreds of picturesque types and characters were selected to furnish the atmosphere. Jack Gilbert plays the leading male role opposite Miss Stonehouse.

William Desmond is given an opportunity to interpret a part in "The Strange Weakling," far removed from his familiar work as a matinee idol. His countenance is now decorated with a beard.

Texas Guinan shares stellar honors with Belle Bennett in a new type of "vampire" piece which Walter Edwards is preparing for the screen. It is entitled "The Fuel of Life," and throbs with the emotions of a wife who turns siren to win her husband away from the wiles of a modern vampire whose rare business acumen and spectacular beauty have stolen his love.

Lynn Reynolds promises that "Up or Down?" a production for which he has searched California for scenic splendors, will be a masterpiece of its kind. Thousands of feet of marine views and ocean action were taken at Santa Barbara. George Hernandez is playing the leading role and is supported by Fritzie Ridgway and Jack Curtis.

With burning incense, leopard skin rugs, downy couches, filmy draperies and all the other accoutrements of an up-to-date vampire, Olive Thomas is luring George Chesebro to his doom in "Frankly Chaste," with director Jack Dillon in command.

Three other pictures just begun are "External Circumstances," featuring Charles Gunn, under the direction of Ferris Hartman; "Guardian of El Dorado," with Roy Stewart, under the direction of Cliff Smith; "Blue Blood;" featuring Alma Ruebens, under the direction of E. Mason Hopper.

BRYANT WASHBURN IN "THE FIBBERS."

Bryant Washburn's new comedy-drama, "The Fibbers," will be released by Essanay October 15 on the Perfection Picture program. Trade showings of the five-part picture are now in progress at George Kleine's branch offices.

"The Fibbers" is announced as another typical Washburn production, presenting the star in the same subtly humorous type of characterization which made the Skinner pictures famous. Virginia Valli, who has been seen with Mr. Washburn in numerous of his former productions, and also enacted the leading feminine role in Taylor Holmes' initial production, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," played the woman's lead in "The Fibbers." The picture has a screen time of sixty-four minutes.

"THE TROUBLE BUSTER" RELEASED OCT. 8.

Once more, in "The Trouble Buster," released October 8, winsome Vivian Martin will appear as a waif of the streets, a variety of characterizations to which she has brought much original talent. This Paramount picture was directed by Frank Reicher, and is the joint effort of Tom Forman, himself a Paramount actor, and Gardner Hunting, who wrote the scenario.

The story of "The Trouble Buster" narrates the experiences of a Roumanian girl left alone in America when her father dies.

Among the players are James Neill, Paul Willis, Charles West, Louise Harris, Mary Mersch and Vera Lewis.

"FIGHTING ODDS" (Goldwyn).

Without actually setting out to do so, Arthur Hopkins and Hugo Ballin have provided an object lesson in scene setting in "Fighting Odds," a Goldwyn production starring Maxine Elliott, which motion picture producers everywhere might well take account of.

The scenario of "Fighting Odds" calls for a score of scenes in the home of a very wealthy man. In ordinary motion pictures such scenes presuppose at least one replica of Winged Victory, two of the Venus de Milo and upward of half a dozen other department store favorites cast in plaster and set about here and there in spaces not occupied by jardiniers or writing desks.

Scene from "Fighting Odds" (Goldwyn).

Imagine, then, what iconoclastic spirits must have evolved a boudoir in which there are but four pieces of furniture, one lamp and two rugs. In the Roi Cooper Megrue-Irvin S. Cobb photoplay Miss Elliott, as the rich man's wife, takes her morning chocolate on a chaise lounge set against drapery of silk velvet and an unassuming gray and supplemented only by a chair, a curious flat stool and a tiny, long-legged table for the lamp at the head of the couch. There is nothing more in the room.

Similar taste is even more unusually developed in the room adjoining the boudoir—a sort of intimate reception chamber for especially honored callers. Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Ballin endowed Miss Elliott, as the wife of a millionaire, with an inclination for odd Oriental furnishings which resulted in the installation of a set frankly bizarre, yet chaste.

"THE CLIMBER" (Falcon-G. F.)

It is not often that a hero climbs back into society through the ropes of the prize ring, but Henry King, as William Beerdheim Van Broon, does so in "The Climber," the current Falcon feature released through General Film. The story of how the engaging young chap does it makes this one of the most entertaining stories of the Falcon series. For gripping action and a swiftly moving plot this picture is fully the equal of the six that have preceded it.

"The Climber" is founded on the story by George Foxhall.

Scene from "The Climber" (Falcon).

Henry King is particularly good as the hard-hitting, dashing Van Broon, and he is ably supported by a strong cast, which includes Lucille Pietz as Eva Crosby and Bert Ensminger, Bruce Smith, Leah Gibs, Arma Carlton, Mollie McConnell and Ruth Lackaye. Mr. King performs the double role of star and director admirably, under the supervision of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

The next Falcon feature from General Film will be "The Understudy," a fascinating picture founded upon the story by Leigh Gordon Giltner. Ethel Ritchie and Neil Hardin are featured.

NOVELTY IN "THE SPREADING DAWN."

The reputation for springing screen novelties acquired by Goldwyn Productions through the unusual settings given "The Eternal Magdalene," under the direction of Arthur Hopkins, bids fair to be sustained by another departure in the handling of Jane Cowl's first Goldwyn starring vehicle, "The Spreading Dawn."

This play, adapted from the story by Basil King and directed by Larry Trimble, is really the dramatization of a diary presumably kept by a New York society belle of the sixties. The action follows this diary through, page by page, from cover to cover. The familiar expedient of the "fade-out" has been used, of course, to show first the written page and then the story it tells brought to life; but it is used consistently from beginning to end in a manner that is distinctly new.

BIRDMEN LOOK DOWN ON CLEOPATRA.

The contrast between the world of today and the world of two thousand years ago, between the fighting of today when the machine counts and that of two thousand years ago when the man counted, was brought home in a strikingly dramatic fashion a short time since to those concerned in the making of the Theda Bara superpicture, "Cleopatra." While the ships of the Roman and of the Egyptian hosts were reenacting the great battle of Actium, the most important naval conflict of the time, the hundreds of watchers on shore were held spellbound by the sight of a flock of army aeroplanes circling high above the wooden vessels beneath.

The scene was being filmed at Balboa, in Southern California, and the romance of this unusually effective presentation of the ancient and the modern made the spectators quiet and reflective. Director J. Gordon Edwards, in charge of the screening of "Cleopatra," called time that the players might gaze skyward from the bosom of Newport Bay, emptying into the Pacific, upon which they rested.

About fifteen birdmen from the United States Government's Aviation Training Camp at San Diego, sixty miles away, were on a long distance flight. Their course took them directly over the struggling soldier-sailors of Cleopatra and Octavius Caesar.

MOORE RAPS COST OF BEEF.

Taking liberties with Mother Goose, Victor Moore has made use of the phrase "The Cow Jumped Over the Moon" as the title of his latest Klever Komedy, which will be released by Paramount October 14. It deals with the soaring price of beef. The cow has, figuratively speaking, jumped over the moon, and this is discovered by the householder, depicted by Mr. Moore, when a bill for an unconscionable sum arrives from the butcher. He obtains one of those anatomical charts showing the locations of the various "cuts" on a beef and buys a cow, which he marks in a similar manner. His scheme is to lead the bovine to the butchershop and point out the piece of meat he wants. This leads to disaster and the cow returns to the fold while Vic goes home a sadder and a poorer man.

RAY'S PARAMOUNT DEBUT OCTOBER 29.

"The Son of His Father," in which Charles Ray, the Thomas H. Ince star, will make his Paramount debut, is scheduled for release October 22. His second film, "His Mother's Boy," will be released later in the year. The appearance of Ray under the Paramount banner is an event that has been awaited with much interest by both exhibitors and their patrons. Few of the younger stars have been accorded the attention from the screen public that has fallen to the lot of Ray. "The Son of His Father" was directed by Victor Schertzinger and was adapted from the novel by Ridgwell Cullum. Vola Vale plays the feminine lead.

NEWS AND HUMAN INTEREST IN LATEST ANIMATED.

Keen discrimination for subjects of real news interest in which the human elements have been skillfully featured is shown in the 90th issue of Universal's Animated Weekly, just released. General Petain, "the hero of Verdun," and King Albert and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium are three of the interesting personalities given prominence in this release. By special permission of the French War Office, the Universal cameraman recently accompanied General Petain to the fighting front, and there secured some views of the most democratic of European military leaders during the course of an interesting day's work.

Of even greater note are the scenes in which the exiled King and Queen of Flanders figure, as they are shown donning aero garb and setting off on a flight from a French aero station to view adjacent portions of their ravaged kingdom. An armored scout plane accompanies them. This is in many respects the most unusual set of news pictures the Animated Weekly has carried in weeks.

American scenes are also well represented with pictures of the departure of the 12th New York National Guard for France, via Spartanburg, S. C.; the carnival recently held to mark the official closing of Coney Island for the season, in which soldiers, sailors, marines, civilians and pretty girls all vied for attention with one of the gayest parades of floats that has ever passed down the famous midway by the sea; and scenes taken at Niagara Falls, showing how the great International Bridge between the United States and Canada is being guarded night and day by details of "Tommies" and "Sammies," who hobnob in the most neighborly fashion as they go about their co-operative duties.

WILLIAM FARNUM IN OLD ROLE.

"When a Man Sees Red," William Fox's stirring drama, presents William Farnum in another of the blue-shirted, sturdy fighting roles for which he has become famous. The play will mark Mr. Farnum's first appearance in such a part in a year. The last subject of this kind in which he starred was "Fires of Conscience."

Mr. Farnum is seen as a sailor cast adrift in the South Sea Islands. The story of "When a Man Sees Red" is founded on Larry Evan's "The Painted Lady." Jewel Carmen, who plays opposite Mr. Farnum in "The Conqueror," appears in a similar capacity in the new picture.

VIOLET MACMILLAN IN "THE GIRL WHO WON OUT."

Violet MacMillan is the star of the Butterfly feature scheduled for release Oct. 8. "The Girl Who Won Out" is the title of her vehicle. This is a gripping little sociological drama, written by Judge Willis Brown, the well known juvenile court judge of Salt Lake City, and picturized by C. J. Wilson, Jr.

It details the struggles of Nancy Grimm, a waif of city, to retain control of her baby sister, when both children are left orphans. The representatives of the Children's Aid Society does not think it worth while to bother with Nancy's wishes in the matter, however, and the baby is calmly handed over to a wealthy family for adoption. Nancy herself is placed in the home maintained by the society.

The girl runs away, and cutting off her hair, makes a living as newsboy and messenger about town, until opportunity arises for her to kidnap the baby.

This leads to a series of exciting situations in which Nancy is forced to rely upon her wits to keep out of the clutches of the law. But finally, through the intercession of a sympathetic young lawyer, to whom she confesses her troubles, Nancy's tangled affairs are straightened out. The human element is strongly brought out in this production, and some excellent character types are contributed by Mrs. A. E. Witting, Charles Hill Mailes, L. M. Wells and Sherman Bainbridge. Eugene Moore is credited with the direction.

Scene from "The Girl Who Won Out" (Butterfly).

"THE CO-RESPONDENT" PRESENTED BY JEWEL.

Elaine Hammerstein, young star of Advanced Motion Pictures, on October 5 will make a flying trip to New York, from Andersonville, N. C., Blue Gap Mountains, where she is working with Ralph W. Ince, to be present at the premiere at the Broadway Theater, on October 7, of the Ralph W. Ince production "The Co-respondent," in which Jewel Productions, Inc., presents her in the title role. She will return to Andersonville the following day to complete work on her second Advanced feature. While in the city Miss Hammerstein will be the guest of Jewel Productions, Inc., whose invitation she has accepted to come to New York for the day.

"The Co-respondent," the first of Advanced Motion Picture offerings, was purchased from Lee Shubert, Arthur Hammerstein and Ralph W. Ince last week by Jewel Productions, Inc. It is adapted from the stage success of the same name by Rita Weiman and Alice Leal Pollack. Irene Fenwick brought it to the Booth Theater two years ago and it proved one of the successes of the season. Wilfred Lucas plays opposite Miss Hammerstein and the cast includes George Anderson, Robert Cain, Richard Neill, Winifred Harris, Josephine Morse, Hattie Horne, Jennie Mayo, Charles Smith and others.

"YOUNG MOTHER HUBBARD" (Essanay).

A travesty on Old Mother Hubbard, of the nursery rhyme, "who went to the cupboard to get her poor dog a bone," has been made into a five-part comedy drama by Essanay for its six-year-old star, Little Mary McAlister.

The picture sets forth, in treatment of the lightest vein, the theory that times have changed but little since Old Mother Hubbard's time. And, while her cupboard was bare and her poor dog had to go boneless then, the high cost of living in the present day would enable them to fare no better now.

The picture is entitled "Young Mother Hubbard," and it will be released on the Perfection Pictures program October 29. Its diminutive star's recent productions are reported to have met with considerable success. Among them are "Pants," the series of child plays, "Do Children Count?" and the super-feature, "On Trial," which is being shown over the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"Young Mother Hubbard" presents Little Mary in the role of an impoverished child whose renegade parents have deserted her. Undaunted by the terrors of her plight, the child "adopts" a baby she finds on a doorstep and starts "housekeeping" in a drygoods box. Forthwith child welfare workers of the type that neglect their own homes in order to pry into others seek to interfere. How Mary successfully battles them off, with the aid of her dog, "Bobo," and eventually wins happiness and love completes the picture story. Throughout it runs the humorous comparison between the two Mother Hubbards, young and old, and their poor dogs.

"Young Mother Hubbard" will have a screen time approximately of sixty-five minutes.

FIRST SHOWING OF THEDA BARA IN "CAMILLE."

The first showing of the first Theda Bara Superpicture, "Camille," was made on September 30, when the pretentious production of Alexander Dumas' famous novel was presented at the Academy of Music. J. Gordon Edwards was the director and the supporting company has been scrupulously selected.

The picture is described as a "masterpiece of films from a masterpiece of fiction." "Camille" has been famous as a novel, a play and an opera for fifty years. The greatest actresses of the legitimate stage have all sought the role because of its histrionic possibilities. Miss Bara's impersonation of the woman rebelling against the narrowness of convention is particularly suited to her emotional qualities. Mr. Fox has invested the picture with an especially fine setting.

Pathe Program

Schedule for Week of October 14 Comprises Nineteen Reels in Combination of Serials, Features and Single Reel.

THE Pathe program for the week of October 14 is the biggest ever released by this company and probably by any other. It contains nineteen reels made up of the first of the big new Pathe Plays, a powerful five-reel Gold Rooster play, two strong serial episodes, a one-reel Harold Lloyd comedy, and the usual short reel releases, including the Pathe News.

The box office stars appearing on this program are Mrs. Vernon Castle, Emmy Lynn, Mollie King, Pearl White and Harold Lloyd.

Mrs. Vernon Castle appears in "Stranded in Arcady," a five-reel Pathe Plays special produced by Astra, written by Francis Lynde, scenario by Philip Bartholamae, directed by Frank Crane.

This is the first of the Castle features, and it also marks the first release under Pathe's new feature policy. The name Pathe Plays means a big picture in every branch—stars, story, direction, production, support, advertising.

"Stranded in Arcady" is a thrilling story of the great outdoors, with a number of punches and a splendid cast, including Elliott Dexter and Pell Truiton.

"The Torture of Silence" is a drama of startling intensity in five reels. Emmy Lynn, who plays the central character in this picture, will cause a sensation. She is startlingly beautiful, wonderful as a woman and as an actress. With each situation more powerful than the one that preceded it, this picture is expected to score a sensational success.

Mollie King is seen in the first episode of the "Seven Pearls," with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, produced in two reels by Astra.

In this chapter Mollie King as Ilma and Creighton Hale as Harry Drake are imprisoned in a water-tight room which Perry Mason, the villain, uses for experiments on models of submarines. Mason turns the water on and leaves the two to drown. Upstairs he piles the furniture together, opens several of the hydrogen tanks and fires them. Imprisoned in their watery trap, with the house burning over their heads, their destruction seems certain.

Pearl White appears in the fifteenth episode of "The Fatal Ring," produced in two reels by Astra under the direction of George B. Seitz, story by Fred Jackson, scenario by Bertram Millhauser.

This episode has a thrilling automobile chase, in which one car is dashed over a cliff. Carslake and his henchmen push a great boulder over the cliff and it is only by a hair's breadth that Pearl and Tom escape.

"Biaritz, the Fashionable," and "Warblers of France" make up a Pathe colored, split-reel scenic and educational.

Harold Lloyd appears in "Bliss," one-reel comedy produced by Rolin. This is a very fast moving comedy, with Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. It is all about a count that turns out to be a counterfeit, and it packs a laugh a foot.

An International cartoon and scenic, split-reel, and Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 84 and 85 complete this very big program.

"THE MAN TRAP" (Bluebird).

The success attained by Herbert Rawlinson in presenting the speedy "crook" character in "Come Through" determined Bluebird to present him in another play of a similar nature, especially written by Waldemar Young and produced by Elmer Clifton. "The Man Trap" is the title, and the release date will be Oct. 29.

Scene from "The Man Trap" (Bluebird).

In the unfolding story there is a combination of mystery and surprise, with sensational developments accumulating until the last few feet of film, when the "trick" is turned in a manner to entirely baffle the "plot detectives." An amazing escape from prison, followed by a sensational but fruitless chase; an automobile accident that is sure to astound beholders, and a series of police activities, including ferocious "third degrees," are depended upon to furnish thrills along "sure fire" lines with a "surprise" to cap the climax.

Ruby La Fayette, the lovable old lady, who scored in Bluebird's "Mother O' Mine," has an equally sympathetic role in "The Man Trap," and Sally Starr, new to phot playing, will be introduced as Rawlinson's leading lady. Hal Wilson, Frank McQuarrie, Mark Fenton and Jack Nelson will have important roles.

Ade Fables Well Advanced

New Essanay Short Length Comedies Meeting High Popularity with Eighth Release.

AN advanced mark has been reached in the production of the new series of Essanay-Ade Fables in Slang, which are being distributed by General Film, announcement having been made this week of the completion of the eighth subject. The eighth picture of this series of box-office aids is "The Film-Fed Family."

Exhibitors from all parts of the country are finding that it pays to feature these two-reel attractions, reports General Film, and many are giving them the place of honor in their advertising and publicity campaigns. There no longer is any doubt but that the present Ade comedies will be even more popular than the one-reel series released in 1916, even though the latter established what was then regarded as the high-water mark in popularity.

The first eight subjects of this series and the principal featured players are as follows: "The Twelve-Cylinder Speed of the Leisure Class," George Bean and Frankie Raymond; "The Wandering Boy and the Wayward Parents," Rodney LaRock; "What Transpires After the Wind-Up," Rodney LaRock; "The Fable of the Speedy Sprite," Virginia Valli; "Prince Fortunatus, Who Moved Away from Easy Street, and Silas the Saver, Who Moved In," R. Paul Harvey, U. K. Houpt, Katherine Amos and John Cossar; "All That Triangle Stuff as Sized Up by the Meal Ticket" and "The Film-Fed Family."

TWO HAROLD LLOYD COMEDIES COMING.

One of the best "Lonesome Luke" comedies that has yet been released is "Birds of a Feather," which Pathe announces for the week of October 7. It is said to be a two-reel skit made up of many original and highly amusing pranks in which Harold Lloyd, "Snub" Pollard and Bebe Daniels live up to the reputation which they have acquired of being an unexcelled comedy cast.

"Birds of a Feather" shows Harold Lloyd as joint partner in a hot dog emporium in a seaside resort. As a dispenser of viands of doubtful nourishment he is in a class by himself. Fortune seems a million miles away when all of a sudden it drives up in a big limousine in the person of a lawyer who announces that the king of hot dogs has been left a million dollars and what is more he gives Luke a bale of cash to prove it. Luke takes one grab at the kale and then beats it. We next see him as lord and master of a fine mansion with servants galore. His manner is exceedingly funny as he learns the ropes. Soon, however, he tires of the fine persons who frequent his house and sighs for "Snub," his partner of the hot dog shop, and Bebe, formerly his best Sunday girl. Soon we see him at a reception at Luke's house. Needless to say, that reception is a riot.

Harold Lloyd and the Rolin crew of funmakers is also on the Pathe program of October 14 in a one-reel farce entitled "Bliss." In this comedy Lloyd plays the part of a very much impoverished individual who is exceedingly anxious to get invited to dinner at the house of the girl whom he most admires, but who lacks not only the entree but also the full evening scenery. By a funny subterfuge he hires a "dress suit," in the pocket of which he finds a card belonging to the former owner, a count. By the use of this card he gains admittance to the girl's house and after he gets in further use of the card prevents him from being kicked out. As the "count" he is a riot, and though his table manners leave much to be desired his title covers a multitude of sins. He finally works it so the title mad father of the girl aids and abets him in eloping with the daughter, and what is more, gives him a lot of money in the bargain.

The many exhibitors who are showing these comedies with much success will find "Birds of a Feather" and "Bliss" worthy of a place in the very front rank of rough and tumble comedies.

FOUR OCTOBER "O. HENRY'S."

Four of the richest and most delightful of the O. Henry series produced by Broadway Star Features for distribution by General Film are scheduled for release during October, insuring to exhibitors the cream of this series of box-office attractions. The October releases, in which two and four-reel subjects alternate, are "The Lonesome Road," two reels; "The Indian Summer of Dry Valley Johnson," four reels; "The Enchanted Kiss," two reels, and "A Night in New Arabia," four reels. These pictures are replete with the keen and delicate humor, surprising twists and denouements such as only an O. Henry could contrive, and are certain to find a warm spot in the hearts of fandom. Three of these subjects deal more or less with the west, and one is laid in New York, or, as the author calls it, "Bagdad-on-the-Subway." This is "A Night in New Arabia." Martin Justice has given to "Dry Valley Johnson" some of the most able work he has done yet as a director of O. Henry stories. For the two-reelers in the west Director Dave Smith has taken great pains to provide typical O. Henry locations and atmosphere. Thomas Mills' work as director in "A Night in New Arabia" is of the same high order.

A CHRISTMAS PARTY IN SEPTEMBER.

Intent upon outdoing the timeworn procedure of doing one's Christmas shopping early, Mary Pickford introduced a novelty at the Lasky studio by staging a Christmas party—with a tree, candles, toys and everything—on the 10th of September. This is how it happened.

During the course of producing "A Little Princess," the stage settings for the play included one with a big Christmas tree, completely equipped with candles, tinsel decorations and a hundred different kinds of toys for a scene which occurs at the London boarding school for girls where Mary Pickford, as Sara Crewe, is a pupil.

While Miss Pickford was waiting for the Christmas tree scenes to be taken she suddenly jumped up from her chair and said to her director, Marshall Neilan: "I've got an idea! Why can't we send all these toys to the French war orphans when we're through with them? Here we've got some wonderful stuff, just the thing to please a lot of children, and there's no use sticking it all away in the prop room when it would make a lot of youngsters happy." The director agreed.

Then Mary Pickford had another idea. "I'll tell you what we'll do," she said, "we'll ask all the studio folks to bring in some more toys and dolls and things that they have at home. And the studio children can bring a lot of toys that were given to them. I'm sure they will all be willing to give up some of their toys for the youngsters whose fathers have been killed in the war."

The scheme was quickly approved by all the players. A young toy store was the result, and many war orphans will be made happy on Christmas.

CHANGE MADE IN WILLIAM FOX RELEASES.

A change which has just been made in the monthly schedule of Fox Film Corporation's Special Features will result in setting back one week each of the pictures originally scheduled for October.

The revised order of releases places "A Rich Man's Plaything" for the week of September 30th, instead of Gladys Brockwell's new subject, "Conscience," which will be issued on October 7th. Following is the new schedule: September 30, Valeska Suratt in "A Rich Man's Plaything"; October 7, Gladys Brockwell in "Conscience"; October 14, Virginia Pearson in "Thou Shalt Not Steal"; October 21, June Caprice in "Miss U. S. A."; October 28, George Walsh in "This Is the Life."

Two Standard Pictures have been dated for release in October. These are "When a Man Sees Red" (October 7), William Farnum's superb melodramatic vehicle, and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" (October 14), the second of the Fox Kiddies production, which William Fox opened at the Globe theater last Monday evening.

"THE MANX-MAN" NOW IN EXCHANGES.

Trade prints of Hall Caine's story, "The Manx-Man," have been placed in all Goldwyn offices throughout North America and exhibitors will be invited to see George Loane Tucker's splendid production, which is now available to all exhibitors under the policy of wide open bookings.

New prints have been shipped to all the Western and Coast points and there will be no delay in the trade presentations.

The successful run of this production for a month at the Criterion theater, New York, and Marcus Loew's booking of "The Manx-Man" for sixty-two days in his various theaters has whetted the exhibitor appetite everywhere.

EXHIBITORS PREPARING TO BLOW THEMSELVES.

James F. Dailey, of the Typhoon Fan Company, has just returned from a trip through Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Michigan. Theater owners are now concerned over winter ventilating and the Typhoon company reports business brisk.

"THE WINGED MYSTERY" FOR FRANKLYN FARNUM.

Joseph De Grasse, producer of Bluebird photoplays, is at present engaged upon the preparation of the story of his next picture for screen presentation. It is entitled "The Winged Mystery," and in it Franklyn Farnum will play a dual role—that of twin brothers, German-Americans.

Despite this hint of war possibilities, "The Winged Mystery" does not deal with the great world war at all. On the contrary, it has nothing whatever to do with the colossal conflict of nations. Much of the locale of the story is in Berlin, where the gay life of the cafes is brought to view.

Farnum in his dual role will enact a part utterly different from anything he has yet done in his film career and will have numerous opportunities to give full sway to his versatile dramatic talent. Rosemary Theby, who will play opposite Farnum, has the part of an American girl. Among the others in the cast will be Claire Du Brey, who plays the part of a secret service woman. Sam De Grasse, brother of the director, has the role of a wealthy scientist, and Charles Hill Mailes plays the father of the heroine of the story.

DE MILLE PLAYLET FOR BEBAN.

As the basis of George Beban's next Paramount picture, first of the two additional productions in which he will star for that organization, a playlet written by William C. DeMille and produced in New York several years ago has been used. It was entitled "The Land of the Free" and the same name will be employed for the picture.

The character of Luigi Ricardo, a typical New York Italian, which was interpreted upon the stage by Robert Payton Gibbs, will afford Mr. Beban a role that it is said will be, if anything, more effective than any in which he has hitherto appeared. It is a characterization which gives the distinguished delineator of Latin types broad scope for his dramatic powers.

MARIE DRESSLER IN HOLLYWOOD.

Established in her own studio at Hollywood, Marie Dressler has begun engaging players for her second comedy for Goldwyn distribution. The name of the piece has not been announced, and beyond the fact that the scenario was written by the famous comedienne herself little is known of it.

Goldwyn is permitted to say, however, that the comedy will be of the popular Tillie type that Miss Dressler has made famous on stage and screen. Those who have seen the first comedy she made for Goldwyn, "The Scrublady," now completed and ready for distribution Oct. 28, predict nation-wide popularity for the Dressler comedies.

"ROPING HER ROMEO" (Paramount-Sennett).

The daring of motion picture actresses has frequently been commented upon, and while the directors invariably aim to minimize the danger of physical injury and never willingly place an actor or actress in a position calculated to prove precarious there is no accounting for the natural disregard of the players for danger. An example of this type of actress is Polly Moran, who has one of the leading roles in the hilarious Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "Roping Her Romeo," to be released shortly. Polly is a horsewoman of the kind who will stop at nothing while in the saddle. Walls, ditches, hills, precipices—all are alike to her.

In "Roping Her Romeo" Miss Moran does more stunts on horseback than the average comedienne can accomplish upon her own feet. While the spectators are being convulsed with laughter they will also be thrilled at her daring feats.

The first Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "A Bedroom Blunder," is scheduled for release October 7th. The reports on this production say that it is a veritable whirlwind of laughter-provoking situations, with a host of beautiful girls and an all-star cast, including Charles Murray, Mary Thurman, Wayland Trask and Eva Thatcher.

"EVEN AS HIM AND HER" (L-Ko.)

Phil Dunham, the erstwhile comic actor in L-Ko's, has delivered to General Director J. G. Blystone his second effort as a director, and will be circulated through Universal exchanges on the regular L-Ko date, Oct. 31. In this merrymaker, Lucille Hutton will be the featured player, with Billy Bevan the leading comedian.

"Even As Him and Her" will be a slapstick satire on the newlyweds. In its progress there will be an accumulation of surprising results obtained from a combination of trick photography and recklessness on the part of Miss Hutton, Mr. Bevan and the entire Phil Dunham organization. Having participated in both sides of the argument, Director Dunham has given to this effort his experience as an actor in developing his ideas as a producer. Assurance comes from L-Ko, via President Julius Stern, that "Even As Him and Her" will be right up to standard of its predecessors.

"MADAM WHO" (Paralta).

Bessie Barriscale's second Paralta play, "Madam Who," founded on Harold MacGrath's sensational military secret service story of the same title, adapted to the screen by Monte M. Katterjohn, was recently completed at the Paralta studios in Hollywood and the first print forwarded to New York.

While the story is told in an atmosphere of camp, trench and battle, the war interest is entirely secondary to the powerful dramatic portrayal of a determined young woman who becomes a military secret service agent to avenge the death of her father and brothers, who have lost their lives in action.

This young woman, "Jeannette Beaufort," played by Miss Barriscale, matches wits with the most shrewd and experienced military secret agents of the enemy. Endeavoring to capture them, she is herself captured by eleven men; all of them are masked. Ten of them are unknowns to each other, but one, their leader, knows them all.

Scene from "Madame Who" (Paralta).

To save her life, "Jean" is compelled to marry one of them. As the ceremony is performed by the leader, who is a clergyman, she notices a peculiar tattoo mark on the wrist of the man to whom she is being married.

With this mark as a clue, "Jean" begins search for her unknown husband as an incident to her activities for her government, but the mysterious sign hinders her more than it helps and leads her into an entanglement of baffling mystery and intrigue which is only solved at the very ending of the story.

Clyde De Vinna, who did the photographic work, has greatly added to his reputation in "Madam Who," which will be Miss Barriscale's first Paralta release. Grace Miller White's "Rose o' Paradise" will follow this production, which, in turn, will be followed by her third Paralta play, "Within the Cup," by Monte M. Katterjohn.

GAUMONT PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF OCTOBER 15.

The first release of the Gaumont Company for the week of October 15 is Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 146, which will reach the screen on Wednesday, October 17. The current topics which will appear in this issue will be those headlined in the newspapers of about that date. It is, of course, no more possible to predict the contents of No. 146 than to foresee what news events will occupy the pages of the daily papers. But Gaumont cameramen are everywhere on the alert, and as soon as important news "breaks" it will be shown in the Mutual Weekly.

Like a literary magazine, the Gaumont screen magazine, "Reel Life," is carefully prepared in advance of publication. It is therefore possible to state the contents of No. 77, which will be released on Thursday, October 18. At great expense, two cameramen were sent to Panama and points on the Gulf of Mexico to photograph the feature subject in this number, "The Banana Industry." This industry is shown in its entirety, from the planting of the banana tuber, or "eye," among decaying jungle vegetation, to the unloading of perfect bunches by machinery in the United States.

Hardly less interesting (and probably housewives will deem it of greater importance) is "When Dishwashing Is a Pleasure," which illustrates a recent invention which allows the sanitary washing of each dish in clean, separate water in a way which will not injure the prettiest or most delicate hands. The Gaumont Company promises to show other inventions to lighten housework in succeeding issues.

The other subjects in this number are: "A Colonial Church in South Carolina," which was saved from destruction during the Revolution by the coat of arms of George III; the making of a crude bracelet by "A Primitive Jeweler," and "An Optical Illusion," an animated drawing from the humorous weekly, "Life," which proves that the chorus girl did not kick off the minister's "lid."

HAROLD LOCKWOOD IN "LOVE ME FOR MYSELF ALONE."

For the story of the first Metro wonderplay starring Harold Lockwood he will make in Metro's New York studio, at 845 West 43d street, where he and his staff have settled themselves, after moving from the West Coast, Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke Film Corporation, has acquired the rights to Francis Perry Elliott's novel, "Love Me for Myself Alone." This novel was published recently in Smith's Magazine and is the second of Mr. Elliott's writings Mr. Balshofer has selected as a starring vehicle for Mr. Lockwood, the first being "The Haunted Pajamas," which was recently released by Metro.

"FIRING FATHER" (Mutual).

"Firing Father," a one-reel comedy, is the second of the new series of Strand-Mutual comedies starring Billie Rhodes. It is scheduled for release October 9. "Firing Father" deals with the trials and tribulations of a pair of lovers, who eventually outwit the girl's father by means of a fake conflagration. The new Mutual Strand series opened October 2 with "Some Nurse," the first of a series of forty-four one-reel comedies. Billie Rhodes is the star in the series, supported in most of the series by Jay Belasco.

Scene from "Firing Father" (Mutual).

"A JITNEY ELOPMENT" (Essanay).

An exciting automobile pursuit, ending when one machine falls into the ocean, is a feature of "A Jitney Elopement," the second of the new prints of Charlie Chaplin's Essanay successes being released monthly through the General Film Company.

There is a vein of romance throughout the story which, combined with Chaplin's inimitable comedy, gives the pictures a general appeal. Chaplin is shown in the role of the favored suitor of an heiress, played by Edna Purviance. The girl's father, however, insists upon marrying his daughter to a poverty-stricken count, who demands $1,000,000 in addition to the girl.

Scene from "A Jitney Elopement" (Essanay).

Chaplin calls and is mistaken for the count. The father hands over the money. While the three are at dinner the real count enters. There is a lively encounter in which the count, Charlie and the father take part. The fight is carried into the open, where several cops take part, only to be given a series of K. O. blows by Charlie.

Finally, after a series of mirth-provoking adventures, Charlie and the girl reach an automobile, then the chase begins. Through mud holes, over ruts, and across formidable obstacles the two autos race at break-neck speed. When the machines reach a dock, and Charlie is overtaken, he used strategy to get rid of his enemies. He backs his car suddenly, pushing the pursuing machine and its occupants into the ocean.

This is one of the Essanay series of pictures which made Chaplin famous. "The Champion," the first of the new prints released, has scored a big hit everywhere it has been shown. "A Jitney Elopement" will be released October 13.

ESSANAY'S ON GENERAL FILM PROGRAM.

Taylor Holmes, Charlie Chaplin and George Ade, the Hoosier Humorist, supply Essanay's share of film entertainment to be released the coming week. Mr. Holmes, who formerly was a stage star, will be seen in a comedy-drama entitled "Fools for Luck." The picture, which is a screen version of Kennett Harris' story, "Talismans," is now being given trade showings in all branch offices of the George Kleine System. It will be released on the Perfection Pictures program Oct. 8.

"Fools for Luck" is Mr. Holmes' second screen venture. The first, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," won favorable comment from photoplay critics, and is reported to be drawing excellent business for exhibitors.

The second of the Essanay-Chaplins, which will be released through the General Film Company, Oct. 13, is "A Jitney Elopement." This series is comprised of new prints of all the pictures Charlie Chaplin made for Essanay. "The Champion" was the first. One is being released each month. Included in the series are "Shanghaied," "A Woman," "In the Park," "By the Sea," "A Night in the Show," and others of the comedies in which Chaplin won his first public recognition.

The next George Ade Fable to be released through General Film is entitled "The Fable of All That Triangle Stuff as Sized up by the Meal Ticket." It will appear Oct. 13. These two-part comedy-dramas are designed for any program owing to the popularity of their author, many exhibitors are using them to good effect as featured subjects. The Fables in Slang have a screen time of, approximately, twenty-five minutes. One is being released by Essanay each week.

NEW PICTURES FOR JEWEL.

Jewel production officials announce the purchase of two new features. The first is "The Boss of Powderville," by Thomas Addison; the second, the Lois Weber production, "The Price of a Good Time," from "The Whim," by Marion Orth, which appeared in Breezy Stories. Up to the present date Jewel officials have bought besides these features "Come Through," "Sirens of the Sea," "Pay Me," "The Man Without a Country" and "The Co-respondent."

THE WEEK IN THE FOX STUDIOS.

Work has been begun on a new William Fox production in the West Coast studios. Richard Stanton will supervise it, and the cast will include Enid Markey, Frankie Lee and Fanny Midgley. Miss Markey was leading woman in "The Yankee Way," Frankie Lee was in "Sins of Her Parent," "One Touch of Sin," "Durand of the Bad Lands" and "The Soul of Satan," and Miss Midgley has been on the stage since she was fifteen years old. Mr. Stanton's most recent films were "The Spy" and "The Yankee Way."

George Walsh is working in a production under the direction of his brother, R. A. Walsh, called "This Is the Life." Four players were added to the cast last week. They are John Ehrets, Jack McDonald, W. H. Ryno and Victor Sarno.

Mr. Fox opened "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" at the Globe theater on Monday evening. This is the second of the Fox Kiddies features to be shown. The play has dozens of remarkable photographic effects in addition to the amazingly fine acting on the parts of hundreds of juveniles.

The next Fox special feature for the week of Sept. 30 will be Gladys Brookwell in an allegorical film called "Conscience," in which Miss Brockwell essays half a dozen characters.

THREE BLUEBIRDS NAMED.

Because of a conflict with previous copyrights, Bluebird has been compelled to change titles on some of its future releases. The plays referred to will be presented by Herbert Rawlinson, Mae Murray and Carmel Myers. "The Man Trap" has been definitely applied as the title of the "crook play" Rawlinson will be starred in October 29. This date was assigned to another feature in previous announcements, but has been now given to the Rawlinson subject.

"The Dynast" was the working caption of the Carmel Myers picture, but the release title has been changed to "The Lash of Power." For the Mae Murray offering "Princess Virtue" has been established as the title. Bluebird exhibitors will be especially interested in the Carmel Myers and Mae Murray features, as they serve to introduce these attractive young ladies as stars of the Bluebird program, on Nov. 5 to 12, respectively.

PARAMOUNT SERIAL OPENS OCTOBER 29.

Monday, Oct. 29, has been set as the release date for Paramount's first serial, which bears the strange title "Who Is 'Number One'?" Anna Katharine Greene, great mystery writer, is the author of the story, and the complete novelization—not a synopsis—will be printed in the most important newspapers in fifty cities coincident with the release of the fifteen episodes.

Kathleen Clifford is the star of "Who Is 'Number One'?" and in this Paramount serial she is making her film debut. Already a success in vaudeville and musical comedy, her work in "Who Is 'Number One'." her infectious charm and her dramatic talent as well as her ability for staging neck-risking stunts will immediately establish her, Paramount believes, as one of the most popular of all serial heroines.

Besides the campaign of newspaper advertising, Paramount will launch behind the serial a smashing billboard campaign in 150 cities. Paramount refused to set the release date until each of the episodes was complete. New hand-lettered titles and special trailers are a feature of the prints.

The story is of the machinations of a mysterious, revengeful woman. "Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned," is the theme behind this woman's intrigue.

A man of masterful mind—a powerful financier, a clever inventor, is the object of this woman's hate.

Prints of all episodes will be shipped soon to all Paramount exchanges so that exhibitors will be able to see any or all of the pictures they buy.

Hy Mayer's "Travelaugh"

Famous Cartoonist Evolves Combination of Photographic and Pencil Sketches of City Scenes for Universal.

IN addition to his duties as the featured cartoonist of the Animated Weekly, Hy Mayer has just made an arrangement with Universal whereby he will do a unique series of "Travelaughs," to be issued monthly during the coming year.

The first of these humorous commentaries on life as it is lived in the highways and byways of the metropolis was recently shown at the Broadway theater, where it aroused much favorable comment. It is entitled "New York as Seen by Hy Mayer," and will be released throughout the country without delay. As a combination of photograph and drawing, the reel has a refreshing element of novelty that lifts it out of the class of the stereotyped travel trip in screenland. The camera supplies many unusual scenes of the skyline, rivers, docks, bridges, streets and foreign quarters of the big city, which in turn fade out into Mayer's witty and incisive sketches, telling in the most graphic manner the thoughts that these scenes have aroused in his mind. Not the least interesting part of the reel are the captions done in the artist's characteristic vein.

Hy Mayer is the dean of cartoonists now connected with the motion picture industry. He is finishing his fifth year under contract with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and during that time his name, his hand and his famous striped shirt cuff have become familiar in every corner of the globe where motion pictures are shown.

Born on the continent of Europe, of English parents, Mayer migrated to Chicago at an early age and did his first successful work on the newspapers of the windy city, so the term "cosmopolite" might be applied to him in the strictest sense. He has been known for years as "the cartoonist who makes his point without leaving a sting." Although one of the most popular and highly paid funmakers in the world, Hy Mayer has never made an enemy by his work, nor has any newspaper or magazine handling his drawings had occasion to warn him against the use of the brand of ridicule that frequently causes the victim to seek redress in a libel suit. In fact, he says the men whom he has lampooned oftenest are the very ones who seem to like his work best. His cartoons and illustrations have appeared in all the prominent British magazines, including Punch, Pick-Me-Up, the Pall Mall Magazine, as well as Figaro Illustre and Le Rire of Paris, Fliegende Blatter of Munich, and practically every humorous and serious publication of any standing in the United States.

Mayer was the cartoonist of the New York Sunday Times for ten years, finally severing his connection with that paper to become editor of Puck. He is now devoting practically all of his time to motion picture work, and, despite the fact that he has been continually engaged in turning out drawings for the past thirty-two years, his enthusiasm is as keen as ever, and he is just the man from whom to expect a novelty of the "Travelaugh" variety.

VIOLA DANA UNDER DOUBLE DIRECTOR SYSTEM.

Charming Viola Dana, youngest of Metro stars, will leave soon for California, where she will continue to appear in Metro wonderplays, under the double director system. John H. Collins and William C. Dowlan are the two directors who will endeavor to keep this little bundle of energy busy. Mr. Collins will complete one picture with Miss Dana as star, then retiring to cut and assemble his picture, while Mr. Dowlan begins and completes the direction of the star in her next Metro multiple-reel feature.

The first feature on which Miss Dana will be engaged on her arrival at the Pacific Coast studios will be "The Winding Trail," under the direction of Mr. Dowlan. When "The Winding Trail" is completed, Miss Dana will at once begin work on a screen version of Myrtle Reed's famous story, "A Weaver of Dreams," under the direction of John H. Collins.

Mutual Schedule

Anita King's First Picture Appears in Program for Week of October 8.

MISS ANITA KING appears in the first of her series of Mutual-Horkheimer pictures on the Mutual release schedule of October 8. "The Girl Angle," her initial production, is released on that date, together with "Southern Pride," a five-reel Mutual-American drama starring Gail Kane. The week's schedule includes Chapter IV of "The Lost Express," the Mutual-Signal photo novel starring Helen Holmes, two comedies and two topicabs.

"The Girl Angle" (Mutual-Horkheimer).

Miss King recently signed a contract with E. D. Horkheimer to appear in a series of pictures for release on the star production schedule of the Mutual Film Corporation and has been hard at work on "The Girl Angle" ever since the day of her arrival at Long Beach, Cal. The expression "hard at work" is used literally as well as figuratively, for Miss King's first picture contains a world of strenuous acting. The producer selected an exdellent vehicle for Miss King's first picture. She is assigned to the role of a two-fisted, fighting woman, a person of great self-efficiency who detests, despises and distrusts the male of the species to an intense degree. Miss King has done the part remarkably well. She make a typical woman of the rough and ready West. The production is in five reels. It is from the story by L. V. Jefferson, a writer of note. Joseph Ryan occupies the principle place in the supporting cast, which includes such well known names as Daniel Gilfether and Mollie McConnell.

"Southern Pride" (Mutual American).

Miss Gail Kane has a distinctly different and quite as fascinating role in her new picture, "Southern Pride," as she had in "Souls in Pawn" and "The Bride's Silence," her last two releases. She is assigned to the part of the proud daughter of an old but impoverished Creole family, loved by two men and loving one—the everlasting triangle. There is a theft of the family heirlooms to throw a touch of mystery into the story. Miss Kane is surrounded by an exceptionally good cast. The settings are typically Southern and thoroughly up to the American Film Company's standard. The production was directed by Henry King, who has been in charge of Miss Kane's most recent Mutual-American pictures.

Two Comedies on Week's Schedule.

There are two comedies on the schedule for the week, "Firing Father," the second of the new series of Mutual-Strand one-reel pictures, starring Billie Rhodes, and "Jerry and the Bully," a one-reel Cub, featuring the inimitable and terribly funny George Ovey.

Exhibitors in all parts of the country showed keen pleasure over the announcement that Mutual would release a series of forty-four Strand Comedies starring Miss Rhodes, and extraordinarily heavy bookings have followed the news. Miss Rhodes is supported by Jay Belasco. "Firing Father" is scheduled for release October 9 and "Jerry and the Bully" reaches the screen October 11.

Chapter IV of "The Lost Express."

The serial release of the week is "The Oil Well Conspiracy," Chapter IV, of "The Lost Express," the Mutual-Signal fifteen-chapter photonovel starring the fearless Helen Holmes. Chapter IV takes the production up to the point where the motive for the theft of old General Thurston's secret formula for granulating gasoline is revealed. Helen has been injured in an automoblie collision at a grade railroad crossing and has been carried to the offices of the Valquez Oil Company. Recognized by Valquez, she is ordered off the property and his suspicions convince her that it is he for whom the plans are wanted.

Two Topicals on the Schedule.

Reel Life, the Mutual Film Magazine, scheduled for October 11, covers the following subjects: "A Dam Across the Mississippi," "The Development of the Watch," "Acrobatic Cyclists," and shows the raising of cantaloupes in the Imperial Valley. The animated drawing from life is entitled "Coming Home from the Club in 1950." Mutual weekly carrying current events is released October 10.

ALICE BRADY BEGINS WORK FOR SELECT.

Work has been begun in the Paragon studio at Fort Lee on the first of Alice Brady's Select pictures. The name of this production has been changed from "The Red Mouse" to "Her Silent Sacrifice." The former title was that under which the play by Henry W. J. Dam was produced when it was given its New York presentation. The scenario of "Her Silent Sacrifice" was prepared from this material by Eve Unsell.

In the splendid cast which is being selected to support Miss Brady are Robert Payson Gibbs, Henry Clive, Blanch Craig and Edmund Pardo. The production is being directed by Edward Jose, whose "Poppy" and "The Moth" have been Norma Talmadge's two most successful productions.

The story of the picture is that of a young girl who enters into a bargain with an old roue of a prince, by the terms of which she secures fame for the starving artist whom she loves. How this obligation is met forms the central theme of "Her Silent Sacrifice."

Kalem Announces One-Reel Features

Specially Selected "Grants," Soon to Be Released, Contain Many Surprises.

ONE Reel Features." That is the way the Kalem Company describes four new episodes of "Grant, Police Reporter," featuring George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby, to be released weekly beginning October 18.

The pictures are entitled "The Mystery of Room 422," "A Deal in Bonds," "The Sign of the Scarf" and "The Man with the Limp."

"Exhibitors will be interested to learn," said William Wright, of the Kalem Company, "that these four pictures were especially selected from the series because of their extraordinary merit, and held for release as separate one-reel features. It will behoove exhibitors to visit their nearest General Film office and see the four pictures for themselves. If they are unable to do so they can take my word (which in ten years' dealings with exhibitors I never have broken) that these special episodes are all that we claim for them—namely, genuine features in one reel. Of the thirty odd plots which Robert Welles Ritchie wrote for 'Grant, Police Reporter,' he regarded these four his best work.

"The press in commenting on our 'Stingaree' series," continued Mr. Wright, "frequently remarked that many of the two-reel episodes are superior to many so-called 'super features' in quality of story and production. Now we have combined in one reel all the elements that went to make the 'Stingaree' pictures genuine features.

"In view of the popularity of the 'Grant' series, exhibitors booking these four new episodes will do well to advertise them as features. The wise know that length does not make quality. They will not have a disappointed patron the day they show the new 'Grants.'"

EMILY STEVENS IN "ALIAS MRS. JESSUP."

Emily Stevens has begun work at the Metro studio, 3 West 61st street, New York, on a multiple-reel screen version of Blair Hall's clever story, "Alias Mrs. Jessup." The new Metro Super-Feature will rival the forthcoming special production de luxe, "A Sleeping Memory," in putting Miss Stevens' dramatic powers to the test. The star will be called upon to act the parts of both Janet Ford and Lillian Ford, cousins, their physical similarity being their only resemblance to each other. Miss Stevens will be obliged to build up two entirely different sets of mannerisms for the two characters, Janet and Lillian. This production will be directed by William S. Davis, and will serve to introduce Mr. Davis as a member of Metro's directing staff.

PARAMOUNT-BRAY PICTOGRAPH NO. 88.

Special interest attaches itself to the 88th release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the magazine on the screen, through the remarkable hunting subject, "A Southland Deer Hunt," incorporated in it. This picture was made in the forest-covered hills of Carolina, a sportsman's paradise, and probably is the only one that shows the actual shooting of a wild deer.

In order to get the pictures, the camera-man was forced to climb a tree, where, screened by the leaves and with his camera lashed securely to the branches, he sat patiently for hours awaiting the chance of a deer passing close enough for the hunter's shot. Finally a magnificent buck and his mate appeared, but the thick underbrush prevented an accurate shot and they scampered off unscathed. A little later, however, a doe came leaping down the trail, and evidently catching some unfamiliar sound, stopped still. In an instant the hunter's gun was at his shoulder and with the report of the gun the deer bounded high into the air and fell dead. Lovers of the great outdoors will experience a thrill on seeing this picture.

Other subjects that go to round out this release are a practical demonstration of a simple method of making soap in the Home as evolved in the Department of Home Economics of Cornell University. "A Wood Chopping Contest in New Zealand" and an animated cartoon by Earl Hurd called "Bobby Bumps' World 'Serious'."

ANITA KING IN "THE GIRL ANGLE."

Miss Anita King, widely known as a screen favorite, makes her initial appearance in Mutual pictures October 8, when "The Girl Angle," the first of a series of productions which she is to make at the Horkheimer studios for Mutual is released.

Miss King went West several months ago under contract with E. D. Horkheimer to appear in five-reel features. She was placed at work under the direction of Edgar Jones on "The Girl Angle," from the story by L. V. Jefferson.

"The Girl Angle" is laid in the West. Miss King is cast as a self-sufficient woman from the East who, betrayed by a man on her wedding day, has resolved to live her life henceforth entirely away from masculine influence and without masculine assistance.

The story is a red-blooded tale. The picture is full of strenuous acting. Miss King rides horses with reckless abandon. It is full of unusual scenes and wonderful scenery. There are innumerable pistol duels, a train robbery and some wild dance hall scenes. There is a vigilante trial in which masked men conduct a summary court and a near-lynching.

Miss King is especially well cast in the play. She makes a typical woman of the great outdoors. She rides with exceeding grace. She is a bit clumsy as a plow-woman but proves herself a carpenter of no mean ability. She is charming in riding habit and most fetching in overalls.

SCHEDULE OF FORTHCOMING L-KO'S.

General Director J. G. Blystone has arranged a series of L-Ko's for distribution through the usual Universal sources that have the indorsement of President Julius Stern. It is Mr. Stern's contention that the forthcoming arrangement of comedies will maintain the L-Ko standard in every particular.

"Fat and Furious," to be released October 24, will have Myrtle Sterling as the featured player, with Al Forbers, Babe Emerson and Russ Powell competing for the laughs in her support. Vin Moore directed. There will be another Myrtle Sterling L-Ko released November 7, under the title of "Sunday in Last Chance Valley" and a third comedy with Miss Sterling featured on November 21, under the caption of "Deep Seas and Desperate Doings." In both of these features, directed by Mr. Moore, Al Forbes and Russ Powell will lead the supporting comedians.

Phil Dunham has directed two of the features for immediate distribution—"Even as Him and Her," for October 31, and "The Judge's Revenge," for November 28. In the last named subject Mr. Dunham will also play a comedy role, with Lucille Hutton and Billy Bevan featured in the cast. Bob McKenzie will also have an important role in the support.

Dick Smith and Archie Mayo are co-directors of "The Golfers," to be issued November 14, with Eva Novak, Bob McKenzie, Chester Ryckman and Eddie Barry contesting for the laughs. The call of war has necessitated changes in the L-Ko staff that brings Jim Davis, recently with Vogue comedies, into the fold as one of General Director Blystone's staff. He takes the place of Noel Smith, who has responded to a summons to the Southern California training camp.

EDNA GOODRICH IN "HER SECOND HUSBAND."

"Her Second Husband," from the story by Hamilton Smith, a New York writer of note, has been chosen as the next Mutual production starring Edna Goodrich. "American Maid" is nearing completion at Mutual's Long Island studios under the direction of Albert Capellani. Miss Goodrich is working with the regularity of a business woman on her photoplay productions. The celebrated stage star has taken a keen interest in her recent pictures and has added keen enthusiasm to her ability in their production. "A Daughter of Maryland," the third of her series, has been scheduled for release by Mutual on October 29. "Her Second Husband" will be released following "American Maid."

Great "Camille" Makes Debut

Helen Hesperia in a De Luxe Production Presented Through General Film Company.

THE announcement of the immediate release of a six-reel de luxe production of "Camille," in which Helen Hesperia, the international beauty, is featured, for exclusive distribution by General Film Company, is one of the most important developments in filmdom in many months. No greater international motion picture actress has ever been developed than the Italian star whose extraordinary dramatic power has made her the most classic Camille ever pictured. As an attraction which should appeal to the exhibitor in search of a profit-making feature, this subject is regarded in a class by itself.

Some of the greatest photographic work yet done in pictures has more than done justice to Dumas' incomparable masterpiece. Costumed with a lavishness seldom found in pictures of this character, it is expected to be one of the really great box-office attractions of the year. Great care was exercised in setting this masterpiece in the atmosphere which Dumas himself employed in working out his story.

Aside from the magnificent way in which Camille has been staged and filmed, the outstanding feature of the picture is the superb acting of the Italian star, Helen Hesperia. No finer bits of emotional acting could be undertaken than in this Camille. Helen Hesperia is one of the few really world-famed film artists. She commanded the limelight of popular favor from the time she began work four years ago, under the direction of the Milano Film Company, in a series of twelve feature productions to which the general designation of "Bella Hesperia" series was given, meaning the "Beautiful Hesperia." This series was a great success in all parts of the world, for everything that meant sport and risks seemed to attract the ability of this young actress.

Miss Hesperia is supported by a cast fully capable of keeping the pace she has set in the staging of Camille, and the entire six reels are crowded with some of the most powerful and dramatic acting yet seen in pictures. The production is controlled by the Hanover Film Company, Captain Charles E. Kimball, managing director.

East and West in October 7 Triangle

"A Phantom Husband," a Tale of Kentucky, and "Ashes of Hope," Treats of a Mining Camp.

THE power of instinctive maternal love to conquer a desire to avenge man's duplicity and the pressure of public opinion in a small town furnish themes for Triangle's dramas to be released the week of October 7. Belle Bennett and Ruth Stonehouse are cast in the leading roles.

In a Western mining camp dominated by the charm and beauty of Gonda, a dance-hall girl, Gordon, a fugitive from justice and stranger to the abandon of the place, becomes the subject of a wager between the girl and a gambler, who loves her. The girl wins, almost at the cost of Gordon's life, and takes her protector to her cabin. Love follows admiration for the man's strength and courage, and with it comes a dream of motherhood which Gordon does not share, because, as develops later in the story, he has a wife and an infant son, awaiting his return back East. A picture of the child kills the hope that stirred in Gonda and moves her to the supreme self-sacrifice which names the play, "Ashes of Hope." Supporting Miss Bennett are Jack Livingston, Jack Richardson and Josie Sedgwick.

The second play, "A Phantom Husband," has a unique matrimonial twist, as its title implies. A little country girl, whose pride impels her to spread news of an imaginary fiance, in a Kentucky town, wanders through the maze of her white lies trying to produce a ready-made husband for her wedding date. In following an ingenious plan, she finds a real husband who brings her more happiness and worldly goods than she dared to expect. The story is from the pen of H. O. Davis, Triangle general manager. Charles Gunn plays the leading male role opposite Miss Stonehouse.

The Keystone comedy of the week, "His Crooked Career," features Fritz Schade and Claire Anderson in a tangle between a chief of police and the burglar's union. "Half and Half" and "All at Sea," one-reel Triangle Komedies, also will be released on October 7.

VIOLET MERSEREAU'S FUTURE BLUEBIRDS.

Over at Bluebird's Leonia, N. J., studios. Director Theodore Marston is finishing off his second subject, with Violet Mersereau the star. John C. Brownell made the scenario of the present work from Mrs. Bronson's novel, "Princess Tatters," but there will be a new title applied to the release when put in circulation.

Robert L. Hill is assisting Mr. Marston in the direction, Miss Mersereau's support will include Donald Hall, Charles Slattery, James O'Neill, Frank Otto and Grace Barton. Last Thursday another Mersereau picture was shown to Bluebird executives and will soon be given its definite release date.

Mintner will support Miss Mersereau. John C. Brownell also made this scenario and Mr. Marston directed. Miss Mersereau will appear, during December, in one of the two subjects mentioned.

RAVER INVITES DEFENDERS TO PREMIERE.

Harry Raver last week sent telegrams personally to each of the nineteen Public Defenders throughout the United States, inviting them to the initial exhibition of "The Public Defender," the big screen production based on the book of the same name by Mayer C. Goldman. Assurances were quickly received by Mr. Raver that the majority of the official "Public Defenders" of the country would be present at the premiere. The consensus of opinion seemed to be, according to the telegrams sent in, that the screen version of "The Public Defenders" will give a great impetus to the movement started by the author of the book, which was, better treatment and a fairer deal in court for poor persons accused of crime.

Among the cities which already possess a regularly elected or appointed Public Defender are Los Angeles, San Diego, Columbus, Portland, Oregon, Omaha, Pittsburgh, Evansville and Philadelphia.

While the screen production presents cogent reasons why the office of Public Defender should be created in every municipality possessing a District Attorney or Public Prosecutor, it is in no way preachy or platitudinous, but is in every sense of the word a big, forceful human interest drama. Alma Hanlon, Frank Keenan and Robert Edeson are starred. John Sainpolis and Florence Short are also in the cast. Burton King staged the picture.

THE ARMY AND NAVY ENTERTAINS WITH SIMPLEX.

That their friends and relatives might see them in action, members of the 2nd Field Artillery had several thousand feet of film taken showing Battery D in action. The films were projected on a Simplex Projector which they have recently installed and the men are loud in their praise of the entertainment which the motion picture affords during the spare time they have.

A United States battleship dropped anchor for a few hours in the harbor and during that time an electrician formerly with the Cosmofotofilm Manufacturing Co. and other leading film manufacturers called at the factory of the Precision Machine Co. and made the purchase of a Simplex.

The 23d N. Y. Regiment has also installed a Simplex Projector with which to while away their spare time while at Spartanburg and keep in touch with things at home through the news weeklies.

Uncle Sam's sailor boys have built a club house at the Newport Training Station, and in order to make it complete a public spirited citizen has donated a Simplex Projector. The club house has been named "The House That Jack Built."

WORLD'S LARGEST CANTILEVER BRIDGE.

On Sept. 11, 1916, the 5,000-ton central span which was to complete Quebec's $20,000,000 bridge fell into the St. Lawrence River, killing ten workmen. This was the second failure to raise this immense span into position. After more than a year, the Gaumont Company is able to show in No. 144 of the Mutual Weekly, released Oct. 3, the third and successful attempt to complete this monster bridge. With a cantilever length of 2,830 feet, and a clearance which will allow the passage of the tallest masted ships, the Quebec bridge is the greatest in the world, surpassing the famous bridge across the Firth of Forth, near Edinburgh. Even a 16-story building would not extend above the main posts, and more than 65,000 tons of steel were used in its construction.

NEXT FARRAR PICTURE STARTED.

Upon completion of the initial Geraldine Farrar production for Artcraft release, "The Woman God Forgot," Cecil B. De Mille immediately commenced activities on the next picture at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, Cal. The title of the new production is "The Devil Stone."

CAMERAGRAPHS IN CAMP.

The Nicholas Power Company has recently made a number of notable installations, including nine machines, to Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J., and a machine to the Reserve Officers' Training Camp at Plattsburg, N. Y.

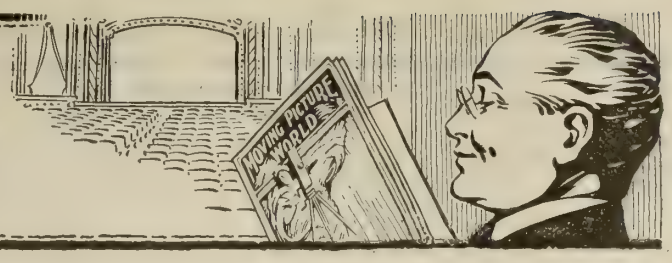
Trade News of the Week



GATHERED BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS

Boston Sees Opening of Two New Theaters

Loew's New Columbia Theater at Washington and Motte Streets and the Castle Square Theater in the South End Section Open.

By Richard Davis Howe, 80 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Boston, "The Hub of the Universe," which boasts of some of the finest moving picture theaters that can be seen anywhere in the country, has taken two more magnificent new photoplay houses under its guiding wings and will endeavor to make both enterprises complete successes. One of the new houses is Marcus Loew's new Columbia theater, formerly the Old South End theater, located at the corner of Washington and Mott streets, in a thickly populated section of the city. The other is the Old Castle Square theater, for many years the home of John Craig's famous stock company, which is being rebuilt into a modern and up-to-date picture house.

Arbuckle at Columbia Premier.

The new Columbia celebrated its grand opening on Monday evening, Sept. 24, and the occasion was a most auspicious one. The main feature of the program was the appearance of "Fatty" Arbuckle, the famous Paramount comedian, who accepted the invitation of Marcus Loew to come on to Boston for the opening night and help to make the initial show a success. It was unanimously admitted that the premier performance was an overwhelming success. Vociferous applause greeted Mr. Arbuckle when he walked onto the stage. The audience fairly shook the rafters of the house, with their stamping and handclapping and made Mr. Arbuckle's welcome a very warm one.

Marcus Loew Makes Speech.

Marcus Loew, the great theater magnate, himself was on the program and followed "Fatty" on the stage. He took up several minutes in outlining to the audience the policy that would be followed out by the new house.

Mr. Loew emphatically declared that the best pictures money could buy would be shown at the Columbia and that the vaudeville would be as good as any on the Loew circuit.

"I know," said Mr. Loew, "that some people have declared that the new Columbia would not survive and would become the same losing proposition that the Old South End was, but I feel absolutely sure that with the excellent policy which has been outlined for this house and with the co-operation of the movie fans the Columbia will be an entirely successful proposition."

Features of the Theater Building.

The new theater was designed by T. W. Lamb, the architect who designed the Orpheum theater and many other moving picture and vaudeville houses on the Loew circuit. The house has a seating capacity of about 2,000 and has but one balcony, instead of three, as in the Old South End theater. The building is fireproof throughout. It has six boxes and several lodges in front of the balcony.

Colonial buff and gold constitute the color scheme of the interior decorations and the seats in the house are upholstered in olive green leather. The lighting from the illuminated panels and cove lights is so regulated that the maximum illumination is allowed while pictures are being exhibited. The house is installed with the very latest in heating, cooling and ventilating systems. The new theater has a massive and powerful pipe organ, allowing a number of effects to perfectly accompany the photoplays.

There are an unusual number of exits, leading to three sides of the house, and the building can be emptied in less than two minutes. Special attention was made to fire safety arrangements.

Prices and Policy.

Samuel D. Messing, formerly assistant manager of Loew's Boston Orpheum, is the manager of the new house.

William S. Hart, in "The Cold Deck," was the feature picture for the opening night and it went over big. "Fatty" Arbuckle was seen in one of his funny comedies, "His Wedding Night."

The prices of admittance for the new house are 5, 10 and 15 cents for matinees and 10, 15 and 20 cents evenings.

Rapid progress is being made by contractors on the work of the reconstruction of the Old Castle Square into a moving picture theater. A great many changes need to be made in the house before it can be conveniently used as a picture theater.

The Castle Square Theater.

The Castle Square theater is located right in the center of the South End and Back Bay section of the city and should have a heavy patronage when it opens. There is absolutely no opposition in the neighborhood. There are two theaters nearby. Loew's Old National and the Berkeley Street Scenic Temple, both of which have been closed for a long time.

Nashua Evening Paper Backs Local Film.

Nashua, N. H.—Interest in the moving picture popularity contest conducted in this city by the Nashua Evening Telegraph continues at a high pitch and as the contest nears a close the race for the highest honors becomes hotter. The winners will all have an opportunity to exhibit their skill in acting in a Nashua-made photoplay, entitled "The Belle of Nashua."

"The Belle of Nashua" will be presented at the Colonial theater, in this city, immediately upon its completion.

Ground Broken for New Waltham House.

Waltham, Mass.—As a result of the dissolution of the moving picture firm of Kingsbury and Bendsley, of this city, Waltham is to have another magnificent new motion picture theater, if the rapidly rising cost of steel and other building materials does not compel Mr. Kingsbury, who is engineering the project, to abandon the enterprise.

Ground was broken for the new house several weeks ago, but work on the structure was temporarily abandoned.

Fox Features All Proved Popular.

Boston, Mass.—The short series of William Fox feature productions, which have been shown at the Majestic theater in this city, closed last week with the exhibition of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp." There were five features in all and they were all given a week's run, everyone of them producing wonderful results. The series has been a winner from a financial viewpoint and would have been continued had it not been that a Charles Frohman production has been booked for that house the week commencing Oct. 2.

The series of big pictures included: "Jack and the Beanstalk," "The Spy," "The Honor System" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp."

New Liberty Loan Film Seen.

Boston, Mass.—A great gathering of New England motion picture exhibitors and exchangemen attended Keith's theater to view a showing of the film "Three Billion Dollars in Three Weeks," which was exploited to assist the Government in the floation of the new issue of Liberty bonds, which is about due.

Through Herbert F. Rawll, president of the Christmas Club Corporation, and the Federal Bank Liberty Loan Committee of New England, the film is soon to be furnished to exhibitors throughout New England.

Two New Goldwyn Salesmen.

Boston, Mass.—Manager Harry Campbell, of the Boston Goldwyn office, has added two new men to his sales force. William O'Brien, for three years the World Film salesman in Maine territory, has gone to the Goldwyn to handle the same territory. He will make his headquarters in Portland. He has been a most successful salesman and is well known to every exhibitor in the Pine Tree state.

Another addition to the Goldwyn force is Robert Clark, formerly with Manager R. D. Marson, of the K-E-S-E. Mr. Clark will assist Mr. Campbell in handling the Greater Boston territory. He is a well known man in moving picture circles.

Arthur Davis, of the Colonial theater, of Nashua, N. H., and Lee Rhodenizer, of the Star theater, of Concord, N. H., have been signed up for Goldwyn service by Frank Vine, Goldwyn agent for New Hampshire.

James Burke to Manage the Gordon.

Chelsea, Mass.—James Burke, manager of the Scollay Square Olympia, in Boston, goes to Chelsea to take over the management of the Gordon house there. His successor at the Olympia has not yet been named.

Library Fund Slides Shown.

Boston, Mass.—The conservation slides to aid the Government in its war campaign have been distributed in New England territory and were shown for the first time during the week of Sept. 24-29. The slides related to the contributions of money for the Library fund for the soldiers. The slides have brought an immediate response from moving picture patrons.

F. Mercy Plans Theater in North Yakima

New House Will Cost $125,000—Control of All the Four Theaters in the City—In Fruit Belt and Prosperous.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

NORTH YAKIMA, WASH.—A visit to the thriving city of North Yakima, Wash., with a population of 21,000 persons, would not be complete without a visit to the theater. If you enter any one of these you enter, and pay your admission price to get in, it is a boost for Frederick Mercy, formerly of New York City and later of San Francisco, Cal., and Seattle, Wash., who now has a monopoly on the four theaters of the city. He has plans prepared for a new house near the post office and federal building to cost $125,000.

The Empire theater is his leading play house, and his offices are located on the second floor of this building back of the balcony and facing the street. This is an up-to-date house in every respect, including curtains, rugs, ventilation, lighting, fireproof operating booth, seating arrangement, machines, and other appointments.

Frederick Mercy.

Mr. Mercy gets out his own program, has a monopoly on the bill posting sites of the city and thus bills his own shows, as well as selling space to other enterprises. He also claims that his newspaper advertising is liberal, and advocates the extensive use of newspaper advertising to reach the reading public and says that through that medium he increases the patronage of his theaters.

His program covers the Majestic and Empire theaters, which he has distributed to patrons at all of the houses. He recently installed a 50 ampere motor generator in each of these places costing $1,000 each.

He calls his enterprises the Frederick Mercy Theatrical Enterprises of North Yakima, which is one of the leading fruit belts of the northwest, and is also an ideal place for the hunter and fisher. Both birds and big game are reported plentiful nearby.

It was my pleasant lot to visit the place, and I could not see my way clear to leave without getting an interview with Mr. Mercy and obtaining a photograph to use with the story I quickly considered was one worth having. In a straightforward way, with no attempt of false modesty, but in a genial manner, Mr. Mercy unfolded the story or answered questions put to him, and the following is the result.

Mr. Mercy started in the moving picture business in New York City 11 years ago after severing his connection with Sullivan and Krause, he having been engaged in the theatrical business for some years dealing with the speaking stage. After remaining in the Metropolis for a time he came west, and going to San Francisco, Cal., engaged in the motion picture business there, then moved north to Seattle. After spending some time in the business there, moved over the Cascade mountains and dropped down into the beautiful Yakima Valley on the east side of the Cascades, where he landed in North Yakima, which is about 1,800 feet above sea level, according to information furnished me. This was five years ago, and he started in business there by purchasing the Majestic, which was then a moving picture theater in a store room, with a 25-ft. front. Later he erected a new building, which has a seating capacity of 800, and which is the present Majestic.

He next purchased the Empire in 1914, and has improved in it until it is practically a little palace. It has a seating capacity of 1,100, has loge seats upstairs and boxes on the first floor.

Mr. Mercy next purchased the Avenue theater on Yakima avenue opposite the Majestic, and which has a seating capacity of 400, and following this purchased the Yakima theater, which is used both for road shows and for the larger moving picture productions such as "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance." It has a seating capacity of 1,000.

The place has just been redecorated, ventilated, carpeted and otherwise improved at an expense of $500. The ventilating system is one worked out by Mr. Mercy which empties the air of the theater and renews it every three minutes without creating any draught.

The stage is also prepared for both vaudeville and pictures, and vaudeville attractions are shown four days of each week. An eight-piece orchestra furnishes the music.

The Majestic was the second largest house in the state at the time it was rebuilt, according to Mr. Mercy. The building was remodeled and steel construction was used throughout. The operating booth is metal and completely fireproof.

The theater has a pretty lobby with wide entrances. The walls are decorated with oil paintings, the seats are of fine leather, and the carpets are a heavy Brussels design suitable to the surroundings. This theater is supplied with French velour curtains. Music is furnished by a $10,000 Estey pipe organ, with special equipments for pictures, including chimes, trap drums and whistles and bells.

The Avenue theater is opened Saturdays and Sundays only. This is more of a store picture show with plain seats. The admission price is 10 cents at this place, and at the other houses is 15 cents, with the exception of the Avenue, where the prices are changed to suit the production.

Mr. Mercy said: "We now have the plans prepared for a big house to house large pictures, vaudeville productions and the largest road shows. The property has been acquired for this just opposite the post office on South Third and Chestnut streets.

"The lot is 100 by 140, and the plan is to have the seating capacity 1,800. Work will be started on this in the spring, and it is to be completed next year at a cost of $125,000."

Mr. Mercy uses automatic change and ticket machines at all houses.

Seattle Exhibitors Are Feeling Encouraged

Five Big Downtown Houses Show Super-features at Same Time and Business At All Is Excellent—Like the Good Old Times.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—This city was flooded with big attractions at the motion picture theaters this week. The schedule for the five big downtown houses was as follows:

Coliseum, Wm. S. Hart in "The Cold Deck."

Liberty, Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

Clemmer, Wm. Farnum in "The Tale of Two Cities."

Strand, Ann Murdock in "Outcast."

Rex, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

The fact that the first three played to capacity houses and the last two did a fairly good business shows that the picture business in Seattle has improved greatly over the last two or three years; for, although Seattle exhibitors have always shown the best pictures, not since the most prosperous days of 1912 and 1913 could they have put up such a combination as this week's programs and get away with it. It seems that war prosperity has at last reached Seattle, and the exhibitors are getting their share of the proceeds But those who look ahead declare that the pendulum has just begun its forward swing, and the managers of the big downtown houses are looking forward to the biggest season's business in the history of their theaters. The soldiers in the city and those who come over from Fort Lawton and Camp Lewis, the National Army cantonment at American Lake, are great motion picture fans, and new recruits are daily swelling the ranks of Uncle Sam's army and filling the lobbies of Seattle picture theaters.

Three Bluebirds in Seattle at One Time.

Seattle, Wash.—John R. Meldrum, manager of the Seattle Universal office, is feeling quite proud of the fact that last week there were three Bluebird pictures being shown in Seattle's downtown theaters at one time. They were, "Come Through" at the Liberty, "Fires of Rebellion" at the Mission, and "Triumph" at the Coliseum.

Sunday Noon Concerts at Liberty.

Seattle, Wash.—The regular Sunday noon concerts will be resumed at the Liberty theater on Sept. 23. O. G. Wallace's performances on the big Hope-Jones Wurlitzer Orchestra have become one of the greatest attractions to the Liberty, and its patrons are expressing great pleasure that the special concerts, which are omitted during the summer, are to be resumed so soon.

Two New Theaters for Idaho.

Seattle, Wash.—A new $50,000 motion picture theater is being built by the business men of Wallace Ia. This will be the third motion picture house in the town and will seat 1,200.

Simons and Moe are building a $30,000 motion picture theater in Kellogg, a small town just out of Wallace. Mr. Simons already owns the Isis theater in Kellogg. The new house will seat about 800.

Vaudeville House Signs for First Runs.

Seattle, Wash.—Eugene Levy, manager of the Orpheum, which is advertised as the million dollar theater and which shows vaudeville and pictures at an admission price of ten cents, has signed a contract for the year's output in five-reel features of the Fox, World and Brady-Made productions. Mr. Levy claims that his is the only vaudeville house in the country which shows these pictures.

K-E-S-E Representative Visits.

Seattle, Wash.—J. Deitch, Oregon representative for K-E-S-E, is spending the week in the Seattle office in conference with Frank Steffy, Northwest manager. Mr. Deitch, who has been sticking pretty close to his territory for the last four months, says that the motion picture business in Oregon is picking up and is due for a still greater increase in the near future. Eastern Oregon is already booming, Northern Oregon is better than it has been for several years, and the southern part of the state is beginning to pick up.

Ruth Roland in Person at Pantages.

Seattle, Wash.—Ruth Roland appeared all last week at Pantages vaudeville theater in this city. On the same program the last episode of her latest serial, "The Neglected Wife," was shown on the screen. Miss Roland sang and gave little talks, relating several amusing incidents which took place during the making of the picture. The theater was packed at every performance, and the audiences invariably welcomed her with enthusiastic applause.

Newark News Letter.

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

Notes from "Civilization" Office.

NEWARK, N. J.—Manager Herman Heidelberger announces this week several important additions and promotions in his staff. In the first place Miss E. M. Austin succeeds Edward Church as bookkeeper and cashier. Miss Dorothy Clark succeeds Miss Anna R. Pollok as stenographer and office assistant.

On the road force Edward Cottrell has been promoted from the film room to road representative. Albert H. Westfall is also a newcomer to the "Civilization" road forces.

Miss Bertha Rich has been added to the staff as inspector of film. Paul M. Connors, formerly of the Mutual, is now acting as shipper for the "Civilization."

A change in the executive end of the corporation was made at the last stockholders' meeting, when Henry Allsop was elected president of the corporation to succeed Frank Hall.

Slight Fire at Paramount Theater.

Newark, N. J.—Due to the cool-headedness of the management more than 1,000 patrons of the Paramount walked out the theater without any confusion. They were watching the performance at the showhouse, while a small fire smoldered in a storeroom under them. The patrons descended the fire escapes and used all the other exits in a quiet, orderly fashion.

When the fire became evident by the smoke, William B. Putnam, the manager, walked up to the stage and made the announcement. He requested all to leave the building as soon as possible.

Savage Films Productions, Inc.

Newark, N. J.—A new state right company, the Savage Films Productions, Inc., has opened offices at Suite 48, Strand theater building, 118 Market street. A. Savage is the active head of the company.

"Parentage" at Goodwin Theater.

Newark, N. J.—The feature attraction at the Goodwin theater, 863 Broad street, during the week of Sept. 17, was the feature "Parentage," controlled in this territory by Frank Gersten, Inc. Mrs. L. H. Webbe, the manager of the theater, seemed well pleased with the box office results.

"Ruth Sheldon" Appears.

Newark, N. J.—Miss Adel Holland, who takes the part of Ruth Sheldon in the film "Hate," appeared personally simultaneously with the picture at the City theater, Seventh and Orange streets, last Monday evening. Leon O. Mumford is the managing director of the theater.

"Italian Battlefront" Here.

Newark, N. J.—The Orpheum theater, which has been closed all summer, reopened its doors Sept. 17 for the purpose of presenting the war pictures entitled "The Italian Battlefront." The picture was heavily advertised, and received considerable patronage.

"Exile" and "Double Crossed."

Newark, N. J.—The Newark theater had two exceptionally good pictures the week of September 16, when Mme. Olga Petrova in "Exile" was the attraction the first part of the week, and Pauline Frederick appeared in "Double Crossed" the latter half of the week. The Newark is putting up a consistent program, and the box office results are in proportion to the value of the program.

Gem at Frederickton, N. B., Has Premier

Pretty New Theater in New Brunswick Capital City Brightens—Patriotic Clubs Participate—W'll Have a Ladies' Orchestra.

From Alice Fairweather, "Standard," St. John, N. B.

FREDERICKTON, N. B.—The opening of the Gem theater took place on Thursday evening in Frederickton and was a great success. The affair was in co-operation with the central committee of the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire and they were given shares in the proceeds of the opening night. The picture chosen was "The Law of Compensation," and by a quarter to seven the house was filled and the doors had to be closed. Stephen C. Hurley attended from St. John to represent F. G. Spencer, lessee of the theater. A ladies' orchestra of twelve pieces, under the direction of Miss Hazel Palmer, rendered excellent music and the opening night of the Gem at Fredericton argues well for the future success of this house.

Robert Greer Now Heads Famous Players Office.

St. Joe, N. B.—Robert Greer, of Pittsburg, has been appointed manager of the Famous Players at St. John. Mr. Greer was formerly with the Triangle Film company.

Socks for Soldiers at Imperial Theater.

St. John, N. B.—Speaking of patriotic funds, there was instituted a whirlwind campaign in St. John last week in which the theaters played a prominent part. It was found that the local Red Cross Society were 5,000 short of the number of socks sent in last year. It was decided to make a strong appeal to both men and women to, in one week, make up this number. The Imperial theater gave their window for the reception of the contributions and all the theaters lent their screens for slides to give the matter every publicity. In the first four days 1,440 were contributed.

Monckton May Have Vaudeville House.

Monckton, N. B.—It is rumored that J. M. Franklin contemplates a vaudeville house in Monckton in conjunction with those he has control of at St. John and Halifax.

Notes of the Trade.

St. John, N. B.—Charles Berman, of the Regal Films, Ltd., has just signed up a very big contract in the Maritime Provinces for Goldwyn. R. J. McAdam will run these pictures in his houses in Halifax and Sydney, B. C., beginning Oct. 25, starting off with "Polly of the Circus." He takes 26 pictures a year.

West St. John, N. B.—William Smith, of the Empress, West St. John, has contracted for World-Brady pictures and will show them from the 3rd of October.

Chatham, N. B.—Harry Rich has lately remodeled the Royal theater at Chatham, which has been closed for many months. He will change his program six time a week at first.

Buffalo News Letter.

By James A. McGuire, 152 Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Freight Congestion Blocks Film Deliveries.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Buffalo film exchanges are hit hard by the embargo that the American Express has declared in this vicinity. About fifty carloads of merchandise to be shipped by express are congested in Buffalo, due to the scarcity of competent help and car shortage. Exchange managers are besieged with telephone calls from indignant patrons, who complain that they have not received films sent days ago. Most of the Buffalo exchange men are now delivering film by auto to nearby towns. In most cases, however, the express company is endeavoring to push the films through, minus advertising matter. Without his posters, the exhibitor, of course, is at a disadvantage and a speedy solution of the situation is desired.

H. L. Martin Is World Film Representative.

Buffalo, N. Y.—H. L. Martin is the new representative for the World Film, Buffalo, to cover the Western New York territory.

Film Men Join National Army.

Buffalo, N. Y.—George Landis, who recently accepted a position on the World staff, to succeed J. W. Child, now at Camp Dix, has also been drafted.

H. Lorence, of the Mutual sales staff, left Wednesday for Camp Dix.

Notes from Buffalo Mutual Office.

Buffalo, N. Y.—J. Howard Morgan, formerly of the General forces, Buffalo, has been appointed salesman for the Mutual, to succeed C. J. Rose, who is now with the Pathe.

Miss Rosenhan has been appointed chief bookkeeper in the Mutual offices, succeeding Miss Rose O'Neil, who is now with the Select Service in the same capacity.

Operator Henry Cole Is Sick.

Johnson City, N. Y.—Henry Cole, operator of Johnson City, N. Y., writes that he is on the sick list with stomach trouble "It's like pulling teeth to have to step out of the theater, but I hope to be back soon," said Mr. Cole.

Carl Nielson Comes to Pathe Office.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Carl Nielson, former cashier for the Pathe at Dallas, has been transferred in the same capacity to the company's Buffalo office. Mr. Nielson has come north in hope of improving his health. He was with the Pathe at Atlanta for eight months.

H. E. Hughes Now Pathe Road Man.

Buffalo, N. Y.—H. E. Hughes has been appointed road man for the Pathe, Buffalo, covering the Southern tier.

Fisher and Colligan Open Home at Olean.

Olean, N. Y.—Lang's Dreamland will be opened Sept. 29 at Oleon, N. Y., by Messrs. Fisher and Colligan. The opening production will be "War and the Woman," featuring Florence La Bady.

New Theater Building in Westfield.

Westfield, N. Y.—Contractor Carson, of Westfield, N. Y., is building a theater there to open Oct. 15. There will be a seating capacity of 9,500. Mr. Carson will run vaudeville in conjunction with the regular pictures.

Buffalo Short Items.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harry Scott, Eastern division manager for the George Kleine System, called on Manager Green at the Kleine offices, Buffalo, this week.

J. E. Kimberley, manager of the World, Buffalo, has returned from New York, where he went for a private screening of "Rasputin, The Black Monk," a new film to be released in Buffalo shortly.

The George Kleine System, Buffalo, has added a new shipping man and a stenographer.

Film Business in Philadelphia Prospers

Both Theaters and Exchanges Feel the Revival of Good Trade—There Are Many Excellent Pictures Offered and More Patrons Than Before.

By F. V. Armato, 144 N. Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Prosperity is here and is making itself felt at the local theaters and exchanges. The exhibitors are extensively advertising in the newspapers, and besides this they have good strong film attractions to advertise. The cumulative value of such a perfect condition of affairs if continued throughout this season will undoubtedly not only insure far greater efforts on the part of the producers for the future, but will ultimately establish a new record in the annals of the motion picture industry in this community.

A. G. Ford Will Represent American Photoplay.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A. G. Ford, formerly of the Bluebird exchange, is now representing the American Photoplay Company and will start on an extended tour throughout the state booking their first big Adgen release, "The Lust of the Ages," a superproduction, featuring Lillian Walker in the principal role. Mr. Ford is also president of the Philadelphia M. P. Salesmen Association and their second fall meeting has been called for Saturday, Sept. 29.

"In the Wake of the Huns" at Stanley.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"In the Wake of the Huns," Pathe's new war series, was given a great reception upon its first presentation at the Stanley. Not only were they interesting to a great extent, but they showed clearly the type of human monster that has ravished the peaceful homes of the French people.

H. W. Given Now Booking "The Crisis."

Philadelphia, Pa.—Herbert W. Given, once the popular manager of the Triangle, is now in charge of the bookings on the "Crisis' for Jacob Theis, who has opened local offices at 1309 Vine street. Mr. Theis is the owner of the Orpheum theater in Wilkes-Barre and controls the state rights for this splendid production. Being a shrewd film buyer, he is expected to gradually increase the number of his film attractions.

Special Productions in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Special feature productions presented at the prominent theaters during the week of Sept. 24 were as follows:

Margaret Mayo's delightful farce starring Madge Kennedy, which made its premier at the Stanley, was shown for an entire week to a large number of spectators, which looks well for these Goldwyn pictures. In addition, "In the Wake of the Huns," the first authoritative pictures of this character, taken under the supervision of the French Government, were royally received.

At the Palace "The Spy" was the William Fox offering, with Dustin Farnum in the principal role, during the first half and Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus," a Goldwyn production, during the last part of the week.

New productions on view at the Regent were Dustin Farnum in "North of Fifty-three," Vivian Martin in "Sunset Trail" and Fannie Ward in "On the Level."

The Victoria enjoyed the novelty of a Metro week, during which period "Their Compact," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne and Olga Petrova in "Silent Sellers" was shown.

The Arcadia presented William Farnum in "When a Man Sees Red."

The Strand, Mme. Petrova in "Exile," and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

Nixon-Colonial and the Locust presented George Walsh in "The Yankee Way."

At the Belmont, Julia Sanderson in "The Runaway," Margaret Fisher in "The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up," and Ann Murdock in the "Outcast," were the first run productions.

Two New Theaters in Shamokin.

Shamokin, Pa.—G. J. Higgins and L. J. Chamberlain are both busily engaged in the construction of their new theaters here. As they are both exhibitors who have had a considerable amount of experience in this field, the results are being watched with great interest.

W. C. Hunt Now Has Palm Theater.

Collingswood, N. J.—W. C. Hunt has taken over the attractive Palm theater in Collingswood, N. J., for the new season. After a thorough overhauling, this house will open with Artcraft and Paramount productions, starting about Oct. 1.

Lee Child Players Visit Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Lee Children—Jane and Catherine—and their mother, Mrs. Irene Lee, were visitors to this city on Saturday and paid a special visit to the Palace theater to pay their respects to Manager Jay Mastbaum. The Lee "kids" are probably the most famous of the young stars of the screen today. Their recent appearance in the star roles in "Two Little Imps" is remembered with delight, and they have also had important parts in "Neptune's Daughter," "A Daughter of the Gods" and many other Wm. Fox productions.

Short Note of the Trade.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Pete Magara, of the Regent theater, experienced the biggest attendance at house on the occasion of the presentation of "Joan, the Woman."

Philadelphia, Pa.—Oscar Morgan, general sales manager of the Artcraft and Paramount, speaking from personal experience and observation, states that the extremely cheerful mood of the visiting exhibitors is quite noticeable and bespeaks a healthy condition of affairs.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Greater Vitagraph Co. is now occupying the entire building on 12th street, above Race, and J. S. Hebrew reports excellent bookings for the opening of the new season and is confident of a bright outlook.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Paramount exchange will shortly announce the date for the trade showing of their new serial, "Who Is No. 1," featuring Kathleen Clifford Philadelphia, Pa.—W. S. Jones, of the Palm theater, has booked the "Crisis" for the first showing in the Kensington district.

Capital City News Letter.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Theaters Will Have Collection Boxes for Tobacco Fund.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—All of the exhibitors in this city have agreed to the placing of collection boxes in their lobbies for the receipt of contributions to the Washington Times soldiers' tobacco fund. As a result of this action, to say nothing of the personal contributions that the moving picture men are making, it is hoped that the local film industry will be able to supply funds for the purchase of a large number of packages of the "weed" for the boys in the trenches and mobilization camps.

Everywhere one goes now his attention is attracted to tobacco and Red Cross savings boxes. Sidney B. Lust aided in the distribution of the former among the theaters, going around to the houses personally with a representative of the Washington Times.

Film Men Off to the Army.

Washington, D. C.—The film men had brought home to them very forcibly the fact that the United States is actually in the war when they saw posted the names of the boys who are to go from Washington, and watched trainloads of men, some in khaki, others still in their civilian attire, going through the railroad station en route to the training camps or ports of embarkation.

But the industry here is hit hardest when they see the names of those who have been engaged in the business, who have been drawn for service under the selective draft. True, there have been several who have won commissions in the army, but the thrill comes when attention is drawn to and centered on the boys who will carry the rifles. Way up, topping the list, the first men to go from here are Guy Elwood Brandt, assistant manager of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay exchange, and Frederick Gooch, an operator. Although sorry to see them go, deep down in their hearts their former associates are proud of them.

"Doc" Henry A. Johnston Dies.

Washington, D. C.—Exhibitors and exchangemen alike received a great shock last week when the news spread among them that their old friend, "Doc." Henry A. Johnston, had answered the final call. Their friend had passed away Sept. 18, at his home in Riverdale, Md., quite suddenly, heart failure having been the cause of his demise.

Dr. Johnston was a druggist by profession. When he retired from the drug business some years ago he became connected with the moving picture business. He was secretary of the Crandall Amusement Company and was interested in the Home theater in the northeast section. For a number of years he served as Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World and at the time of his death was connected also with a newspaper in his home town. Dr. Johnston was interested in a number of things connected with the moving picture business and had been spending considerable time of late in a new patent he had taken out on talking pictures.

Dr. Johnson was born in Portsmouth, Va., Nov. 10, 1854. As a boy he came to Washington and attended Gonzaga and West End High Schools. He held life membership in B. B. French Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M.; Columbia Royal Arch Chapter No. 1, and Washington Commandery No. 1, each claimed him as a member and he was an officer in Almas Temple, Mystic Shrine, for six years.

M. Eiseman Taken On by Mutual.

Washington, D. C.—Manager Evans, of the Mutual exchange in this city, has added to his forces M. Eiseman, brother of Clarence Eiseman, his assistant, who is in charge of the Baltimore branch. The newcomer was at one time connected with the Mutual's Philadelphia exchange, although more lately he has been in another line.

Georgia Theater Becomes Park View.

Washington, D. C.—E. H. Johnson, formerly of Baltimore, Md., in which city he is said to have been interested in a motion picture theater, has taken over the Georgia theater, on Georgia avenue, Northwest, and has renamed it the Park View. The new manager has gone to considerable expense in putting the house into first-class shape. The interior has been renovated to a considerable extent, while the exterior has been repainted. The Georgia has changed hands a number of times during the past few years, but with a new name, a new painted exterior, overhauled interior, and management along progressive lines, it should prove a good venture. It is in a good residential location.

Super Film Attractions Incorporates.

Washington, D. C.—Sidney B. Lust, who is a well known state rights distributor in this section, announces the incorporation under the laws of the District of Columbia of the Super Film Attractions, Incorporated. He will be the president of the new concern, which is capitalized at $50,000, with ten per cent. paid in. Associated with him in the new venture are David Wiener and M. Levinson, the former of Washington, the latter being a California man.

The new corporation has been formed to take care of the big releases that Mr. Lust will handle through his exchange, located at 903 E street, Northwest. He is now booking well-known features and is making arrangements for others. "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," "The Whip," "War as It Really Is," and "On Trial" are among the productions that will be marketed by the new concern.

C. R. Milliman Visits World Office.

Washington, D. C.—A recent visitor at the Washington office of the Moving Picture World was C. R. Milliman, former manager of the Universal exchange here, now an inspector of airplanes and airplane enplanes for Uncle Sam. Mr. Milliman has just returned from an extended tour of the West with the Italian Mission, members of which have been startling Washington with wonderful airplane flights.

Mr. Milliman carried with him on this trip and exhibited in the cities where stops were made, official pictures furnished by the Italian, French and English Governments showing the activities of their aircraft in the war zone. Immediately upon his return to Washington he was ordered to make a tour of inspection through the South, and he will leave next week, accompanied by Mrs. Milliman, who will accompany him to celebrate their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. Mr. Milliman's services are also in no little demand in connection with Government-owned motion pictures depicting work in the various branches of the service.

NOTES FROM NORTH CAROLINA.

By D. M. Bain, Wilmington, N. C.

Algonia Film Opens Office.

CHARLESTON, S. C.—The latest entry into the states rights field in the Algonia Feature Film exchange, of this city, of which G. S. Brantley is president, S. J. Jones manager and G. J. L. Metz secretary, handling several state rights productions for North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Florida, Georgia and Arkansas, their headliners being "The Garden of Allah," "At the Front with the Allies" and "Marvelous Maciste."

They are booking on either a percentage or straight rental basis, and are contending for reasonable film rentals, being exhibitors themselves. They are quoting exhibitors extremely reasonable rentals, with the option of paying percentage if they so desire. Mr. J. Withers, a film man of many years' experience, is calling on the trade in North and South Carolina and reports bookings in almost every town visited.

Paul V. Phillips Goes to Atlanta Goldwyn.

Wilmington, N. C.—Paul V. Phillips, recently traveling the Carolina territory for the Washington Vitagraph exchange, has accepted a position with the Atlanta Goldwyn office, which handles this territory from that branch under the management of Arthur Lucas. Mr. Phillips is now making his first tour of his territory in the interest of Goldwyn productions.

Wilmington, N. C.—P. W. Wells, president of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company returned this week from a business trip to New Orleans and Atlanta.

Week's Filmdom Doings in Baltimore

Politicians Are After the Vacant Censorship Job and Its $2,400 a Year Salary—Many Theaters Are Aiding in Patriotic Activities.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—And lo! it now comes to pass that the politicians get busy again, for it behooves the high executive of the state of Maryland to make a new appointment to the much desired position of motion picture censor on the board of three for the State of Maryland. There has been a vacancy caused on the Censor Board by the death of Wm. F. Stone, who represented the Republican party. Of course, a Republican must now be appointed, and those who have been mentioned as having thrown their hats in the ring, include: Edward L. Livingston, special representative of the Citizens State Bank of Baltimore; Philip W. Truehart, son-in-law of former Censor Stone; J. Edward Richardson, Clarendon I. T. Gould, and Assistant State's Attorney Harry W. Nice. The salary for this position is $2,400 per year, and the continuation of the present term for the newly appointed censor will be until next year, but as Mr. Harrington will still be Governor the same appointments will probably be made, which will give the new censor practically a four-year term.

Cardinal Gibbons Praises "Christus."

Baltimore, Md.—Gaston Weinstein, manager of the religious historical play, "Christus," which was recently shown at Ford's opera house, in this city, to large audiences, recently received a letter from Cardinal Gibbons, in which he highly praised the picture presentation of the life of the Savior as "instructive and realistic." Besides this, the letter stated, "Your pictures are beautiful and respectful, and should have a beneficial influence on many people."

Several Theaters Aid Tobacco Fund.

Baltimore, Md.—Several more of Baltimore's motion picture theaters are aiding the cause by giving benefits for the Army Girl's Transport Tobacco Fund. Last week, George A. McDermitt, of Loew's Hippodrome theater, had an especially attractive act with the Hoosier Girls, and at the end of each performance these dainty misses tripped through the audience making requests for donations to the cause.

Then, on Thursday night, September 27, staunch old Eugene B. McCurdy, proprietor of the Lafayette theater, 1433 West Lafayette avenue, ran the picture, "The Beautiful Lie," and donated a percentage of the gross receipts to the cause.

On Tuesday, Manager Waski, of the Idle Hour theater, 223 North Howard street, screened "The Halfback," and gave a percentage to help the fund.

Children's Shows at the Rialto.

Baltimore, Md.—A. B. Price, manager of the Rialto theater, Linden and North avenues, and Myer Fox, president of the Linden Company, operating this theater, have now arranged to have regular Saturday morning children's matinees, at which specially arranged pictures for the kiddies will be shown. The little Mary McAllister pictures will be featured, which will be augmented by comedies of a selected nature and educationals.

Private Showings and Hits.

Baltimore, Md.—On Friday night, September 21, a private showing of "Scenes After the Russian Revolution," in four reels, was held at the Garden theater, Lexington street, at Park avenue, after 11 p. m.

During the week of September 24, Frederick C. Schanberger, manager of the Maryland theater, a vaudeville house of the Keith circuit, in this city, ran as a feature on his program, the Pathe production, "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras."

Through special arrangements made by L. Rosenthal, manager of the General Film Exchange, in this city, with Guy L. Wonders, the progressive manager of the Wilson theater, 418 East Baltimore street, a private screening for exhibitors and their friends of two of the latest O. Henry productions was given.

George Benjamin, manager of the Red Moon theater, 20 West Baltimore street, states that he did fine business on Saturday, September 22, with William Russell in "The Fighting Gentleman," and Charlie Chaplin in "The Immigrant."

Maryland Theaters Aid Patriotism.

Hagerstown, Md. — Following a fine banquet given for, and in honor of the selected men from Washington County, and a big parade which were held on Wednesday, September 26, Earnest Westfall, manager of the Maryland theater, of this city, saw to it that the men were well treated at a theater party which they all attended at this house, through his courtesy. Comfort bags were distributed to the future soldiers.

Chestertown, Md.—On the night of Tuesday, September 25, the first 29 of Kent County's selected men, which went to Camp Meade on the following day, were the guests of L. Bates Russell, proprietor of the Lyceum theater, at this house for an especially arranged program.

Cumberland, Md.—State and city officials paid honor to the selected men from this city on the night of Tuesday, September 25, and after a delightful banquet and a well arranged parade, an enthusiastic patriotic meeting was held at the Maryland theater, through the courtesy of the Mellenger Brothers.

Exit Lexington Theater.

Baltimore, Md.—On Saturday, September 29, Mrs. I. W. Putts, proprietor of the Lexington theater, 314 West Lexington street, closed this house to the public, not to be reopened. It is understood that the property has been leased by a millinery firm from Norfolk, Va., and it will be remodeled to be used as this kind of an establishment.

Harry Lewy Films Artillery Company.

Baltimore, Md.—That progressive motion picture man, Harry Lewy, who is co-proprietor of the Great Wizard theater, 30 West Lexington street, is becoming very prominent in Baltimore, due to his unceasing activities in going around on all occasions with his camera and shooting all the patriotic things he can lay his hands on. At Fort Howard Brother Lewy got some extraordinary views of the Maryland Coast Artillery boys.

Baltimore Business Notes.

Baltimore, Md.—W. A. Busch, who is now acting as traveling representative for Paramount, visited Baltimore on Saturday, September 15, and called on his many friends in this city.

Myer Fox, president of the Linden Company, operating the Rialto theater, North avenue at Linden, spent last week at Atlantic City.

Norma Talmadge in "The Moth" packed them in at the New theater during the week of September 10. Gail Kane in "The Bride's Silence" had them standing three rows deep during the first three days of the week at the New during the week of September 17.

There was a Red Cross benefit held at the Parkway theater on Thursday, September 20, through the courtesy of Manager Depkin.

"Christus," the spectacular and historical picture, remained a second week at Ford's, beginning Monday, September 17

Cleveland Exhibitors Offer Compromise

Fifty-three Picture Houses Represented at Meeting Which Makes Offer to Local Operators' Union to Meet Them Half Way.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, O.

CLEVELAND, O.—Organized for the purpose of adjusting the differences relative to the new wage scale proposed by the Cleveland operators' union, the exhibitors of Cleveland, big and little theater owners, held a meeting last week and decided to offer a compromise rate that they hold will be more in accord with busines conditions.

Fifty-three theaters were represented, while about a score more managers sent word or telephoned that, although they could not get to the meeting, they wished to stand by any action the organization took.

A committee of nine was named to treat with the union committee. These were Messrs. Downs, Adler and Greenbaum, of the large first-run houses; Messrs. Kalafat, Nolen and Aubley, of the smaller downtown theaters, and Messrs. Deutsch, Simpson and Bullock of the neighborhood theaters.

One member of this committee voiced the sentiments of the exhibitors, when he said:

"We believe, as the union does, that every man should be paid the same according to the hours he works. While it was proposed that we submit a sliding scale, according to the size of theaters, we felt that this would not be just to the operators. So we figured it every way possible and came to the conclusion that this amount per hour would not work a hardship upon the smaller theaters, and at the same time it would be a substantial increase for the operators. And we figured that the operators should be paid just like the men of other trades—by the hour."

The union asked for increases equivalent to about 33 per cent. over their present wages and the exhibitors' increase amounts to over 15 per cent.

Banks Won't Leave Exhibitor Alone.

Akron, Ohio.—Banks and bankers are bound to interfere with James P. Dunlevy, veteran picture man of Akron. Mr. Dunlevy formerly operated the Bank theater, but a bank which owned the building would not release it and last spring the Bank theatre went out of existence.

J. P. Dunlevy.

Now, another bank is delaying his picture prospects. The old Main theater is in his hands and Jim expects to open it up, after remodeling and making many improvements. But a bank is building a home next door and is temporarily occupying the Main theater. It will be the middle of October before Mr. Dunleavy can get into his new house.

Morgan Lithograph to Have New Home.

Cleveland, O.—The Morgan Lithograph Company, which claims to be the biggest manufacturer of moving picture posters in the world, has filed plans for a new two-story building to be erected at 1607 Payne avenue, Cleveland. This will cost $125,000. The present plant of the Morgan company, at East Third street and St. Clair avenue, is working night and day to keep up with its business.

J. H. Norwood New K-E-S-E. Manager.

Cleveland, O.—Miles F. Gibbons, manager of the K-E-S-E exchange at Cleveland, has been transferred to the position of manager of the New York City exchange and left last week for his new duties Mr. Gibbons is succeeded at Cleveland by J. H. Norwood, who has been with that branch for about six months. He has been out on the road most of the time and now has a very good acquaintance with the exhibitors both in and out of Cleveland.

The many friends of Mr. Gibbons are sorry to see him go from their midst, but at the same time they wish him the very best of success.

E. M. Franklin Opens Foursquare Office.

Cleveland, O.—The Foursquare Pictures, Inc., have opened their Cleveland headquarters and their season of exhibition also. The office is in charge of E. M. Franklin and it is handling "The Bar Sinister," "The Sin Woman," "The Silent Witness," "Her Fighting Chance," "Madam Sherry" and others. The first showing in Cleveland of a Foursquare picture is a week at the Strand, starting September 23 of "The Sin Woman." The Fiber and Shea theaters in Akron, Canton and Youngstown have booked "The Bar Sinister."

Cincinnati News Letter.

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, O.

Stanley W. Hand Heads Cincinnati Exchange.

CINCINNATI, O.—The Cincinnati office of the World Film Corporation is in the hands of Stanley W. Hand as manager, Mr. Hand having taken charge several days ago, following the resignation of Harris Hurst, who has become district sales manager for the Delco Light Products Co. at South Bend, Ind. Mr. Hand has been with the World organization in various capacities for several years, having been manager of the Boston exchange, assistant to the general sales manager in New York, and having wide experience on the road as well. Incidentallly, he is by no means a stranger to Cincinnati and its vicinity, as he covered this territory on the road several years ago. He has taken hold of the World interests in Cincinnati with energy, the release of several unusually striking pictures assisting materially in giving him a first-class start. Montagu Love and a strong cast in "Rasputin, the Black Monk," was the first privately exhibited film shown by Mr. Hand, following which it was booked by local exhibitors, starting with the Family.

Stanley W. Hand.

Lawrence Bueche Plans for Next Summer.

Cincinnati, O.—Lawrence Bueche, proprietor of the Queen Anne theater, on Colerain avenue, is planning the construction of a spacious airdome on a lot adjoining the theater, and with the assistance of S. S. and G. H. Godley, local architects, is working out the details along unusual lines. One feature out of the ordinary will be the use of the front end of the lot for a two-story brick building in which stores and offices will be located. This structure will front 60 feet on Colerain avenue and will be 41 feet deep. Entrance to the airdome will be through arcades on each side of the new building, one of the stores in which will probably house an ice cream parlor and soda fountain, while on the second floor the projection booth of the airdome will be located. The building will contain its own electric plant, which will provide current for the pictures. The airdome will seat 732 persons.

Two Programs a Week for Winter.

Cincinnati, O.—The Family theater has gone back to the two-program schedule for the winter season, changing from the three-program plan which for several months has been in effect. Manager Libson announced this change recently, having decided that with the more active business of the winter months the stimulus of an additional change of program weekly is no longer needed. The program will be changed on Sunday and Thursday, as formerly, and as the rule has always been at the Strand since Manager Libson opened that house.

No Unpatriotic Words at the Grand.

Cincinnati, O.—The great record of the Grand opera house with its run of "The Birth of a Nation," widely known as a patriotic picture, makes peculiarly striking the action of Manager John Havlin recently in warning the Peoples' Church, a local organization, that in its Sunday meetings in the theater no speakers unfriendly to the Government or to the war will be allowed. This warning was considered necessary on account of the fact that one of the prominent men in the organization is known as a warm Socialist of the pacifist sort, who has been conspicuous in anti-war work in Cincinnati, and Mr. Havlin is determined that his theater shall not be used for unpatriotic purposes. "I have heretofore never concerned myself with the sentiments or arguments advanced on any subject by your speakers," he said in a letter to the organization on this point, "but I desire to call your attention to the fact that I am leasing you the theater for Sunday afternoons for legal purposes only, and that any arguments publicly expressed or any stand taken by any speaker in your coming meetings which may be against the policy of the United States Government in the conduct of the war against our enemies, or any pleas in behalf of the enemies of the United States Government, will be considered by me as an illegal use of the Grand opera house and against public policy."

Business Notes From Southern Ohio.

Cincinnati, O.—Messrs. "Jack" Conant and R. Knoepfle, of the Fox Film Co.'s Cincinnati office, had the honor of entertaining distinguished visitors from headquarters recently. W. R. Sheehan, general manager, and P. C. Mooney, district manager, were with them for a few days. There was a conference regarding general conditions in this territory, and all concerned were entirely satisfied with the developments remarked.

Cincinnati, O.—According to Gus Muller, manager of the Select Cincinnati exchange, the Auditorium theater, of Dayton, is one of the handsomest houses in the state. Mr. Muller was in Dayton at the recent opening of the theater after its extensive remodeling, and, incidentally, to see the screening there of a Select release, "The Lone Wolf." The Auditorium lobby has been greatly enlarged, while new decorations throughout make the house seem like new. Manager Vil Burrows has inaugurated several little innovations which lend an air to his house.

Lima, O.—The Orpheum theater, and all of the picture shows in the city, devoted their net proceeds one day recently to the benefit of the mess fund for the Second Regiment Supply Company, which was organized in Lima, and as the citizens of the town felt a direct personal interest in the boys, the results were seen in a very handsome addition to the company's treasury.

Youngstown, O.—The initial showing in this city of "The Spy," the great Fox picture, was at the Park theater, and the management reports excellent attendance. Unusual interest was aded not only on account of the timeliness of the picture, taken in connection with the recent exposures by Federal secret service men, but on account of the legal fight centering around the picture in Chicago. No such trouble was experienced in Youngstown, however, nor has been heard of in any other Ohio city.

Interesting Notes from Ontario.

Toronto, Ont.—J. F. Brown has made arrangements for the erection of a new moving picture theater at New Toronto, a booming suburb of Toronto, to cost $10,000. Several large industrial companies have recently established large factories at New Toronto.

London, Ont.—The Empire theater, London, Ont., has changed hands, the new manager being Mr. King, of Goderich. Announcement has also been made that Mr. Hirsch, of the Princess theater, of St. Thomas, has also sold out to Mr. King.

Lindsay, Ont.—W. H. Roenigk, of Lindsay, Ont., has made considerable alteration in the box office and lobby of his theater in that city.

Toronto, Ont.—S. Besvinick, formerly of the Empress theater, Toronto, has become manager of the Playtorium, Toronto. He has contracted for Pathe service.

Winnipeg, Man.—W. H. Mitchell is the new manager of the Pathe office in Winnipeg, Man.

Toronto, Ont.—Acting Manager Mitchell of the Regent theater, Toronto, has had a great programme of big releases for the month of September. This house started off with "The Barrier" during the first week of the month. This was followed up with "Polly of the Circus." Next came "On Trial," which was followed by the Goldwyn "Baby Mine." The Ilidor feature, "Fall of the Romanoffs," and Metro's "The Slacker," are also on the books for screening at the Regent theater at an early date.

Toronto—Two extras of importance were privately screened in the theater of the Canadian Universal here on September 13. These were the Universal special, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" and the Friedman production, "A Mormon Maid," which is a six-part drama.

Toronto.—Two down-town theaters of Toronto, the Globe and Rialto, doubled during the week of September 17 for the presentation of "The Whip." This well-known feature was shown at both houses from 9 A. M. to 11 P. M. each day, messengers carrying the reels back and forth as they were projected. The Globe and Rialto are about three blocks apart.

Toronto.—More than twelve Toronto theaters have signed for Goldwyn productions. The Regent gets the first run and those which follow include the Madison, Crown, Coliseum, College Playhouse, Brighton, U-Kum, Park, Doris, York, Dundas Playhouse, Beaver and the Aster.

Toronto.—With the offering of "The Public Be Damned" during the week of September 24, a new policy will be started by Manager Clarence Robson for the Strand, Toronto. The changes will affect the number of programmes per week, the booking of features and the presentation of added features.

Film Happenings in Toronto Last Week

Death of Samuel W. Davidson Following Operation for Appendicitis—Among Ontario Exhibitors—Business Notes.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street East, Toronto.

TORONTO, ONT.—The death has occurred at Toronto of Samuel W. Davidson, popularly known as "Walley" Davidson, Toronto branch manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Pathe distributors, and one of the best known film exchange men in Canada, in St. Michael's Hospital, Thursday, Sept. 20, following an operation for appendicitis which was performed three weeks before. The immediate cause of death was an internal hemorrhage, which brought his end with tragic suddenness on the very day when he expected to be discharged from the hospital. The funeral was held from the chapel of Bates and Dodds, College street, to Prospect Cemetery, on Saturday afternoon, Sept. 23, the service being conducted by Rev. Dr. MacGillivray, of Bonar Presbyterian church. The pall bearers, who included a number of intimate friends in the film business, were as follows: T. Meeghan, Ross Clarke, W. J. Barrett, Charles Stevens, Harry Law and Vincent McCabe.

The late Mr. Davidson was a Canadian by birth, born in London, Ontario, thirty-four years ago. He came to Toronto when a child and his parents, a sister and three brothers, all reside here. After the outbreak of war he became prominently associated with the Sportsmen's Patriotic Association. He started his career in the film business with the Specialty Film Import, Limited, and later became connected with the Toronto headquarters of the Canadian Universal, after which he became Toronto manager of the Metro. A few months ago he returned to the Pathe to take up his late position.

The deceased resided at 436 Bloor street West, while his parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Davidson, are living at 1018 Queen street West, where his sister, Anna, also resides. His three brothers are Robert, James and Frank. James Davidson is also associated with the Toronta Pathe office but was in the film business in Chicago last spring.

Both telegrams of condolence and many floral remembrances were received from the late Mr. Davidson's numerous business associates throughout Canada.

Famous Will Handle Select Pictures in Canada.

Toronto, Ont.—It is announced by J. J. Allen that arrangements have been made whereby the Famous Players Film Service becomes the Canadian distributor of Select Pictures. This company also handles all Paramount, Artcraft, Christie and other releases in Canada.

Harry Pomeroy Will Guide Globe Theater.

Toronto, Ont.—Harry Pomeroy, the energetic manager of the Photodrome, Toronto, became manager of the Globe theater here on Monday, Sept. 24. Incidentally, Manager Coulson, of the Globe theater, again assumes the management of the Photodrome. Pomeroy, who is also well known in Buffalo theater circles, has made a name for himself because of his striking lobby displays.

Film Tells Story of the Convalescent Soldier.

Toronto, Ont.—Moving pictures are being taken by W. J. Craft, formerly of the Kalem and other companies, all over Canada as a record of the life of returned convalescent soldiers in the Dominion. The views are being taken under the direction of the Military Hospitals Commission and prints are to be released.

Combination Ticket at Regent Theater.

Toronto, Ont.—The use of Provincial war tax tickets has been abolished at the Regent through the adoption of a new form of ticket, which is a combination of the Government tax and an admission ticket. Permission for this arrangement was secured from the Ontario Government and the tickets are printed by the Bryant Press, which also turns out the Government tickets by the million. A check is kept on the number of tickets by the theater and the Bryant Press and, in addition, Manager Mitchell makes an official report of tickets sold once every month to the authorities. The new arrangement saves considerable time when tickets are sold at the box office and also in bookkeeping.

Prices Made Plain to Patrons of Strand.

Toronto, Ont.—Manager Clarence Robson, with the able assistance of Bill Dineen, put over a good stunt for "The Public Be Damned" at the Strand theater, Toronto, during the week of Sept. 24. The entire front lobby was given the appearance of a grocery store and the large quantity of foodstuffs on display were labelled with high prices. One of the interesting details of the setting was a coop which housed live chickens.

Ben Cronk Will Manage the Allen.

Toronto, Ont.—Jules and J. J. Allen, who control the Famous Players service and the circuit of Allen theaters in Canada, are busily engaged with the handsome Allen theater in Toronto. This theater will open in October under the management of Ben Cronk, formerly of Calgary. Mary Pickford's "The Little American" will be the first attraction. Paramount and Artcraft features will be shown exclusively at the new Allen and it will have first selection from fifty-two different releases controlled by the Allens in the Dominion.

New Colonial Has Been Beautified.

Toronto, Ont.—Manager McMillan celebrated the opening of his "New Colonial" theater, Queen street West, Toronto, during the week of Sept. 17, by the holding of two important trade shows. On Wednesday, Sept. 19, many local exhibitors witnessed the screening of the first six episodes of "The Red Ace," the new Universal serial the plot of which is laid in Canada. On the following day three of the fifteen episodes of Pathe's "The Seven Pearls" were also shown to many exhibitors.

The latter had ample opportunity to examine the new details of the refurnished and redecorated house and Manager McMillan received many congratulations. The whole theater, interior and exterior, was renovated without interfering with the operation of the house in any way. The interior is very attractive in a blue and white effect with suitable paintings and draperies of cretonne. The striking exterior is obtained with a contrast of white and doors of trim in mahogany.

Manager Fegan Exonerated.

Toronto, Ont.—The charge against Manager Fegan, of the Eclipse and Broadview theaters, Toronto, of making illegal use of war tax tickets, was immediately dismissed when he was able to prove in court, with the aid of his books and reports to the Government, that he was not reselling the Government tickets instead of destroying them as used. Police spotters swore that they used old war tax tickets but Mr. Fegan denied this. His statement of house receipts tallied exactly with his purchases of war tax tickets from the Government.

Sam Sternberg, chief confidential clerk of the Allen interests throughout Canada, was recently married to Miss City in Winnipeg, the couple making a tour of Calgary, Edmonton, Banff and Minneapolis for their honeymoon.

Sunday Shows Unmolested in Memphis

Mayor Litty Says the City Commissioners Will Enforce the Blue Laws—Houses Are Opened as Usual and There Is No Trouble.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—The Sunday opening of the theaters is consuming a large part of public attention in this city, and nobody seesm to know just what the present status is going to develop. Chancellor Francis Fentress on September 21 dissolved injunctions restraining the police from closing the amusement places, and dismissed the bills, automatically eliminating appeal from his decision. Mayor H. H. Litty stated that the attitude of the city comissioners toward the Sunday lid had not changed since the police were ordered to enforce the Sunday closing laws.

Chief Quinlan and Inspector Hayes of the police department predicted that proprietors or managers which tried to operate picture theaters on Sunday would be arrested and required to post forfeits for their appearance in court, and that a patrolman would be placed in front of each house to prevent reopening after the managers had made bond.

Chancellor Fentress' action was based on the belief that courts of equity have no power to restrain the enforcement of criminal statutes or city ordinances. He held that the temporary injunction restraining the police from closing the theaters and arresting their managers had been "improvidently" granted.

Arrangements have been made by attorneys for the theater managers to ask the Court of Civil Appeals for a writ of supersedeas which, if granted, will obtain review by the higher court of the legal point involved.

Theaters Open As Usual.

The first Sunday following the order found the theaters open as usual, and doing a thriving business. No notices had been received by the police department officially notifying them of the action to be taken against the shows if they opened, the only written orders having been contained in an "ultimatum" issued September 1, which was likewise disregarded. So far as could be learned, no orders had been isued patrolmen to make arrests. It was reported that for the purpose of settling the Sunday question once and for all, one theater manager would be arrested and the case tried for test purposes, but up until a late hour Sunday this intention had not been carried out.

Violation of Sunday closing laws in Tennessee is punishable by a fine of $3. Repeated violations are subject to a fine of $50 under the nuisance laws. Following the agitation by the Protestant Pastors' Association some months ago against the opening of moving picture and vaudeville houses on Sunday, arrangements were made whereby all profits accruing from Sunday operation should be turned over to the United Charities for distribution along various lines of charitable work. This action was upheld by City Attorney Livingston as being entirely proper, and the shows were allowed to continue without molestation. Ouster proceedings against Mayor Tom C. Ashcroft some weks ago resulted in the appointment of H. H. Litty, and Mayor Litty has been determined to close the shows ever since his advent into office.

Lawrenceburg House Sold.

Lawrenceburg, Tenn.—The Princess theater has ben sold to Almon J. Sims to E. R. Braley, on acount of Mr. Sims leaving this town to become identified with the Nashville Tennessean & American. The Princess is a 250 capacity house, and has enjoyed a successful career. Mr. Sims, while a resident of Lawrenceburg, was one of the editors of the Lawrence Democrat, and was interested financially in the paper. He has disposed of his part of the Democrat, and will devote his entire time to work on the Nashville paper, being a graduate of the University of Missouri department of journalism.

"Ten of Diamonds" Barred.

Memphis, Tenn.—"The Ten of Diamonds" was recently rejected by the local censor board, under orders from the police department, and taken off the bill at the Majestic No. 1. There could be found nothing radically wrong with the picture by outsiders who witnessed its exhibition, and the film was shown in Nashville a few days later without interference at the Crescent theater.

Small Town Gets "Nation."

Hartsville, Tenn.—"The Birth of a Nation," Griffith's spectacular masterpiece, was exhibited to packed houses at the Hartsville theater the latter part of September, and was accompanied by all the stage effects and orchestral music which characterized its run in the large cities.

"Womanhood" Plays Return.

Nashville, Tenn.—"Womanhood" played a return two days' engagement at the Strand, and enjoyed a good run. At the former presentation here the Strand could not accommodate the crowds which came to see this picture, and Manager Bradford found it necessary to play a return date. Prices were set at 25 cents the first time, and 20 cents on the return.

Birmingham Orpheum Remodeled.

Birmingham, Ala.—A complete overhauling has been given the Orpheum theater, and many added improvements have been installed. A novelty in the local theater field is a soda fountain and cigar counter which has been placed in the up-to-date lobby, where a first-class stock will be carried for the benefit of theater patrons.

After several weks of darkness, the Orpheum is prominent by reason of its new decorations, and promises to have a most successful run. The management has announced that a new program service will be instituted regularly, including such brands as Selig, Kalem, Essanay; Universals, such as Nestor, Joker, Gold Seal, L-Ko, and others, together with a line of short reels by Pathe, Vitagraph and Mutual. Many interesting educationals and travel pictures are included in the latter. Christie and Hoyt comedies have proven a popular drawing card in the past, and these two brands will be continued.

Birmingham Notes.

A picture show party was given a few days ago by A. W. B. Johnson of Birmingham to fifty children at the Alcazar, at which time the popular children's picture, "Jack and the Beanstalk," was projected. Mr. Johnson's guests were composed of child employees of the Avondale Cotton Mills, and were chaperoned by the mill superintendent.

The Bijou, on the Loew string, is being used on Sunday mornings for the purpose of holding community "sings."

Conquest Pictures Free to Children.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The Conquest Pictures, which were formerly exhibited at the Mary Anderson theater, will in the future be shown at the Strand.

These pictures have been under production during the last year, and are in line with the ideals which the Louisville Board of Censors for Children's Motion Pictures has cherished for a long time, but which it has found so difficult to book in the general film market. They are among the most expensive films on the market today. Lee Goldberg, manager of the Strand and Mary Anderson theaters, got these programs because of the local interest to Louisville in them.

The admission will be absolutely free to all children, and adults accompanying children will be admitted for ten cents. A few of the pictures that are booked for the near future include the popular fairy story "Puss in Boots," "A Vanishing Race" (Blackfoot Indians), some nature studies of fish, a comedy dealing with animated manakins, and a dress parade at West Point.

Alamo Patrons Liked "Polly."

Louisville, Ky.—The exhibition of Goldwyn's "Polly of the Circus" in this city met with the most favored approval by the patrons of the Alamo theater. On Friday, Sept. 21, the management offered the children an exceptional opportunity to view the picture. From 10.30 a.m. to 6.00 p.m. children under 12 years of age and accompanied by their parents were admitted free of charge.

The Walnut Will Not Be Dark Long.

Louisville, Ky.—The pending deal for taking over and operating the Walnut theater is still hanging fire, but, due to the fact that patronage is steadily increasing, and the picture theater's opportunities are today greater in Louisville than ever before, due to the increased business in connection with the army camp, it is said that the theater will not be dark much longer. A deal has been under discussion for several days, but so far the principals have been unable to get together. However, the Broadway amusement interests expect to be operating within a very short time, but are losing patronage that it took many months to obtain.

Percy L. Smith Indicted.

Louisville, Ky.—The grand jury has returned three indictments against Percy L. Smith, former manager of the Mutual Film office, of this city, charging embezzlement. It is charged that Smith embezzled $1,223 by fraudulently indorsing checks payable to the corporation and drawing the money. Smith left Louisville several months ago and later the local office was closed.

Arthur Bloomfield Back from Trip.

Winchester, Ky.—Arthur Bloomfield, manager of the Pastime theater, has just returned from a visit to the moving picture studios in New York City. While there Mr. Bloomfield visited the Paramount, World and Fox studios and saw many of the new fall productions in the making. He said the spirit of patriotism has gripped the members of that industry and that most of the stars are spending leisure hours "doing their bit" in various ways. Several new features booked by Mr. Bloomfield for the Pastime include "Joan, the Woman," "Little American," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Camille," "Cleopatra" and "Down to Earth."

M. Switow Leases Shawnee Theater.

Louisville, Ky.—M. Switow, who owns a number of picture theaters in this vicinity, has obtained a lease on the old Shawnee theater, which will henceforth be operated under his management and will show feature and serial pictures. This theater was formerly conducted by Tom Trakus. Mr. Switow has recently purchased a Wurlitzer organ for the Highland Park theater.

Notes from Kentucky.

Louisville, Ky.—The Alamo theater has just finished a most successful exhibition of "Idolaters." The picture was doubly appreciated on account of the fact that Miss Glaum, who plays leads in it, has established a large following here in her recent successful efforts as a movie "vamp."

Sans Souci in Automobile City.

Detroit, Mich.—Dave Prince, manager of the General exchange in Detroit, is a happy bachelor—happy because he has two hobbies—automobiles and bull dogs,

Dave Prince and his Pets.

as proven by the above photograph. When he isn't selling service for his company, you'll find him either riding in his car or playing with his happy family of "Bostons."

New Colonial Theater Opens.

Detroit, Mich.—October 1 was the premiere of the new Colonial theater, Woodward and Sibley streets, more about which will be noted next week.

Theaters and Programs—Business Notes

Detroit, Mich.—Harry S. Lorch, manager of the State Film Company, left Sept. 18 for an extended western and Upper Peninsular trip in Michigan laying out a route for "A Mormon Maid."

Detroit, Mich.—Robert Cotton, of the World Film Corp., has booked "Rasputin, the Black Monk," into the Washington theater for the week ending Oct. 6.

Detroit exhibitors are taking a keen interest in trade showings, as indicated by the large crowds that recently attended the trade showing of the "Red Ace" (Universal serial) and "The Black Monk" (World Special Feature). About 500 people attended each showing.

Tom Ealand, general manager of the Regent and Orpheum theaters, Detroit, has booked a number of Artcraft pictures second run and will show them each a full week.

Dave Mundstock, of the Strand Features, Detroit, has purchased the Michigan rights to "Beware of Strangers."

New Goldwyn contracts secured by A. Shapiro, the Detroit branch manager, are: Martha Washington, Ypsilanti; Gem at Hillsdale; Elite, Kalamazoo; Strand, Family and Norwood theaters, Detroit; Rex, Three Rivers; Star at Allegan, and full week at the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids.

The Dawn Feature Film Co., 204 Owen Building, Detroit, of which A. S. Hyman is general manager, has purchased the Michigan rights to "Redemption," which features Evelyn Nesbit Thaw. It is booked for the Washington theater the week ending Sept. 30. Mr. Hyman has also purchased for his company "The Wrath of the Gods."

The Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, is now showing Mutt and Jeff comedies a full week. They are handled in Michigan through the Standard.

Eddie McGrath, soloist for two years at the Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, is slated to appear in some of the comedies to be produced by the Fun Art Comedy Co.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—The booking of "The Slacker" was changed from the Orpheum to the Majestic Gardens. This delayed the closing of the house for overhauling here. The reopening has been set for September 2.

Detroit Theaters Favor the 15 Cent Seat

Most of the Local Houses Have Abolished the Five-Cent Rate and Are Making Fifteen Cents the Normal Price for Downstairs Seats.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—In calling on various exhibitors in Detroit and adjoining territory during the past week, the Moving Picture World representative noted that a great many had abolished completely five-cent prices, and for evenings were making all seats on the main floor not less than 15 cents and 10 cents upstairs; in fact, some had divided the first floor into 15 and 20-cent sections, with 25 cents for the boxes. Exhibitors are gradually finding out that 15 cents is not an exhorbitant charge for good shows, and that the public does not hesitate to pay that price for a big feature and comedy, and often a scenic added.

It's a fact that in Detroit the day of 10 cents as a first-floor admission price for evenings is gone absolutely; in no first-class house can you find a ten-cent seat downstairs. There are plenty of people in every neighborhood who are glad to pay 15 cents, and even 20 cents, to sit downstairs, while those who want to pay only 10 cents can come either to the matinees or sit upstairs. We are glad that Michigan exhibitors are waking up to the situation of properly arranging their prices so that they can take advantage of the good things offered them by producers, and yet make some money.

Gordon F. Darrah at Ann Arbor Training.

Big Rapids, Mich.—Gordon F. Darrah, of Darrah & Graham, operating the Princess and Cozy theaters, is training at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, for the Quartermaster's Department.

Sold Theater Programs for Tobacco Fund.

Detroit, Mich.—During the week of Sept. 30 John H. Kunsky sold his theater programs for one cent each and turned over $250 to the Free Press Tobacco Fund. In the big patriotic parade of Sept. 18 Mr. Kunsky entered a fifty-piece band led by Edward Wener, who has charge of the Madison theater orchestra.

W. A. Bach Will Start Free Publicity Service.

Detroit, Mich.—W. A. Bach has arrived at the Universal exchange and will install a free service and advertising department for exhibitors, after which he will install similar departments in other Universal exchanges.

J. H. Kunsky Gets New Petrova Pictures.

Detroit, Mich.—John H. Kunsky will get the new super-pictures with Petrova for Michigan as a result of his being a member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. He feels quite elated over the new acquisition because he is assured that these new Patrova pictures are going to be ahead of anything she has ever appeared in. This will mean that Mr. Kunsky will have two stars to offer Michigan exhibitors—the other being the new Chaplin comedies.

Jack Loranger Goes to Pittsburgh.

Detroit, Mich.—Jack Loranger, formerly at the Triangle office, has been transferred to Pittsburgh.

Another Case of Sheer Waste.

Detroit, Mich.—The State Film Co., of Detroit, is out $250 as a result of marked negligence and carelessness on the part of an up-state exhibitor who failed to ship back "A Mormon Maid," as per instructions, which were plain and definite. The exhibitor played the picture on a Saturday and had plenty of time to ship it back so that it would surely be in Detroit by Monday morning, it having been booked Monday afternoon for a Detroit theater. The theater in Detroit had billed the entire neighborhood with one, three and six sheets, had distributed thousands of heralds, had thrown slides on his screen for the previous week and used a full page in his own program to advertise the coming event. Monday morning came no picture, Monday noon no picture, and Monday night no picture. Manager Lorch of the State Film Company tried his best to get the up-state exhibitor on the phone and even sent three telegrams asking what he had done with the film, but was unable to get a response. As a consequence the Detroit exhibitor had to disappoint the packed audiences that came, whereas the loss was really shouldered by the State Film Company, amounting to $250. This is just an example of what happens when exhibitors do not ship film as they are instructed to.

Screen Ball Coming for Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—Plans are under way to hold a screen ball at the Hotel Statler some time in October. It will be exclusively for exhibitors and exchange managers and employes and their ladies connected with the film industry. The sale of tickets is to be limited so that there will not be any outsiders except the ladies who will accompany some of the "single men." The whole affair is more in the nature of a real get-together so that all those affiliated with the film industry can become better acquainted. Further announcements will be made in these columns.

Ralph Pietow Heads Jewel Exchange.

Detroit, Mich.—Ralph Pielow has been appointed manager of the new exchange of Jewel Productions, which has established temporary offices at 120 Broadway, Detroit, with permanent offices later in the new film building. Mr. Pielow was formerly with Pathe in Albany. The first picture he is offering to Michigan exhibitors is "Come Through," which will be followed by "Pay Me," "Sirens of the Sea" and "The Man Without a Country."

Fox Exchange Moves.

Detroit, Mich.—The Fox Film Exchange has moved from the Peter Smith building, Detroit, to the new film building at 59 East Elizabeth street.

Note of the Trade in Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—J. O. Brooks, manager of the Madison Film exchange, has booked "On Trial" for a full week at the Majestic Gardens in Grand Rapids; also a full week, second run in Detroit, at the Liberty, some time in October.

Detroit, Mich.—Rod Waggoner is the new manager of the Orpheum theater. He is an old showman of years' experience.

Detroit, Mich.—H. Wayne Pierson, manager for Triangle, reports nearly 100 contracts on the Hart and Fairbanks reissues.

Detroit, Mich.—Jim Kent, manager of the Harry I. Garson Productions, 318 Woodward avenue, says forthcoming releases will be "Poppy" and "The Eternal Sin."

Detroit, Mich.—"Redemption" was a big attraction at the Washington theater, Detroit, week ending Sept. 30. In fact it nearly broke the house record. The Dawn Masterplay Company, 204 Owen building, have this picture for Michigan.

South Bend Theater Opens With Free Show

New Castle Theater Gives Complimentary House Warming—Is a Bright and Attractive House—Opens with "Marriage Market" as Offering.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

SOUTH BEND, IND.—The Castle theater, South Michigan street, South Bend's latest addition to the motion picture field, opened recently with a free public reception which was attended by large crowds at both afternoon and evening performances. The house presents a clean, attractive appearance and has been handsomely decorated and furnished.

Handsome electric fixtures, silk hangings and an attractive decorative scheme adds much to the pleasing appearance of the auditorium. A handsome new fibre screen, which is one of the features, is surrounded by a bas relief plaster moulding that sets it off nicely. A solid concrete wall surrounds the orchestra pit and this is covered by palms and flowers, screening the musicians and greatly enhancing the front of the house.

Emergency exits have been provided on each side of the screen, and the structure is completely fireproof. The lower floor chairs have been covered with attractive flowered cretonne and the aisles and lobby carpeted. Handsome large French doors have been placed at the entrance and soft inverted lights and brass frames have been provided for the lobby photos.

With the exception of hanging the large electric flash sign in front of the place, and a few other minor details, the house is complete and the result is especially pleasing. The building was formerly used as an auditorium. The initial program was featured by the showing of "The Marriage Market," with Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge.

Lafayette's New Theater Will Seat 1,600.

Lafayette, Ind.—Recent developments practically insure the erection of a splendid theater in this city within the next few months, and it is probable that the present plans will be fully matured within the next few days.

A splendid spirit of co-operation is being manifested on every hand and the authorized announcement that the Lafayette Life Insurance Company is pledged to take practically half of the stock places the plan on a basis that bespeaks success, as other enterprising citizens have already pledged their support. It is not believed that much difficulty will be encountered in placing the balance of the available stock.

The ground value and construction costs will represent an investment of approximately $125,000. The building will be situated on Sixth street on the real estate now owned by the Lafayette Life Insurance Company. The Sixth street frontage will be approximately 80 feet, with a depth of 150 feet. In order to secure the necessary depth, Mrs. W. F. Fry and E. L. Lewis have offered leases on real estate owned by them, otherwise the site could not have been made available.

The new theater will have a seating capacity of 1,600 persons. The main floor will accommodate 800, the balcony 600 and the mezzanine boxes 200. The stage will be large enough to accommodate some of the largest road shows and will also be equipped for the showing of motion pictures and the presentation of vaudeville.

Auditorium at Connersville Reopens.

Connersville, Ind.—After having been closed for a period of fifty days pending improvement, the Auditorium theater was formally reopened last week. The house, owned by the Fraternal Order of Eagles, has been converted into a fine theater.

The inside walls and ceiling have been redecorated at a cost of about $1,500. This, with the many other improvements, have made the theater even more beautiful than the day on which it was first opened several years ago. Joseph Schilling is the manager of the Auditorium.

Notes from Indiana.

Hartford City, Ind.—G. E. Price, of Parker, Ind., has purchased the Pastime theater here and will move his family to this city at once. The theater has changed hands several times in the last few months.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Irving Theater Company, a newly organized concern, has filed incorporation papers with the Secretary of State to engage in the exhibition of motion pictures. The capital stock is announced as $2,000. The directors are Herbert L. Whitehead, Joseph F. Thornton and J. William Tucker.

St. Louis News Letter

By A. H. Giebler, 4123 Westminster Place, St. Louis, Mo.

L. A. Godshaw Reopens the Broadway.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Broadway theater, closed for some time, has reopened under the management of L. A. Godshaw. Mr. Godshaw is a newcomer in the amusement business. The Broadway is a very well appointed house, just off Broadway, on St. Charles street, and was conducted as a profitable enterprise for a number of years under the management of C. E. Schwartz. Mr. Schwartz disposed of the place some time ago to open a house in the west end of town, and the concern who acquired the house did not operate it long, for some reason or other, and it has been dark until the present management took charge.

"Doc" Demko's Theater Ready to Open.

St. Louis, Mo.—"Doc" Demko is making big preparations for the opening of his new theater, The Shenandoah, which is being erected on the side of the old Shenandoah at Broadway and Shenandoah avenue. The new place will be ready for its inital performance early in October, and a whole week's special bill is being prepared to usher in the new enterprise. The mayor of the city will speak on one night; another night is to be devoted to exchange managers, when a reception will be held for the trade. "Doc" is considered one of the livest "live wires" in the amusement business in St. Louis, and will no doubt make as big a success of the New Shenandoah as he did of the old house, which he has conducted for years.

Atta-Boy, Barney!

St. Louis, Mo.—Barney Fegan, manager of the Standard Film Corporation, is patting himself on the back for having just closed a contract with the West End Lyric for a six days' first run of the Billy West comedies. Atta-boy, Barney!

Automobile Took the Load.

St. Louis, Mo.—D. M. Thomas, manager of the Fox exchange, tested the capacity of his automobile one night not long ago while "Jack and the Beanstalk" was playing at the Shubert-Garrick. Thomas heard that Jim Tarver, the eight-foot six-inch Texan, who took the part of the giant in the film, was in East St. Louis with the Barnum & Bailey circus.

Thomas conceived the idea that it would be a good advertising stunt to get the giant and have him appear in person at the theater, as well as a good thing for the giant, who had never seen the picture after it was finished. Thomas started for East St. Louis with the intention of kidnapping a giant and he succeeded so well that he brought back two, Tarver and his friend, Capt. Auger, who was also with the show.

Mr. Tarver is eight foot six inches in height, and the Captain tops him by four inches, and they are both hefty in proportion. Thomas is no infant in size himself, and as Mrs. Tarver also came along, there was considerable load in the machine as it labored over Eads bridge.

Tarver's appearance was a great success. He made a speech to the audience and then he and Capt. Auger stood around in the lobby while a hundred or so kids sized them up and went home with big tales of the two big men they had seen.

Mr. Thomas says he will probably make arrangeemnts with Tarver to appear in person with future bookings of the "Beanstalk" picture in this territory.

Atlanta's Forsyth Theater Favors Films

Jake Wells' House Reopens Exclusively for Pictures—"A Daughter of the Gods" Is Premier Offering—Three-a-Day Shows Prosper.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—Announcement has been made by Jake Wells that the Forsyth theater will reopen Monday, Sept. 30. The announcement carries the statement that "the Forsyth will be devoted to the presentation of motion pictures of the highest type, on the most lavish scale moving pictures have ever been shown in Atlanta. The first picture chosen under this policy is "A Daughter of the Gods," starring Annette Kellermann.

It was repeatedly stated by local theatrical men that so successful from a box office standpoint were the three-a-day shows at the Lyric that Mr. Wells had decided, rather than abandon their prosperous little house, to forego a return to the Forsyth with Keith vaudeville and to show moving pictures at the latter theater. The announcement appears to bear out the truth of the rumors.

No Good-Looking, Single Actresses Wanted.

Chamblee, Ga.—A large theater, vaudeville and motion pictures, at which duly censored companies will give duly censored vaudeville performances, will be opened at Camp Gordon, Ga., as a link in the chain of entertainment features being arranged for the soldiers.

The theater not only will be self-supporting, but will go a long way toward providing other entertainment. A charge of from 10 to 25 cents will be made, according to the committee in charge, and the entire proceeds above the current expenses will be devoted to other entertainment. It's going to be a big theater, with a big stage and a big seating capacity.

No good-looking, single actresses will be allowed to perform at the theater. The committee in charge will make this request of any professional companies being considered.

Kuehle's Post Theater Already Playing

Chamblee, Ga.—Kuehle's Post theater vaudeville and moving pictures, located at Chamblee, Ga., in a stone's throw of Camp Gordon, opened Monday night, Sept. 24 and has played all week to capacity business.

Mr. Kuehle is an old showman, and the Post theater will have a big advantage in his wide experience and judgment, backed by his integrity and clean methods.

Swan Theater Celebrates.

Columbus, Neb.—This is an exterior and interior view of the Swan theater in Columbus, Neb. William Swan, owner of the theater, also operates a house in Clarinda, Ia., and it, too, is called The Swan. The theater seats 600 people and is up to the minute in every respect.

Among the Exhibitors of the Twin Cities.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Charles G. Branham, of the Strand, is in Milwaukee for a conference with Thomas Saxe.

Manager L. V. Calvert, of the New Garrick, Minneapolis, has secured a handsome new stage set for his theater and has arranged some extraordinarily clever light effects to show off his new arrangement to decided advantage.

Manager Billy B. Watson, of the New Garden, Minneapolis, has booked "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" for a short run.

Manager Cook, of the New Grand, Minneapolis, has begun showing "The Seven Pearls," Pathe serial, to a big business.

Manager James A. Keough, of the New Lyric, Minneapolis, has booked "The Public Be Damned" for showing the week of Sept. 30.

"On Trial," the first exhibitors' circuit feature, will begin a short run at the Strand, Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

"Spreading Dawn" and "The Man from a Painted Post" are booked into the New Garrick, Minneapolis, for showing soon.

So popular was "The Spy" that Manager Campbell, of the Blue Mouse, St. Paul, secured an extra two-day run of the feature and enjoyed a continued capacity business.

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" enjoyed a big business for four days at the New Garrick, St. Paul, beginning Sept. 23.

The Metropolitan opera house, St. Paul, will play a return showing of "Intolerance" at fifty cents to a dollar prices, beginning Sept. 30, according to Manager L. N. Scott.

Manager Thayer, of the Calhoun, Minneapolis, has booked "The Slacker" for early showing.

Manager J. S. Woodhouse, of the Lagoon, Minneapolis, has begun featuring a unique new reel each week at his house. Mr. Woodhouse takes parts of the Universal, Gaumont and Hearst-Pathe weeklies and combines them behind the title of Lagoon Weekly Review of Current Events.

The Crystal, Minneapolis, has reopened following a week's close, during which time the theater was being remodeled and redecorated, both inside and out.

Salesmen Added by Friedman Film.

Minneapolis.—Manager E. A. Westcott, of the Fox exchange, has begun to see the benefits of a recent whirlwind campaign for business. He has booked Dustin Farnum's "Durand of the Badlands" in the New Garrick, Minneapolis.

Minneapolis.—To celebrate the theater's fourth anniversary, Manager C. G. Branham, of the Strand, Minneapolis, issued a four page folder showing the latest pictures of the theater, exterior and interior, and also the handsomest pictures of himself, Orchestra Leader Richard Long, Assistant Manager Fred Barrows, and Organist Donald Strough. Geraldine Farrar's latest photo is reproduced on the cover of the folder, which is printed in brown ink on high class glazed paper.

More Changes Along Minneapolis Film Row

Louis Coen Comes from Milwaukee to Run Metro Exchange—B. Judell, It Is Reported, Is Head of Local Universal Office—Other Notes.

By John L Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The film rialto here has been as busy as a French field hospital after a heavy artillery engagement the last few days, and necessarily some changes in exchange managers were either officially or semi-officially announced.

Following Harry Cohen's recent statement that he would probably be the ruler at the local Metro realm came, last week, the announcement that Louis Coen, now looking after the Metro's interests in and around Wilwaukee, Wis., would come to Minneapolis in a few days to become permanent manager of the Minnesota Metro Service exchange. Mr. Cohen, whose correct title is special representative, will remain in the Minneapolis office in an advisory capacity until late in October. S. J. Grauman, former Milwaukee Bluebird manager, will succeed Mr. Coen as Milwaukee Metro representative.

A surprising semi-official announcement from the Universal-Laemmle front went the rounds of film men Monday, Sept. 24. According to reports that could not be verified at press time, Benjamin Judell, former Minneapolis and later Chicago Mutual exchange manager, succeeded Julius Bernheim as manager of the Universal-Laemmle offices in Minneapolis. Mr. Bernheim, it has been said, has gone to Chicago, where he will play a big part in the Universal's Windy City distribution. Mr. Judell is well known throughout the Northwest and his many friends look for him to make a "whooping success" at the local Universal helm.

Associated's Officers Visiting in South Dakota.

Watertown, S. D.—Thomas J. Hamlin, general manager, and Harry L. Hartman, president of the Associated Theaters, Inc., began a week's visit to South Dakota exhibitors here Monday afternoon, Sept. 24, by addressing a good number of exhibitors at the Hotel Lincoln. Tuesday the men spoke to exhibitors at Aberdeen, Wednesday found them at Huron and the two following days they were at Mitchell and Sioux Falls.

Directors of Northwest Branch Make Appeal.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The board of directors of the Northwest branch of the National League met Sept. 18 here to renew action of battling legislation before Congress urging a ten per cent. tax on moving picture theater receipts. The board sent out more than a score of spicy telegrams to Congressmen and Senators urging them to vote such legislation down because the passing of such laws would mean the passing out of business of about 75 per cent. of the Northwest photoplay houses.

David Gruenberg Gets Agency for Supplies.

Great Falls, Mont.—While in Minneapolis recently David Gruenberg, of the XL Films exchange at Great Falls, Mont., secured the Montana agency for theater equipment and supplies handled by the Theater Equipment Co., Minneapolis. Manager J. George Feinberg, of the Theater Equipment, has announced that the two new Supreme exchange branches at Fargo, N. D., and Des Moines, Ia., will be agencies for Teco products.

E. Oddy Freeman Representing Supreme.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Supreme exchange, now in the midst of a big expansion of business, has announced that E. Oddy Freedman, prominent in the Northwest state rights field, is now representing the firm in Northern Minnesota, and also that Lee A. Horn will open a branch exchange at Des Moines for the Supreme, following another week's stay at Fargo, getting the Dakota branch started off right.

A. J. Huesman Will Assist Manager Larsen.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Arthur J. Huesman, former Fox exchange booker, has been appointed assistant to Manager Larson, at the General exchange.

More Theaters, More Pictures, More Patrons

New Orleans Now Has Two First Class Vaudeville Houses and Its Many Picture Theaters—All Are Doing a Fine Business.

By N. E. Thatcher, 3801 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—September has been a momentous month for the most of the motion picture exhibitors in New Orleans. Big things have been doing and there has been a marked realignment in the relative importance of the leading places of amusement so far as attendance has been concerned.

The first of the month two new and pretentious combination vaudeville and motion picture theaters made a bid for public favor. One of these is the Palace, the old Triangle theater where Ernst Boehringer inaugurated a policy destined to change the entire motion picture field. The Palace is closely allied with the Orpheum circuit and is putting up a remarkably good show. Mutual feature productions, news weeklies and pictographs are being used, and the business has been excellent since the theater opened. The house has been made very attractive.

Marcus Loew opened the same sort of a house, using the Crescent theater, which for years has been under the Klaw & Erlanger management. Paramount feature productions and a news weekly are also used in this theater, and standing room only has been the rule since the inauguration of the new policy.

Naturally the opening of these two new houses has deprived the Strand theater of its exclusive claim on the best class of patronage off of Canal street, but that theater has been having a fine business. The Pearce theaters have taken on new energy, among the notable changes being the inauguration of the showing of Goldwyn pictures. There are two smaller "pop" vaudeville houses on Canal street, the Columbia and the Empire, and they are doing well. Every motion picture theater in the business section of the city is enjoying fine business, the Sunday crowds being so great that managers have long since ceased to attempt to take care of them.

With the closing of the summer resorts and the parks the people have turned to the pictures, and it appears that the greater the number of theaters the greater is the number of persons who attempt to gain admission. The suburbans of the better class are doing just as well, and perhaps have a more dependable patronage. The managers have learned the value of getting in close personal touch with their patrons and they have become rather liberal advertisers in the local newspapers, to which the people naturally turn for announcement of current programs. The promise for a prosperous season is very bright.

Mrs. Merchison Building Theater.

Oakdale, La.—Mrs. Merchison, one of the progressive business women of Louisiana, is building the Oakdale theater, which is to be completed in a few weeks. It is a cozy, modern house with 700 seats. The structure will represent an expenditure of $10,000.

Strand at Hattiesburg to Open Nov. 1.

Hattiesburg, Miss.—The new Strand theater, being erected here by the Strand Amusement Company, of Meridian, Miss., formerly known as the Tri-State Amusement Company, will be ready for the formal opening on Nov. 1.

J. E. Clark familiarly known as "Jack," who for years was connected with the Josiah Pearce & Sons interests in New Orleans in a managerial capacity, has been made general manager of the Strand Amusement Company and is hustling the work of construction as fast as the war time conditions in the labor market will permit. "Jack" assumed his duties on Aug. 15 and his presence immediately became manifest. He does things and his long experience in the show business enables him to do them property. The cantonment has brought a semi-transient population of fully 75,000 persons to the city and the problem of housing them and furnishing them with proper amusement is a serious one. "Jack" Clark has the capacity to do his full share in the work and to do it rapidly and effectively.

District Manager Stephens Makes Trip.

New Orleans, La.—S. T. Stephens, for years identified with the film exchanges of this territory, and the dean of the motion picture exchange managers in New Orleans, has just returned from his first trip over his territory as the district manager for the entire Southern territory of the Mutual Film corporation. District Manager Stephens received his appointment upon a recent trip to Chicago and he has been receiving the congratulations of his friends ever since He is a tireless worker; knows the film game, speaks seven languages fluently, including the cuss words and has the faculty of getting the business. While he confesses to being a diplomat, he boasts that he has never deliberately misrepresented a thing in his whole life and he points to his enviable record as proof of his statement. Only one man ever questioned the statement and he at last reports was sojourning in the northwest corner of this country, announcing that he preferred a traveling job.

Work on New Liberty Theater Resumed.

New Orleans, La.—Ernst Boehringer, manager, and other members of the Boehringer Amusement Company, left on Sept. 20 for an extended trip through the North for the inspection of motion picture theaters of the advanced type and for a visit to New York, where some important conferences are expected to be held.

On account of the war conditions the erection of the new Liberty theater has been delayed but the steel has arrived on the ground and the work is being pushed as fast as good construction will allow. The Liberty is one of a chain of theaters that are to be built by this company. Arrangements have already been completed for the erection of a house that will seat 1,600 persons on the site of the Elks theater in Baton Rouge, the state capital, and every city of any importance is to have a theater under the management of this concern. One of the purposes of the trip to New York is to arrange for service and other matters of prime importance with the enterprises.

T. A. Benie Completes New Theater.

Rayville, La.—H. A. Benie has just completed the Benie Grand motion picture theater here at a cost of $10,000, and it is one of the most perfect inland motion picture theaters in the state. It has a seating capacity of 550 whites and 225 colored and is comfortable and attractive throughout. Jack Wineland is to be the active manager of the theater.

Large Theater for Camp Near Des Moines

Moving Picture House to Seat Nearly 4,000 People Begun Near Camp Dodge—Will Be Under the Direction of Elbert & Getchell.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—Construction of a $35,000 moving picture house, which will seat between 3,500 and 4000 people, was started just outside of Camp Dodge, Monday morning, the 24th. Elbert and Getchell, owners of the Princess Stock Company, Berchel theater, Empress vaudeville house and the Unique photoplay house, will be managers of the theater for the corporation which own it and in which they are interested.

The theater will occupy a triangular piece of ground 108 by 200 feet. Entrance will be from Beaver avenue, just south of the area way to be left open on the south side of the Harris-Emery store at the big camp, near the reservoir. An ornamental entrance has been planned and an effective lighting system will be installed. The patrons will enter the rear of the auditorium from the left side, the screen being at the south point of the building and the fan shaped seating space furnishing a clear view from all parts of the house. High class pictures will be shown at prices corresponding to the dowstown houses.

Mrs. Grove Takes Enlisted Husband's Place.

Des Moines, Ia.—Manager Grove, of the Family theater in Des Moines, is no slacker and his wife is decidedly NOT a slacker either. M. D. Grove, who has been masaging the Family theater in Des Moines for the past year or so, was not drafted until the third or fourth army, and there was a big chance that he wouldn't have to go anyway, but he wanted to serve his country, had wanted to serve ever since the Mexican trouble of a year ago. So, in the middle of August he joined the Third Regiment of Iowa, and was placed in the medical corps. He is now in New York and expecting to leave for France in time to eat his Thanksgiving dinner over there. And his wife is taking his place most efficiently, managing the Family just as well as Mr. Groves ever managed it. She is not new at the game, however, for she has been employed and assisting the management of theaters for the past seven years.

She was selling tickets at the Family seven years ago and Mr. Grove was managing it. They were married and continued working at the theater for a couple of years. Then for three years the Groves managed the A. H. Blank theater in Davenport, the Casino, and came back to the Family a year ago this spring. J. Miloslowsky, owner of the Family, declares that Mrs. Grove is just as competent as her husband if not more so.

Interesting Invention for Iowa Exhibitors.

Des Moines, Ia.—D. B. Lederman, of the Laemmle Film Service in this city, has secured this territory for the sales of the Sheck universal adapter for adapting any carbon-arc motion picture projecting machise to use the new Mazda projector lamps, without changing the present equipment. This Sheck universal adapter has been given a two-year test in several motion picture houses, in each of which the conditions are different. Among the advantages to the exhibitors the adapter will mean: A saving in electric current sufficient in one year to easily pay for the new equipment—or $35; better projection, because the apparatus throws a solid band of light, insuring an evenly illuminated screen, free from streaks or color bands; less fire hazard by using Mazda lamps than arc-lamps; less annoyance to you or your Zach Harris Makes Trip to New York.

Des Moies, Ia.—Zach Harris, the owner of the Iowa state rights for "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" and who has been successfully attending to the sale of the film in Iowa, has returned to New York for a week's busness trip.

Machines Being Purchased and Repaired.

Des Moines, Ia.—The exhibitors of Iowa are busily seeing to the condition of their motion picture machines, since D. B. Lederman reports that nine or ten machines have been repaired, three sold, and several screens and lots of chairs sold at the Laemmle office in Des Moines in the past week.

A. V. Murphy, of Avery, Ia., purchased a new Motiograph, Mr. Hanson of Ellsworth, Ia., brought his machine in to have it overhauled, and W. T. Bell of Wellman, Ia., and W. M. Moir, of Eldora, also have had repairs made.

Draft Upsets Plans of Iowa Industry.

Des Moines, Ia.—The drafting of so many of the Iowa exhibitors has somewhat upset the plans of the Iowa Association of Motion Picture Industry, for its fall meeting. Wilbur Ingldue, chairman of the organization, and Forest Secor, secretary, have both been called in an early draft and have little or no claims for exemption. Ludy Boston of Muscatine, another ardent worker for the Industry, has also been called to war. So, at the present time there is no definite announcements to be made.

Film Men Visiting in Des Moines.

Des Moines, Ia.—C. E. Budd, of the Lyric, in Grinnell, and Morris Lince, of the Empire in Ottumwa, both visited at the Metro exchange.

Hugh Bennett Takes Over Fairfield Theater.

Fairfield, Ia.—Hugh Bennett, known all over the state and surrounding territory for his work as competent salesman for several different firms, has decided to enter the exhibiting end of the business and has taken over the Fairfield theater in Fairfield, Ia. Until recently, Mr. Bennett has been employed by the Standard Film Company as salesman for Art Dramas, and has been working in the interest of the Moving Picture Industry of Iowa and their publication.

D. R. Beatty, former manager and owner of the Fairfield, has retired from business. Mr. Beatty is seventy-three years old and has been operating the Fairfield for some six years most successfully. The good wishes of the Iowa trade goes with Mr. Bennett in his new venture.

Over the State With Exhibitors.

Rock Rapids, Ia.—R. W. Steen has opened a moving picture house in Rock Rapids.

Toledo, Ia.—The Grand theater, Toledo, was sold to C. E. Olson by W. B. Parsons, of Wall Lake.

Casey, Ia.—L. C. Plummer is the new manager of the opera house in Casey.

Clarinda, Ia.—J. P. Lannon and W. M. Swan, of Columbus, Neb., are proprietors of the new Swan theater in Clarinda.

What Cheer, Ia.—Roy Landers has purchased the Eureka theater in What Cheer from Dan Drudgings.

Corydon, Ia.—S. B. Barrett has purchased an interest in the American theater and Auditorium in Corydon and has formed a partnership with Mr. Oamlin.

Goldfield, Ia.—R. A. Maskin has leased the Cosmo theater to Frank Farmer, of Goldfield.

Reports Show Good Business in Texas

Lessening of the Number of Patrons on Account of the War Draft Is Real, But the General State of Business Is Making Up for the Loss to Theaters.

By Kent Watson, Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEX.—With the movement to entonments of selected men for the National Army, added to the young fellows who have already gone into the service of their own volition, the clientele of the miving picture man in Texas—as well as in other states—has been still further cut down. However, it appears to be a case of "I should worry" in most sections, where good business is generally reported. At lease one new house is announced for the current week, and that in West Texas, whence drouth stories and tales of business "gone to pot" have been coming here of late.

The big town manager is still doing fairly well, particularly in those big towns where there are no blue laws, and particularly where such big towns are located close to others where such inimical legislation obtains. This is true to a big degree of Dallas. Fort Worth is the location for the North Texas selective draft training cantonment. Ft. Worth doesn't have Sunday motion pictures. Recent advices to the Moving Picture World have declared that Ft. Worth wishes it did have. It does so now more than ever, because hundreds of young fellows are daily journeying to Dallas on leave, to take their need of amusement, in company with "the girls they left behind them."

Big Film Records in Dallas.

Dallas, Tex.—"Barbary Sheep," with Elsie Ferguson, at the Old Mill, has proved a good drawing card during the last week, with "Polly of the Circus."

At the Queen theater, Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" has attracted capacity houses right along.

At the Washington, Louise Glaum in "The Idolators" has played to good business.

The Blue Bird "The Argyle Case" has had a fairly good run at the Hippodrome. This theater plans to put "Civilization" for a full two weeks' run during the progress of the State Fair of Texas, beginning Oct. 13. The state rights to the production is owned by Manager A. C. Langan, of the Hippodrome.

"Outcast" Cast Out.

Dallas, Tex.—"The Outcast," with Ann Murdock, was cast out during the week by the local censor, who ruled that it was a bit too sordid or something for the young minds. Manager P. G. Cameron had run the reel a couple of times during the morning, when the power that "be's" stopped it. Mr Cameron, however, stood for the inevitable without complaint and ran in a substitute.

Named on National Board.

Dallas, Tex.—Elmer Scott, former director of public welfare of Dallas, has been named as a member of the advisory council of the Board of Review of Motion Pictures. Mr. Scott has attained quite a reputation as a sociologist and psychologist. The board's letter proferring the appointment, contained some complimentary phrases for the Dallas man.

Incidentally a recent editorial paid high compliment to Dallas' censorship. It declared that the regulation here was ideal, and might well serve as an example for other cities.

New Theater at Plainview.

Plainview, Tex.—W. H. Coop, proprietor of the Mission theater at Amarvillo, has purchased a site in Plainview, Tex., for a consideration of $6,700 and has let the contract for a two-story $10,000 brick building, in which a modern picture theater will be installed. It is to be called The Mission and will be up to date in all its appointments. Robert N. Smith is to be local manager. Mr. Coon is a pioneer in the picture business in West Texas and has been successful. V. L. S. E. is supplying his theaters.

Settle Wichita Falls Strike.

Wichita Falls, Tex.—A strike of motion picture operators at Wichita Falls, Tex., which had continued for about four weeks, was settled on Sept. 20, when the operators agreed to admit to the union a man who had been operating a machine, and who had been declared unfair, with the theater by which he was employed.

Laurence Stuart Off to Camp.

Dallas, Tex.—Laurence Stuart, manager of Hulsey's Old Mill theater, and one of the most popular youngsters in the Texas business, has gone to Camp Travis under the selective draft. Stuart is only twenty-two, but has had a remarkable rise in the business, starting as an usher for Hulsey, and having been appointed manager a year ago. Local newspapers gave him a fine send-off when he left, referring to his affability and the many friends he had made in his business connection. He made no effort to secure exemption.

Not a Case of Big Head.

Dallas, Tex.—Simply because a motion picture man is physically able to wear the hat of a governor-maker and leading politician, doesn't necessarily signify that either has the "big head." J. B. Dugger, local manager V-L-S-E, is wearing the head-gear of the Honorable Jacob Wolters, of Houston, maker of governors and one time strongly urged as a candidate for gubernatorial honors himself. Dugger was in Houston recently and Mr. Wolters—according to Dugger—got away with the latter's hat first. Because of engagements which took him out of town, the Houston man hasn't yet got his hat back. Incidentally, Dugger is walking a little straighter, with his chest a little more prominent, and declares he's had marked success with "The Fighting Trail" since he's been wearing "the hats of the mighty." The local appearance of the first installment of this serial began at the Gaiety theater Sept. 23.

Popular West Texan Visits.

Dallas, Tex.—J. P. McCue, of the Bijou theater, El Paso, was in Dallas during the second week in September on business. Mr. McCue is one of the most popular and best-liked men in the business in Texas. He reports the border city prosperous and business satisfactory.

W. M. Epstein Takes Vacation.

Dallas, Tex.—W. M. Epstein, controlling the Royal Amusement Company, with theaters at San Antonio, Houston, Laredo and Little Rock, passed through Dallas recently on his way to Hot Springs for a vacation rest. His company has recently taken over control of the Prince theater at Houston and installed Ben Johnson, formerly of Laredo, as manager. Mr. Epstein also announced that work of remodeling the Royal at San Antonio was in progress, with the intention of making it highly attractive—$20,000 worth, in fact.

"Four-Minute Men" in Arizona Theaters

Phoenix, Ariz.—The patriotic campaign starts with talks by the "Four Minute men" in theaters through the state. Edward J. Cooper, of the Columbia theater, has been appointed state chairman to organize the movement with the theater men. George J. Stomenan is state chairman to have charge of the speakers.

Interesting Notes Caught in Passing.

Dallas, Tex.—E. J. Lampkin, of the Colonial theater at Greenville, called on local booking agency headquarters recently and reported his section of North Texas in good shape.

Dallas, Tex.—Bert Moran, in charge of the Dallas office of the K-E-S-E for the last six months, has been transferred to Boston. He is succeeded here by Mr. Williams, late of the New Orleans office.

Paris, Tex.—For perhaps the first time since the great Paris, Tex., fire some three years ago, W. C. Paxton, of the Grand theater at Paris, is taking a vacation. Via Ford, he toured to Galveston for two weeks at the gulf resort.

Dallas, Tex.—Ray Stinnett, controlling the Jefferson theater at Dallas, has returned from Joplin and Springfield, Mo., where he saw to the opening of theaters in those cities under his management. They are vaudeville houses on the Pantages circuit, and all use the Vitagraph picture service.

Dallas, Tex.—D. S. Callahan, local manager for the Triangle, has returned from an eastern trip, which took him to New York headquarters, with stop overs on the way back at various points in Pittsburgh territory.

PRAIRIE STATE NEWS LETTER.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Lester Sturm Transferred to Chicago.

Omaha, Neb.—Lester Sturm, who was manager for the Fox Film Corporation in this territory, has gone to Chicago, to become manager for special productions out of that office. He is succeeded by Charles Manfre, who has been a salesman for the Fox corporation in this territory.

Notes From Nebraska.

Bruning, Neb.—Bruning Bros. & Lilliedoll have leased the opera house here.

Kearney, Neb.—Fred Saup has taken a three-year lease on the Crescent theater from F. G. Keens, owner, succeeding Paul Hoppen, who has been managing the house for a year.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES.

Perfection Pictures Going Big.

San Francisco, Cal.—With new management at the helm, a new and enlarged traveling sales staff and a sew brand of pictures, aptly named Perfection, the local branch of the George Kleine System is making a booking campaign that is making history. The new offerings are being eagerly snapped up by exhibitors, not a few of whom have made special trips to this city to inspect the first releases and to arrange for service. Handsome new signs have been placed on the windows of this exchange, marking the change in name and stamping "Perfection" indelibly on Film Row.

W. O. Edmonds Has Rough Trip.

San Francisco, Cal.—W. O. Edmonds, who recently resigned his position with George Kleine to accept the management of the Majestic theater at Reno, Nev., is now on the job, but his trip to that city was not without its adventures. Filled with the romance of the pioneer days he decided to follow the path of the emigrants who made their way into California over the mountains with ox teams. All was lovely until Emigrant Gap was reached, when the chuck holes, which disabled many a prairie schooner in the early days, broke an axle in his Hupmobile and necessitated a stay of five days until a new one could be secured from San Francisco.

Color Films Given Public Showing.

Merced, Cal.—The first public showing in a moving picture theater of the color films of Leon F. Douglass was made in the Elite theater on the evening of Sept. 20. This house is conducted by Charles H. Douglass, a brother of the inventor. A number of San Frascisco film men made the trip to the valley city to see the pictures. The Metro production, "Their Compact," formed the balance of the entertainment.

Asiatic Trade Opportunities Told.

San Francisco, Cal.—J. W. Allen, assistant to Manager Herman Wobber, of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, addressed the Foreign Trade Club recently on "Opportunities in the Orient," basing his talk on what he observed while on his recent trip to China and Japan.

New Theater Planned.

San Francisco, Cal.—Architect W. W. Weeks is making final plans for a new moving picture theater to be erected in the Richmond district. The interests behind the project, which will entail the investment of about $300,000, are represented by J. R. Saul, A. J. Danenbaum and A. B. Jackson.

Buying Film for Japan.

San Francisco, Cal.—I. Sera, representing the Central Commercial Company of this city, which is affiliated with the Takemura Company of Yokohama, Japan, is making a tour of this country to make purchases of films.

Business Booming in the Country.

San Francisco, Cal.—Many exhibitors have been here of late to arrange for film service and it is the general report that business is better than in many years past at this season of the year. Among the recent visitors have been: J. L. Davis, of the Victory theater, Ukiah; A. A. Richards, of the Tokay theater, Lodi; Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Smith of the Empress theater, Lindsay; Joseph Sturky, Roseville; J. W. Wright, Riverbank; J. B. Benard, Niles; L. S. Murphy, Guerneville; Ed. Stark of the Opal theater, Hollister; W. I. Throckmorton, Oak Park; Charles Goddard, Sacramento; J. M. Rice Monterey, and A. L. Hildebrand, of the Star theater, Colusa.

Reno House Being Remodeled.

San Francisco, Cal.—Glenn Hurst, of Hurst Bros., Reno, Nev. was a recent visitor here and stated that the theater recently secured from the Turner & Dahnken circuit is to be remodeled and redecorated at a cost of about $15000. The stage is to be enlarged and the house will be converted into a combination moving picture and road show theater. When the work is completed it will be reopened as the Rialto theater.

California Film Exchange News.

San Francisco, Cal.—M. E. Cory, well known as an exhibitor and at one time head of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of California, is now handling Jewel productions and Century comedies. He is covering the San Joaquin valley with excellent results.

"The Red Ace" is being widely advertised in this city, use being made of a large billboard on Film Row, with seventy-five twenty-four sheet posted in prominent locations.

Miss H. Zimmerman, for four years with the local office, is now with the Los Angeles branch of the California Film Exchange.

Leon Haas, formerly of the local office, has been transferred to Los Angeles, where he has been given the position of head booker, and D. S. Mitchell of Los Angeles, is now booker and salesman at this office.

Oakland's New Piedmont Theater Brightens

Latest and Finest Picture Theater in the California City Is Finished and Thrown Open—Open Market Features at Ten Cents.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

OAKLAND, CAL.—The New Piedmont theater, the latest and finest of Oakland's residential moving picture houses, was opened on the evening of Sept. 15. This theater is located in the beautiful Piedmont district at the juncture of Linda and Piedmost avenues, and has a population of about thirty thousand to draw from. It was erected and is being conducted by the Rosebrook Amusement Company, headed by D. C. Rosebrook and G. L. Rosebrook, and was planned largely by the latter.

The building is of reinforced concrete and but little wood has been used, making it as nearly fireproof as possible. The lobby is of marble and bronze, with a tiled floor, and the same effect is carried out in the spacious foyer. Both lobby and foyer are notable for their displays of pictures of screen stars, the collection of framed photographs in the latter being especially noteworthy.

The interior of the theater proper is finished in cream tints and is a study in decorative work, extensive use having been made of mural paintings by a prominent artist. Fourteen of these grace the walls, some of them being fifteen by twenty feet in size, all done in oil colors, as is the ceiling and the rest of the side walls. The lighting system is indirect, the lighting of the auditorium being accomplished by means of two large fixtures which reflect colored light in the ceiling, a blue tint being used in the one nearest the screen.

Operating Room and Equipment.

The operationg room equipment is unusually complete and was furnished by G. A. Metcalfe, of San Francisco. It consists of two Power's Cameragraphs No. 6B, a Power's stereopticon, a Westinghouse motor-generator set, two rectifiers, enclosed rewinds and all modern accessories. The heating and ventilating system is an elaborate one, the air being changed about twelve times an hour, the fan having a capacity of 40,000 cubic feet of air in this period of time. The screen is seventeen and a half feet by twenty-two feet in size and the throw from the operating room is ninety-six feet.

Velvet carpets are used throughout the house and all the draperies are of velour. The seats, of which there are about 1,000, are heavily upholstered. The decoration and furnishing of the new theater are calculated to reflect the home spirit, being located in a district of beautiful homes. Music is furnished by a $10,000 Wurlitzer organ of a special type, with a three keyboard manual. There is no ticket booth, payment being made at the door, where a Vogelsong pay-as-you-enter device has been installed.

The policy of the Rosebrook Amusement Company is to show feature productions at 10 cents, which may be booked in the open market. But one performance is given in the afternoon, except on Sundays, when the theater is operated continuously from three to eleven o'clock. On Monday and Tuesday a special matinee for children is given, at which children under twelve years of age are admitted for five cents. The opening program consisted of "Two Little Imps," with Jane and Katherine Lee; "Her Nature Dance," a famous Keystone comedy, and a Hearst-Pathe News.

Changes of bill are made every other days and these are listed for two weeks in advance in a twenty-page program, in which considerable local advertising appears. This is issued on the first and fifteenth of each month and is sent by mail to patrons, on request.

Kehrlein Honored by Appointment.

Oakland, Cal.—Emil Kehrlein, of the Kinema theater, has been appointed to arrange for four-minute talks in the Oakland district, and his son Oliver has also received an appointment from Washington for work of this kind at Fresno, Cal. The latter, who has been at the Oakland house for some time, has left for Fresno to take charge of the Kinema theater there, relieving his brother Emil, who will go to Los Angeles, where a fine house is to be opened at an early date. Mr. Kehrlein has inaugurated a special matinee for children to be given at the Oakland house every Saturday morning at ten o'clock, when the George Kleine Conquest pictures will be shown, the proceeds to go to the Red Cross and the Boy Scouts. Boy ushers at the Kinema theater have been supplanted by young ladies with good success.

"The Curse of Iku" Seized.

San Francisco, Cal.—"The Curse of Iku," which has been shown over most of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, struck a snag when an attempt was made to show it at Sacramento and the film at the present time is in the hands of the Governor of the State. E. B. Johnson, secretary of the firm, who has recently returned from a business trip to New York, is working to secure the release of the film and has secured a statement from the State Department that is expected to settle the trouble. When this production was first released the Japanese Embassy at Washington objected to certain scenes and a number of eliminations were ordered to satisfy the legation. When these were made there was no further objection made to the film. In the copy sent to California, however, one of the objectionable scenes was left in, through an inadvertence, and when the film was shown at Sacramento it was seized and the City commission threatened to revoke the license of the T. & D. theater. Secretary Johnson appeared before the Commission and explained the status of the matter, offering to eliminate the scene originally objected to by the Japanese and asserting that with this exception the production was acceptable to the Japanese Embassy and the State Department. To prove his point he wired to the State Department and received a reply from Secretary of State Robert Lansing, who stated clearly that if the scenes specified were eliminated the Federal Governmest and the Japanese legation had no objection to its being shown. The scene left in by mistake was one showing a member of the House of Representatives speaking in Congress against the Japanese.

Metro D'strict Manager Visits.

San Frascisco, Cal.—Harry F. Lustig, Pacific Coast district manager for the Metro, arrived here recently for a short stay. Local manager Louis Reichert is back from a short trip to Reno, Nev., and Fred Voigt has also returned from a brief visit there.

E. O. Child Visits Los Angeles.

San Francisco, Cal.—E. O. Child, manager of the local branch of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., made a brief trip to Los Angeles recently to confer with business manager C. R. Seelye, who is on the Coast for a short stay.

Select Pictures Manager on a Trip.

San Francisco, Cal.—Ben. S. Cohen, district manager for the Select Pictures, has left for Seattle, Wash., to superintend the removal of the branch there into its own new building. Before returning home he will visit Denver, Los Angeles and other points where exchanges are maintained, remaining from a week or ten days in each place. The "Lone Wolf" has been booked over the entire T. & D. circuit, with the exception of the Tivoli opera house of this city.

Portland Suburban Exhibitors Feel Better

In Oregon There Are Better Business and Better Expectations Among Out of Town Theaters Than During Any Fall These Three Years.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Suburban exhibitors are looking forward to a good autumn and winter season. The sentimnet is very different from that during the past two years. Heretofore there has been a continual wail from the men away from the center of the city that the suburban show house was doomed. This year all is optimism, notwithstanding the high cost of films.

D. T. Noonan, Princess theater, Arleta, a suburb of Portland, reports most excellent business. Within the past few years there have been several unsuccessful attempts to start theaters in districts nearby the Princess. All these houses are closed and the Princess is gathering in the results of persistence when times were poorer. Mr. Noonan reports a recent Sunday the best in the history of the house and his good busisess has encouraged him to install additional equipment.

Couche Back at the Sunset.

Portland, Ore.—C. E. Couche has again been selected by Manager-Owser J. A. Jennings, of the Sunset theatre, to handle the advertising for this pretty little theater and has given him carte blanche in this branch of the Sunset management. Mr. Couche has been in Portland two years and has built up the most profitable theatrical advertising agency in Portland by specializing in this branch of the profession.

Charles E. Couche.

Something New in Cut-Outs.

Portland, Ore.—Manager J. C. Stille, of the People's theater, has an inventive faculty which he very often has occasion to call into play. Exhibitors in the territory give Mr. Stille the credit for inaugurating the mounted cut-outs used in lobby displays in this part of the country and Mr. Stille is surely entitled to all the credit for planning the 24-sheet cut-out, a photograph of which is shown.

The business done by the Pickford picture is also shown herewith.

Gem Theater, Tillamook, Oregon.

Tillamook, Oregon.—The cheese center of the Pacific Northwest boasts of a dandy little theater seating 400. It was completed a few months ago. A large foyer, a spacious lobby and a ladies' rest room are provided in addition to a modern auditorium.

Projection is furnished by Powers' equipment throwing a 9½ by 12½ picture 76 feet on a Mirroroid screen. A big feature of the house is its fireproof character. A fire hose is constantly kept connected with a fireplug in the foyer, exit doors are all equipped with panic locks and the projection room, in fact the entire theater, is of concrete. The theater is owned by Partridge & Morrison, L. E. Partridge, the senior partner, having been an exhibitor in Tillamook over three years.

C. M. Hill No Lover of Moss.

Portland, Ore.—C. M. Hill, manager for the Progressive Motion Picture Company, the big new Paramount - Artcraft exchange in Portland, Oregon, believes in the old adage about the rolling stones and the moss. The result is the entire absence of moss grown methods and theories at the Portland Paramount office and business is absolutely booming. He has had a most varied career. He has been a farmhand, gas meter reader, hostler, grocery clerk, section hand, book agent, magazine circulation manager and auto salesman.

C. M. Hill.

He entered the film industry in 1914 with Pathe in San Francisco, then served with World and Mutual. He came to Progressive in October, 1916, soon rising to star salesman. When the Portland exchange was created, Herman Wobber readily selected him for its manager.

New Man With Service Film Co.

Portland, Ore.—Robert Brooke, a well-known Portland business man, has purchased an interest in the Service Film Company and will actively assist Charles Pumphrey in the Oak street office. Mr. Brooke's long and successful business experience will undoubtedly enable him to give his patrons conscientious service.

Successful Show in 500 People Town.

Kamiah, Idaho.—W. C. Short, Jewel theater, has educated the town's populace, numbering 500, to patronize his show and he has the reputation among distributors of paying an equitable price for service and making money for himself. He charges 35 cents admission for big features and ordinarily 10 and 15 cents. He shows four and five nights a week, sometimes holding a feature over two nights. How is that for a town of 500?

C. W. Meighan at Tacoma.

Portland, Ore.—C. W. Meighan, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, has resigned his position with Jensen and Von Herberg at the Columbia and is temporarily managing the Tacoma theater venture of Edwin F. James in the City of Promise. Mr. Meighan takes the place vacated by F. A. Tipton.

Federal Authorities Mystified.

Portland, Ore.—The Majestic theater, J. J. Parker, manager, had a most mysterious way of billing "The Spy," which showed at that house commencing September 22; in fact the billing was so mysterious that it attracted the attention of the United States district attorney and caused a furore that helped to popularize the production. Advertisements of the most abstract character were inserted in the Portland papers each day and the district attorney's phone was kept busy all the time by people wanting to know what all the "spy" advertising was about.

Spokane News Letter

By S. Clark Patchin, E1811 Eleventh Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

Officers of New Washington Company.

SPOKANE, Wash.—The Washington Motion Picture Company, holding a contract with Tyrone Power, met and organized recently by the election of the following officers: Allen Meisenheimer, president; W. W. Zent, vice-president; Harold Hooker, secretary. Thomas S. Griffith, James S. Ramage, Henri Commelin, Allen Meisenheimer and W. W. Zent were voted directors.

Announcement is made by C. J. Ward that the actual work of filming pictures will begin here as soon as the work of organizing a high class company has been completed.

Mr. Hooker was formerly organizer of the Inland Empire Development League for the Spokane Chamber of Commerce and resigned as secretary of the Home Industry Bureau of the Spokane Ad Club to take up his duties as secretary of the company. He said:

"To take an active part in the new industry coming to Spokane to make motion pictures is an exceptional opportunity and it was especially attractive to me on account of the several years experience in organization and development work with the Chamber of Commerce and the Ad Club.

Big Films Recently at Spokane Theaters.

Spokane, Wash.—Moving picture houses of Spokane have been announcing some fine bookings recently and presenting some excellent pictures which have attracted wide attention.

Olga Petrova appeared at the Liberty in her first Paramount production here entitled "The Law of the Land."

"The Fighting Trail" will be presented at the Pantages, each serial being run for a full week in connection with the vaudeville program.

Which Is Douglas?

Spokane, Wash.—Henceforth Douglas Fairbanks will have to look to his laurels, for while he is able to please large audiences throughout the country we have right here in Spokane a man who is nicknamed "Douglas" by his friends and associates and he also pleases hundreds of people weekly and thousands monthly, for he is the head of the banquet rooms of the $1,250,000 Davenport Hotel and in that capacity his duties require that he see that courtesy and service are given the public. Many Easterners as well as Westerners visit the place daily, and reports from among the waiters are that they have asked if that really was Douglas Fairbanks working at the catering trade for the purpose of obtaining some extra publicity. One waiter said he had much difficulty in making one party believe him recently.

Compare the two pictures showing McMonagle as he is and Fairbanks as he recently appeared at the Liberty theatre in "In Again Out Again" and without first looking at the names tell which is Fairbanks. I have seen a few people fooled on it myself and had the pleasure of showing the pictures to both men and women who are served several times a week at the Davenport and who witness the Fairbanks pictures almost regularly. Most of them selected the photo of McMonagle first as being that of Fairbanks. I thought it good enough to pass on.

After being told so many times that he was a double for the noted screen favorite McMonagle gathered some data and finds that he is three-fourths of an inch taller than Fairbanks, but that Fairbanks has a little broader shoulders. McMonagle enjoys fishing and hunting during his vacations and has a pleasing personality which wins him many friends with Davenport patrons from all sections of the world who visit there.

Vancouver License Inspector Rises Up

Won't Let Theaters Show Film That Made the Former Censor Throw Up the Job —Will Inspector Also Step Aside?

By Charles Thomson, 645 Burrard Street, Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—The troubles of British Columbia's newly appointed censor have begun already. As was stated last week, the resignation of the former censor, C. L. Gordon, was due to his rejection of "Damaged Goods" and the vetoing of his decision by the Attorney-General. The new censor, Walter Hepburn, has sanctioned the showing of this film, and by so doing seems to have "put his foot into it" worse than Mr. Gordon did by rejecting it. Directly it was known that Mr. Hepburn had passed the production, License Inspector Jones arose in wrath and made it known that he would close any theater that dared to handle "Damaged Goods."

Whether the license inspector has the authority to overrule the decision of the censor is a somewhat debatable point, but in any event Mr. Jones seems to think he has that authority, and is only waiting for an announcement of the play to appear to put his powers into force. The reason that the inspector has taken this stand in regard to "Damaged Goods," without even having seen the film, is because a year ago he refused to allow the spoken version of this play to be presented on the local stage. There is no censor of the spoken drama in British Columbia, but the license inspector has the right to forbid any production deemed hurtful to public morals.

The position is curious in the extreme. It stands somewhat like this. The inspector has no real legal authority to forbid the showing of "Damaged Goods" or any other production that has been passed by the properly appointed censor, but at the same time he has the authority to close the doors of any theater where performances which he deems objectionable are being carried on. He has no prerogative to say that "Damaged Goods" shall not be shown, but he is at liberty to close up the theater that handles it. It is purely a legal quibble, but before it is settled it is probable that a higher authority than either censor or inspector will have to step in.

Metro's New Seattle Quarters Occupied

Classy Appointments of New Office Arranged by H. L. Lustig—Has Special Sized Shelves for Different Sizes of Paper—Other Conveniences.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—Metro's quarters in the new exchange building at Third and Virginia streets were completed and the force moved in this week. The building is only one story high and Metro has the corner suite. The effect from the outside is very artistic. Dark red shields painted on the plate glass windows form an effective background for the gold letters of Metro, and below these dark red sash curtains add a distinctive note.

The interior arrangement was planned by H. L. Lustig, Metro special representative, who has had charge of the office for the last two months, and he is particularly proud of the arrangement of the shelves for filling the paper. Instead of the sections for all the six sheets being grouped together, and all the other different sizes of paper being similarly placed Mr. Lustig has different sized sections built in each group to accommodate the six sheets, the three sheets, the one sheets, the photographs, the heralds and the cuts that belong to one picture. These sections are numbered in sequence with the numeral corresponding to that marking the film.

Extra precautions have been taken against fire in the cement lined and zinc furnished inspection room and outside shipping room and in the big film storage vault with its heavy fireproof door. The operating room and projection room are all that could be desired in a film exchange.

Manager Merrick to Los Angeles.

Seattle, Wash.—J. C. Merrick, until this week manager of the Seattle Mutual office, has gone to Los Angeles to become manager of that branch. Mr. Merrick has been in the film business in Seattle for several years, being a road man the greater part of the time, but he has traveled all over the West at different times and has made charts revealing the situation and status of nearly every motion picture theater in the territories he has covered. With such a thorough knowledge of conditions he is peculiarly fitted for an important managerial post, and his many friends in the Northwest territory, while sorry to lose him from Seattle, are yet glad of his advancement.

New Sales Control System in Pathe.

Seattle, Wash.—G. R. Sirwell, manager of the Butte Pathe office, is in Seattle this week installing a new sales control system in this Pathe branch, which gives the manager thorough knowledge of the theaters and of the activities of his salesmen throughout the territory. From here he will go to Portland and Spokane, installing the system in each of those offices also.

Fred C. Quimby, Pathe Northwest supervisor, is spending several weeks in Seattle. A. Malotte has been employed as a new road man out of Seattle for Pathe.

S. P. Peck Takes Job as Road Salesman.

Seattle, Wash.—S. P. Peck, for the past three years chief clerk at the Seattle Triangle office, has gone on the road for Paramount-Artcraft out of Seattle.

Guy Navarre, road representative for Paramount-Artcraft, has returned from Montana with a trunk full of contracts, so he states.

C. P. "Whitey" Merwin Heads Exchange

C. P. Merwin, popularly known as "Whitey," has succeeded Mr. Merrick as manager of the Northwest territory. Mr. Merwin has been the booker in the Mutual office for the past six months, and before that was road man for V-L-S-E.

Virgil Adams, former shipping clerk, has taken Mr. Merwin's place at the booking desk, and his old job has been taken by Landon Ruffner.

Seattle Exchanges Have New Building.

Seattle, Wash.—H. G. Rosebaum, manager of the Seattle Paramount-Artcraft office, and George Endert, manager of the Pathe office, are planning a new building for their growing forces. They have decided on Second avenue, just above the Hotel Calhoun, which is only a block from the exchange building now being completed at Third and Virginia.

Washington Theater Changes Hands.

Wenatchee, Wash.—J. C. Ferguson has sold his Wenatchee theater to F. L. Stannard, owner of the Gem, in this city.

Puyallup, Wash.—L. M. Leonard, owner of the Sumner theater, Sumner, has taken over the Stewart theater, of this town.

Issaquah, Wash.—R. H. Glenn is remodeling the Glenn theater.

New Supply House Doing Rush Business

Seattle, Wash.—According to E. L. Shwetzer, formerly manager of the G. A. Metcalf store in Seattle, now manager of Sussman's Theater Supply Company, business must be improving very fast for the exhibitors, because they have been sending so many rush orders for the 1918 De Luxe model motiograph that he is finding it necessary to wire the factory to ship them by express direct to the exhibitors. The store, at 1014 Third avenue, is just about cleaned out of all models, and Mr. Shmetzer has had to wire the company to express four machines to insistent exhibitors this week. The exhibitors who could not wait were: A. H. Hilton, Paramount theater, Lewiston, Idaho; A. S. Hiller, Zillah, Wash.; M. E. Heath, Baker, Ore.; W. Gould, Pe Ell, Wash. The latter bought an entire equipment for a new house to be opened the first of October.

Only the Continuous Shows Need the Separate Tax Tickets.

Vancouver, B. C.—On Sept. 13 several representative exhibitors met the Hon. J. W. deB. Farris, attorney-general of British Columbia, and discussed with him the working of the new War Tax Act, which comes into active operation on October 1. Those present, besides the attorney-general, were the censor, Walter Hepburn, and Messrs. W. P. DeWees, W. Pilling, H. Quagliotti, G. Pantages, J. Shubert, W. P. Nicolls, H. Scott and C. S. Thomson.

The chief point of discussion was the difficulty in handling separate tax tickets by houses whose performances commence at a fixed hour, and who, therefore, have to sell a thousand or so tickets in a very short space of time. The exhibitors who run continuous performances agreed to accept the separate tax tickets as prescribed by the act, and to sell them with each admission ticket, the exhibitors to be responsible through their doorkeepers for the destruction of each tax ticket when used. Inspectors will be appointed by the government to make a periodical round of the theaters to see that the number of destroyed tax tickets corresponds to the number of destroyed admission tickets.

In the case of the regular performance theaters, permission was asked to dispense with the separate ticket, and to stamp the amount of the tax on the regular admission ticket. After a good deal of discussion, the attorney-general agreed to this arrangement. Several million tickets have been placed on order by the government, and by the time this notice appears in print, the act will be just about commencing to operate.

General Film Moves to Granville Street.

Vancouver, B. C.—In order to be more in touch with the heart of the theatrical center in Vancouver, the General Film exchange has left its offices on Pender street and migrated to Granville street.

NOISELESS

ALTERNATING CURRENT

All A. C. Difficulties Overcome.
Intense Illumination—Noiseless Projection.
A bright, flickerless, eye-resting light.
Perfect operation with an arc that will not wander.

The new Speer "Alterno" Carbon means the realization of all that A. C. operators have long hoped and wished might be perfected. It means that photoplays can now be projected on A. C. with the same degree of satisfaction as D. C. It facilitates the showing of a film with an intensely bright light, produced by an absolutely flickerless, noiseless arc.

No new, costly and elaborate equipment needed. Merely the proper setting of the Speer "Alterno" upper and lower carbons in the same old holders. The carbons perform almost incredible results. A. C. operators' duties are greatly simplified and made a real pleasure.

Stories of the Films

JAXON COMEDY.

THE TRIPLE CROSS (One Reel).—Percy Ritch, having been ejected from the house by the father of the girl he loves, goes to a den of crooks and solicits their aid. The next day at the breakfast table Mr. Gold receives a black-hand letter, and the whole family become panic-stricken. Two detectives, Pokes and Jabs, are summoned, and they both fall in love with Jennie, the daughter, and it becomes a three-way fight between Pokes, Jabs, and Percy. Pokes wins, and the engagement is announced. The wedding day arrives, and when the parson says, "If anyone knows any reason why this couple should not wed, etc.," a tall, stout woman, with nine children, rushes in and throws herself on Pokes' breast, while the children cry, "Pop! O, Pop!"

Unable to explain, Pokes beats it, followed by the children, and when all is quiet the woman lifts her veil, disclosing Jabs, who chuckles to himself, "If I can't win her, you shall not have her either."

FALCON FEATURES.

THE BEST MAN (Four Parts).—The cast: Arnold Hammond (William Ehfe); Pierre Lemoyne (Gordon Sackville); Dr. Storm (Capt. Nicholson); Ruth Storm (Margaret Landis); Mrs. Storm (Mollie McConnell); Blake (Clifford B. Gray); Capt. Hale (Frank Brownlee). Directed by Bertram Bracken.

Arnold Hammond, a New York business man, after an attack of delirium tremens brought on by drinking to excess, to forget business troubles seeks treatment of Dr. Storm, an old physician, who prefers the quiet of a fishing village to the turmoil of the city where his skill in nervous disorders might have made him famous. Hammond falls in love with Ruth, the doctor's daughter, and it is largely through her influence that he is able to conquer the habit which has nearly ruined him. But Ruth has become fascinated by Pierre Lemoyne, a handsome devil-may-care fisherman, and seems unable to choose between them.

Hammond buys a small sailing vessel with a gasoline engine and Pierre, being skillful in handling small boats, is engaged as crew for the first cruise. When Ruth goes aboard she is startled to find herself off for the afternoon with the two men, between whom she is unable to decide. Lemoyne shows his true nature in many ways before the day is over. He refuses to put back when it is seen that a storm is brewing, accusing Hammond of cowardice. The boat is upset and they are rescued by a fishing vessel. Lemoyne procures a bottle of whiskey and proceeds to drink freely and tries to make Hammond drink. The latter, though terribly tempted, refuses, and Lemoyne, enraged, beats him savagely. Ruth's eyes are opened to the relative value of the two men and she accepts Hammond's love and promises to marry him.

THE UNDERSTUDY (4 Parts).—The cast: Georgianna Lane (Ethel Ritchie); Hope Van Alen (Ethel Ritchie); Gerald Fownes (Neil Hardin); Anthony Van Alen (Bruce Smith); Evans (Mollie McConnell); Dr. Mache (Frank Erlanger); Dr. Pope (Albert Ellis). Directed by William Bertram.

Georgianna Lane, convinced that she has dramatic talent, goes to the city and vainly haunts the managers' offices. Finally she reaches the end of her resources, and is in despair. A bottle of poison attracts her attention, but she decides first to have a glimpse of life in its most luxurious aspect, and goes forth to find it.

Hope Van Alen is a drug addict. Her husband discovers it, and they try to think of a way out. At a fashionable restaurant, where they have gone to talk it over, Anthony suggests that she go to a sanitarium, but Hope says her friends have already begun to suspect. At this moment a young girl enters, shabbily dressed but remarkably like Hope. A sudden thought strikes the Van Alens, and they ask the girl to lunch with them and unfold their plan—which is that in the eyes of society Georgianna impersonate Hope while the latter undergoes treatment. It is agreed, and Georgianna enters upon her duties.

Gerald Fownes, Anthony's nephew, frequently asked by Anthony to escort his wife to various entertainments, is growing to love her. He is indignant at Anthony's apparent neglect of his wife, and the climax comes when Dr. Mache, who had sold drugs to Hope, appears and threatens Georgianna, compelling her to come to his office. Her maid summons Gerald and Anthony to the rescue. At this moment Anthony is called to the phone by Dr. Pope at the sanitarium regarding Hope, and hurries out, leaving Gerald to rescue his wife from Dr. Mache. Gerald is astounded at this conduct, and when he meets Georgianna coming out of the doctor's office he is unable to conceal his anxiety and love for her. To save her further distress there seems nothing for him to do but to go away, which he prepares to do. He goes to the Van Alens to bid them good-bye. Anthony suspects, and accuses Gerald of having fallen in love with his wife, which Gerald admits. To his consternation, Anthony only smiles, saying "That is all right." Hope, who has returned, and is her old self again, hears and understands. Gerald sees an unaccountable change in her when she comes forward, and is bewildered—until they explain about Georgianna. He leaves at once for the farm, where Georgianna has concluded she belongs, and all are happy.

KALEM.

THE MYSTERY OF ROOM 422 (An Adventure of "Grant, Police Reporter"—One Reel).—The cast: Tom Grant (George Larkin); May Du Reel (Ollie Kirkby); Robert Du Reel (Harry Gordon); Paul Darsey (Robert Ellis). Directed by Robert Ellis.

In room 422 of the Hotel Mountford, the lifeless body of a woman is found. Grant, police reporter on The New York Chronicle, finds in the room a cigarette case engraved with the name "R. Du Reel."

Placed under arrest that afternoon, Du Reel tells the following story. The murdered woman was his wife. A few years ago she left him and ran away with his business partner, Paul Darsey. He read in the paper that the boat on which they were to have sailed for Europe went down on the way over. Believing his wife dead, he later became engaged to marry Helen North. Only this morning, in the home of his fiancee, his wife suddenly entered the room and confronted him. She demanded money—or she would tell who she was and stop his marriage. He persuaded her to accompany him to the Hotel Mountford and try to arrange a settlement. There he gave her five thousand dollars and left her. Only a few hours ago he had learned of her death.

Grant returns to the Hotel Mountford to investigate. He discovers a torn piece of note. Questioning a bellhop, he finds out that the boy delivered this note for Mrs. Du Reel to a tenement in a poor section of the city.

Grant hurries to this tenement and, although refused admission by the landlady, he gains entrance by scaling the fire-escape of the building next door, and leaping across an alleyway of the room he wanted to enter. There he finds a blood-stained shirt. During his investigations, Paul Darsey enters the room and attacks Grant. The police reporter is victorious and has Darsey placed under arrest.

Darsey confesses. When he ran away with May Du Reel some years ago, they missed the boat intended to take them to Europe. They went to the dogs after that, and were soon reduced to poverty. A few days ago, Darsey read in the paper of Du Reel's engagement. Seeing an opportunity to get some money, he sent May to blackmail her husband. That afternoon he received a note from her at the Hotel Mountford, telling him to meet her there. He went there, and found May weakening. Her husband had told her of the death of their child and, conscience-stricken, she wanted to give the $5,000 back to Du Reel. They quarreled; she struggled, and in an attempt to get the money, Darsey seized a water pitcher, and struck her on the head. Seeing that he had killed her, he made a getaway.

Darsey is placed under arrest, and Du Reel, freed, is re-united to his fiancee.

A DEAL IN BONDS (An Adventure of "Grant, Police Reporter"—One Reel).—The cast: Tom Grant (George Larkin); Jenny Dobbs (Mary Taylor-Ross); Claire Convers (Ollie Kirkby); "Two-Spot" Thomey (Harry Gordon); Phil Kelsey (Robert Ellis). Directed by Robert Ellis.

Grant, police reporter on The New York Cronicle, is assigned to interview Jenny Dobbs on her sixtieth birthday. Jenny, the richest woman in the United States, has the reputation of being the meanest. She refuses Grant the interview, but his disappointment is assuaged when he makes the acquaintance of Jenny's niece, Claire.

"Two-Spot" Thomey, a confidence man, learns that Jenny has in her possession two hundred and fifty thousand dollars worth of bonds. While she is on her way to the butcher shop to do her own shopping, he kidnaps her in a taxi and takes her to a room in a tenement in Throgg's Neck. There he fails to force her to sign an order for the bonds, and determines to keep her a prisoner until she agrees to sign.

Worried over her aunt's failure to return from the butcher shop, Claire seeks the assistance of her friend, Tom Grant. He promises to look her aunt up, but the next day he has nothing but failure to report. He takes Claire out to lunch in the Shanghai Cafe. There Grant sees a man whom he recognizes as Phil Kelsey, who poses as a doctor, but who, in reality, is a confidence man.

Thomey enters and sits down at the table with Kelsey. Grant overhears him say: "—yes—old Jenny Dobbs—I've got her up at Throgg's Neck, but I can't get her to come across!" Kelsey says: "Take me to her; I think I can make her see things your way!" When they leave the cafe and jump into a taxi, Grant and Claire follow them.

Arrived at Throgg's Neck, Grant sees the two conspirators enter the house and lock the door after them. But he manages to gain a point of vantage by scaling fire-escapes to the roof of the next building; from here he sees Kelsey trying to force Jenny to sign the order by threatening her with a small sharp knife. Grant appropriates the flag-pole from the roof, winds the rope around it, stretches the pole across to the roof of the house in which Jenny is a prisoner and, by catching hold of the end of the rope and jumping off the roof, Grant is able to lower himself to Jenny's window and at the same time swing across to her building. He leaps through the window, just in time to save her. Claire has, meanwhile, gone for the police, who arrive and make Thomey and Kelsey prisoners. Jenny produces the bonds out of her old umbrella, awards Grant with fifty cents for his trouble, and is persuaded to consent to an interview.

ESSANAY.

THE FABLE OF WHAT TRANSPIRES AFTER THE WIND-UP (A George Ade Fable—Two Parts).—The cast: Ferdinand (Rodney LaRock); Adele (Hazelle Coates); Her Father (Julian Barton); Her Stepmother (Marion Skinner); Herbert (Donald Clayton); Her Friend (Marian Murray).

Once upon a time there was a Male Vampire named Ferdinand, who was in love with Adele, a sweet Thing fresh from an Eastern Reform School. When he spoke those three words which hold all records for Monosyllabic Trouble-Makers and was accepted, Ferdinand had a Hunch that somebody was about to drop Cyanide into his Cup of Joy, because, although Adele had no positive Proof Ferd had carried on with an Oriental Brunette working in a Musical Comedy—it was common talk that his Uncle had been a Regular at a Retreat where the Doc shoots a Precious Metal into the Arm. Ferdinand beat it to his Club to Spring the Glad News. A He-Hen named Herbert called him aside and planted a few Thistles in the Garden of Love. Adele and Ferd suffered, Miles apart, through many Dinners Decreed by Custom. Then came the Big Day. They propped Ferd up, told him his Name and begged him not to Weaken. He saw a Haggard Creature advancing toward him. They did not hear any of the service, but were afterward told it was a very Pretty Wedding.

Moral: Married men are not sent to war. They have suffered enough already.

THE FABLE OF WHAT THE BEST PEOPLE ARE NOT DOING (A George Ade Fable—Two Parts).—In one of the countless Honeycombs of an Office Building sat a General Manager. The Prosperous Plute should have been content with his lot, but he was not. He had a Past. He had come from a Tank Town via the Shorthand College. Elmer had an aching desire to be a Regular fellow. He wanted membership in a Club. He observed that the one chance for a Gink of the Floozey Species was to keep on doing the Correct Thing. But it was a hard job. He took an apartment in a highly refrigerated hotel, peopled by X-Ray Notables, so-called because they could look through Mr. Floozey at something beyond. After twenty years of hard work he had acquired the poise that would qualify him to sit among the Hoopstares. He had a nodding acquaintance with at least eight Touch-Me-Nots whose undergarments were supposed to be Royal Purple, and was cheerfully figuring progress among the Elite when a Boyhood Friend, named Orlando, blew in. Mr. Floozey thought he was a Bounder, but did not like to pass up old and tried friends, so it came about that Orlando, who was in the Railway Supply Business, worked his drag on the Board of Governors and asked them to admit Mr. Floozey because he was so correct. Inasmuch as Orlando was the life of the card-room, the Governors stretched a point and admitted the Unknown.

Moral: A cultivated Gentleman may get Anywhere if he knows the right kind of a Rough-Neck.

THE FABLE OF THE SPEEDY SPRITE. (George Ade Fable)—Two Parts).—The cast: Loretta (Virginia Valli); Herbert (Rodney La Roque).

Loretta, a well-conditioned elfin of the young unmarried set, was a bit old-fashioned but could ring more iron men than any other village belle. This uncrowned princess was a she-progressive assaying 98 per cent. pure ginger. Herbert was a village lad just like the pictures in the magazine clothing ads. One evening Loretta prepared for four throbbing Roscoes, including Herbert, to curl up among the sofa pillows in the family parlor. Jealous, the love-mad village Romeo, Herbert, conceived a diabolical plot. Giving the three simpering rivals the go-by, he seized the apple of his eye and rolled out to his chug-chug wagon. Straight into the river, a la Annette Kellermann, drove our hero, refusing to back out until his proposal was accepted. Loretta then confessed that she always had been stuck on that cave-man stuff, and extended her finger for the sparkler.

Moral.—Rapid performers do not always get credit for their speed.

THE FABLE OF PRINCE FORTUNATUS, WHO MOVED AWAY FROM EASY STREET, AND SILAS, THE SAVER, WHO MOVED IN. (George Ade Fables—Two Parts).—The cast: Silas (R. Paul Harvey); Claude (U. K. Houpt); His Wife (Katherine Amos); The Statesman (John Cossar).

Once upon a time a boy named Claude was born with a plated-ware spoon in his mouth. When he was 21 the family plunder was pushed over to him. About this time an alfalfa product named Silas cast anchor in a two-bit boarding house. When his laundry failed to get back on time he was stuck. Meanwhile Claude was trying to bear up under a smother of one hundred thousand gleaming simoleons. One day Silas was passing Claude's mid-Victorian morgue he called home. Silas gazed with coagulated bitterness and determined to gather in some pesos. Silas became a putter-in while Claude was a taker-out. When Silas was 30 he was only five thou to the good, but he had spikes in his shoes, resin all over his dukes, and knew the ropes. Claude still had seventy thou and was dipping into the tin box every time he needed ready rhino. When Silas was 38 Claude still clung to twenty-five thou. Silas had forty thousand iron men and no longer hated Claude. Shortly after Claude hit the fortieth milestone he had to blow the whistle on the family.

Moral.—The only safe income is the one that is self-hatched.

SPARKLE COMEDY.

BANGS RENIGS (One Reel).—Bangs, a faithful employe in the office of Brewster, a rich merchant, is overjoyed one day to receive a note from the boss inviting him to his country home and stating that he is to be taken into the firm and likewise into the family. Bangs starts off in high spirits and is received with open arms. Next day he is introduced to Brewster's sister, Matilda, and it dawns upon him that he is expected to take Matilda off Brewster's hands. The next morning, in desperation, he tries to escape by the window. Matilda sees him and a wild chase starts through the country. He takes refuse in the river and Matilda follows. Hiding in a clump of bushes he is set upon by an escaped convict and made to exchange clothing. Matilda, mistaking the fleeing convict for Bangs, overtakes him after a long chase. The prison guards come upon them and proceed to drag the convict back to prison, followed by the angry spinster. They come upon poor Bangs and take him along too. At the prison Bangs discovers that the superintendent is a brother lodge member, and he prevails upon him to send him to jail to escape from the clutches of Matilda. Finally, Mr. Brewster's sympathy for Bangs induces him to call his sister off and Bangs remains in jail, a happy prisoner, safe from the pursuing female.

WHOSE HOSIERY? (One Reel).—Henry Brown, a traveling salesman, with sporty inclinations, buys a pair of gloves in a department store and gets instead a pair of silk hose, while Marie gets the gloves—the exchange being made by the cash girl. Mrs. Brown discovers the stockings in her husband's pocket, and, supposing they are for her, leaves them. Henry pleads a business engagement, and goes off for the night. He meets Marie and gives her her stockings.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Brown looks for the silk hose, and is surprised to find they have disappeared. Naturally suspicious, she at once decides that her husband is buying stockings for other girls. Her ire is aroused, and she manages to find out where her husband is dining and follows him to the restaurant. Meanwhile, Brown is having the time of his life with Marie and several boon companions. Mrs. Brown just misses them and returns home baffled. The next night she intercepts a note to Henry saying his gloves will be at the Royal Cafe that evening. She trails her husband to the cafe and is horrified to see a young lady wearing the identical silk stockings her husband had carried. Mrs. Brown pounces on her husband, a wild mix-up follows, but Henry manages to explain about the exchange of parcels, and his wife leads him from the cafe by the ear.

PETE THE PROWLER (One Reel—Rel. Week of Oct. 1).—The cast: Eddie (Eddie Lyons); Edith (Edith Roberts); The Prowler (Lee Moran); Father (Fred Gamble); Detective (Harry Nolan). Scenario by Tom Gibson. Produced by Louis W. Chaudet.

Papa hears Eddie make an appointment with Edith to elope at 11 o'clock that night. Papa hires a detective to prevent the elopement. Some one else had a date at the house that evening. It was Pete the Prowler. He found Eddie's ladder, and entered the house easily. He had ransacked the dining-room, and ascended to Edith's room, when Eddie arrived and threw a pebble at Edith's window. A suitcase came down the ladder and hit him in the head. He brings it to the machine, and returning to the ladder to wait for Edith.

Edith fainted when the burglar entered the room. When Pete heard Eddie outside the window he realized that an elopement was in progress, and grabbing Edith's hat, veil and motor coat, he put them on and climbed down the ladder. Eddie tenderly received him and escorted him to the car, and they were off down the road.

Papa and the detective, in the meantime, were on the job on the wrong side of the house. They hear a scuffle, and rush into Edith' room. The maid comes in, screaming that the house has been robbed. The two men make a dash for a machine and start in pursuit.

Edith, hidden in the closet by the burglar, revives and nearly scares the maid into a fit. She realizes what has happened, and jumping into the other machine, she gives chase. Eddie sees that the car is gaining on them. He tries to put on extra speed, but the engine refuses to work overtime. He is forced to halt beside the road. Pete jumps out, and beats it across a field. Edith, the maid, papa and the detective, arrive together. The two men chase and capture Pete, and Eddie digs out the suitcase from under the seat and finds that it contains the silver. Papa is so delighted to get the valuables back that he lets Eddie have his daughter, too.

HOT APPLICATIONS (One Reel—Rel. Week of Oct. 9).—The cast: Eddie (Eddie Lyons); Lee (Lee Moran); Hiram Quill (Fred Gamble); Kittie (Edith Roberts). Scenario by Fred Palmer. Produced by Roy Clements.

Lee, a salesman of women's wear, gets fired. He takes three trunks of samples with him. Eddie, his friend, receives word that he has inherited his aunt's store on condition that he run it with his wife. Eddie is not married, so Lee dresses up as a woman and poses as Eddie's wife. Asparagus Corners received the good-looking young manager of the store and his smart city wife with much acclaim. Hiram Quill, the village lawyer, and his daughter, Kittie, had been making a bluff at managing the store, but it was easy to see that it needed a change.

Eddie and Lee established a beauty parlor and did a rushing trade. Trouble started when the wives discovered their husbands' sudden interest in their physical appearance, while husbands, who found no supper on the table when they returned in the evening, began to suspect that their wives were growing altogether too interested in the art of beautifying themselves, under the manipulations of the fascinating Eddie.

At last, Mr. and Mrs. Dub chanced to arrive at the Beauty Parlors at the same time. Mrs. Dub was quickly smothered in hot towels by Eddie, and Mr. Dub was totally obliterated from view in the same manner by Lee. Then the two villains joined the hands of their victims, and both went out to flirt with Kittie. Mr. and Mrs. Dub grew tired of mere handholding, and snatched off the towels, discovering each other. Rushing into the front of the store, they attacked Eddie and Lee. Mrs. Dub won, and getting her hands firmly embedded in Lee's blonde wig, she tore it from his head. Hiram declared that as Eddie was not really married the store reverted to him.

"If I'm not married I soon will be," cried Eddie, leading forward Kittie, so all ended merrily as a marriage bell.

JOKER.

RAINSTORMS AND BRAINSTORMS (One-Reel Rel. Week of Oct. 9.—The cast: Props (Max Asher); The Strong Man (Kewpie Morgan); His Wife (Gladys Tennyson); The Heavy Legit (Wadsworth Harris. Written by R. A. Dillon. Produced by Craig Hutchinson.

Max is a versatile individual. He acts as cashier in the box office, as ticket taker, porter, orchestra leader, etc. The "artists" are arriving for the afternoon show. The strong man and his wife appear, and Max shows them to dressing room No. 13. Hubby leaves to test the floor of the stage, while Max, in the capacity of porter, brings in their trunk. The wife of the strong man is young and pretty. She is partly disrobed when Max arrives with the baggage, and she retires behind a curtain and begs Max to go before her jealous husband comes. Max is too late, and hearing the strong man coming, he gets into the trunk. The strong man sits down on top of it, and Max, nearly smothered, takes an augur and bit and starts boring for air. Unfortunately, he bores the husband instead, and Max is thrown out.

After Max has started the orchestra he runs around and hauls up the curtain. The two comedians ask him for a prop cane, but he hands them a window weight instead. The comedian "beans" his partner with it, and the curtain has to be rung down prematurely.

Then comes the strong man's act. He is a faker, and when he pretends to juggle the young man in the air by one hand, the boy is really supported by wires, which are manipulated by Max. A fly lights on Max's nose, which causes him to let go of the wires with disastrous consequences to the act. The Heavy from the Legit comes next, and Max has to work the Wind and Storm machine for him. The actor demands more and more wind, until Max starts the cyclone machine. Then everything is blown out of the theater, including the audience.

THE WART ON THE WIRE (One-Reel-Rel. Week of Oct. 9.—The cast: John Shirtless (William Franey); Polly Piffle (Gale Henry); Dr. Rainhole (Milburn Moranti); Crook One (Chas. Haefli); Crook Two (Milton Sims); Pete the Unfortunate (John Cook). Written by Tom Gibson and C. B. Hoadley. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Polly Piffle is sole owner and manager of the "Piffle Pickle Works," a concern which has made a lot of money out of the wartless pickle. She receives a message which threatens her life if she does not divulge the secret of her wart remover. It is signed, "The Wart." Polly, frightened, calls up John Shirtless, a famous criminologist, her fiancee, and tells him of the mysterious message.

In his den sits Doctor Rainhole. Though apparently a physician of not more than ordinary unintelligence, the Doctor, in reality, is a Man of Mystery. He is the inventor of the famous Wart Remover. It will remove warts from anything on earth, pickles included; and having seen the ads of the Piffle Pickle Works, he feels certain that his formula has been stolen. The Doctor is a person of ordinary appearance, except that one foot is much larger than the other. He calls his faithful henchmen. They, also, each have one foot larger than the other. By means of his wonderful psychic power, he can dematerialize his body all except the odd-sized foot, which is the only part of him that remains visible.

John Shirtless enters the Works, and trips over a human foot, as he does so. His great brain is occupied with the problem, and he thinks nothing of such a trifle as a detached foot. As soon as he leaves, the crooks enter the Pickle Works, and make the men prisoners. They torture from them the information that it is Polly who owns the secret formula. Polly hears them coming, and just manages to gasp "The Wart" over the wire to John before she is snatched away. The detective answers the phone, and by means of a simple attachment which he has invented he sees the entire occurrence at the factory. He sets out at once taking with him another little invention, the Magnetic Materialization Machine, with which to draw the recipe to him. First, he turns it on the "Wart," who cannot resist, and is drawn into view, proving to be none other, when materialized, than Doctor Rainhole. The gangsters and the Doctor are turned over to the police.

BISON.

THE LION'S LAIR (Two Parts—Rel Week of Oct. 1).—The cast: Jim Strong (T. D. Crittenden); Nettie Strong (Eileen Sedgwick);

Dick Price (Fred Church); Harry Reynolds (Albert MacQuarrie). Written and produced by W. B. Pearson.

Jim Strong, an English army officer, in charge of a British trading post in the jungle, lives with his daughter Nettie. Nettie and Dick Price, an official guide of the British army, are sweethearts. Dick goes into the interior with a party, and soon after his departure Strong is bitten by a poisonous snake and dies before help can reach him. Nettie sends word to Cape Town for relief, and Lieutenant Harry Reynolds hastens to the post.

Two days later, in the jungle, the party of investors, led by Dick, enjoy themselves trapping game. During this excitement, one man injures an elephant, and the huge animal, enraged by the bullet wound, attacks the camp, completely destroying it and thus causing the party to start for the post.

Meanwhile, Reynolds, who is an impostor, posing as an officer, has determined to take advantage of his being alone with Nettie. He tries to make love to her, but she repulses him, though unable to repress her fear of him. Finally he becomes angry. He grabs her and they struggle; she hits him with some heavy article, which staggers him, and gives her a chance to make her escape from the cabin into the jungle. Soon Harry loses track of Nettie, who has run up a path along the side of a hill. She enters a cave and confronts a wounded lion. Harry discovers her footprints and finds her. He pulls her out of the cave.

From a distance, Dick sees Reynolds and Nettie struggling on the edge of a precipice. Leaving the party, he rides rapidly toward them. He cannot ascend the side of the cliff that they are on. So he throws a rope over a stump on the other side, pulls it taut, and swings over, hand over hand, to Nettie's aid. Nettie is saved, while it is discovered that Reynolds is an impostor and he meets his deserts.

SAVING THE FAST MAIL (Two Parts—Rel. Week of October 9).—The cast: Helen (Helen Gibson); Dan, the engineer (Jack Dill); Jim Hardy (M. K. Wilson); President Hardy (Marc Fenton); Jack Day (Harry Timbrook). Written and reproduced by James D. Davis.

Jim Hardy, son of the President of the B. and Z. Railroad, went over to the window and looked out upon the busy yards. Then he came over to the desk where his father was sitting, returned the money that his father had given him, and asked for a job instead.

Jim went to work valiantly, no one in the yard except Jack Day, the dispatcher and a former friend, suspecting his identity. After many months of labor, he graduated from the roundhouse to the position of fireman, and was assigned to the train run by Dan Brown, an excellent engineer. Through Dan, he becomes acquainted with Helen, the operator at the station, who is imediately interested in him, and he in her. When Dan tries to force his suit and to kiss her, Jim interferes and a fight takes place. This is reported, and it causes the dismissal of both Dan and Helen. Dan learns that Jim is Hardy's son, and determines to "fix" him, thinking that it was he who "squealed." When Jim learns of Dan's suspicions he makes up his mind to acquaint Helen with the facts of the case, and then to give up his job.

Jim steps into the cab of the engine, and a fight is begun between him and Dan. The engineer knocks Jim unconscious and steps off the engine, pulling the throttle open as he does so. Jack sees the engine start off and the cause of it, but is too late to stop it. He rushes to inform Hardy of the affair. The only thing to be done is to derail the engine to avoid a head on collision with the fast mail. A message is sent along the line by the dispatcher and Helen thus hears of the trouble.

Riding to an overhead derrick, she catches the hook which is hanging from it and swings over the track on which the engine is coming. She drops onto the engine and enters the cab. The man at the yards throws the switch and Helen drives the engine into a siding as the limited passes. Jim has now recovered. Hardy arrives. Jim explains the trouble to both his father and Helen, and all ends happily.

GOLD SEAL.

THE NINTH DAY (Three Parts—Rel. Week of October 9).—The cast: Jerry Burke (Neal Hart); Luck Ashton (Janet Eastman); John Ashton (Richard La Reno); Manuel Cespedes (Joe Rickson); Col. Grayson (Howard Crampton); Lieut. Standing (Willard Wayne). Scenario by Karl R. Coolidge. Produced by George Marshall.

Lieutenant Standing is told by Lucy Ashton that while she likes him she does not love him. Standing takes his disappointment like a man, and invites Lucy to take a drive with him that afternoon. Lucy consented, and Standing left her just as Jerry Burke came up to the store. Jerry and Lucy were friends, and he was working hard for a commission. Lucy was the daughter of the proprietor of the general store.

That afternoon, as she was on her way to meet Standing, riding a new horse, something frightened the animal and it started to run away. Burke happened to see her, and dashed to her rescue. In the reaction from her fright, she found herself in his arms when Standing came upon them. Keenly disappointed as he was, he forced himself to congratulate them.

Manuel Cespedes, a Mexican loiterer, seems to have plenty of money, though no one knows where it comes from. He also is in love with Lucy. He discovers the state of affairs between Burke and Lucy, and taunts her with marrying a private. He then arranges with Jerry for a private meeting. His proposition is that Jerry shall assist him in getting ammunition into Mexico. Jerry consults with Standing, and when the meeting is to take place, Standing hides in the shrubbery, to bear witness to what is said by the Mexican. Manuel and three other Mexicans arrive and are talking with Jerry when Standing sneezes. One of the Mexicans shoots Standing, while the others overpower Jerry. Manuel tears a button from Jerry's coat and places it in the hand of the unconscious Standing. Then they carry Burke away.

According to the articles of war of the United States army, an enlisted man who absents himself without leave for ten days is a deserter. Jerry is locked in a hut in the hills and no trace of him has been found. Standing is taken to the hospital, where the button is discovered. He is able to say only "Burke." All conclude that Jerry has deserted after having assaulted Standing, but Lucy will not believe it.

On the ninth day, Jerry learns that the Mexicans intend that every gringo in the region shall die. The army post is to be blown up. Some Mexicans get past the guards with a large box which they claim is full of oranges that Colonel Grayson ordered. They carry the box to the post magazine where the sentry is killed; the box is put under the magazine and the fuse lighted.

Manuel and two Mexicans go to the store and ask Lucy to show them some shirts. She goes into the storeroom and sees her father slip to the floor, stabbed. Horrified, Lucy slams and locks the door, while the Mexicans try to force it.

Jerry has discovered an old knife in the straw on the floor of the hut, and cuts his feet free. When the guard comes to investigate, Jerry overpowers him and takes his uniform. Jerry jumps onto the guard's horse and dashes for the post, arriving in time to snatch the fuse from the magazine. Then he rushes to the store, fearing for Lucy. The door is broken in; Lucy fights with the Mexicans and then breaks away from them, running from the store. Jerry rides up and begins struggling with one of the men while Manuel tries to get a shot at Jerry as he rolls on the floor with the Mexican, but just as he takes aim, one of the troopers shoots him dead.

Lucy's father recovers; Jerry is promised a commission and Standing tells him and Lucy that the doctor says he is well enough at last to act as best man.

VICTOR.

A WALLOPING TIME (One Reel—Rel. Week of Oct. 9).—The cast: Mary Ann Kelly (Ruth Stonehouse); Tony (Harry Mann); Tony's Mother (Grace Marvin); Mrs. Kelly (Lydia Yeamans Titus); Denny Kelly (Mr. Titus). Scenario by Fred Myton. Produced by Ruth Stonehouse.

Mary Ann Kelly, who is unable to stand the odor of the corned beef and cabbage meal her mother is cooking, goes out. At the corner she meets Tony, who is playing his mouth organ. Tony, too, had gone out because his mother was cooking a meal with a plentiful supply of garlic. Mrs. Kelly finished the cabbage, and then she put her head out of the window to draw a breath of fresh air. Mrs. Carlotti, Tony's mother, had just done the same thing.

"You shutta da window," she now called to the Irishwoman. "Da smell maka me seek!"

"Makes you sick! Sure, I was just going to say the same of the smell coming from your house!" returned Mrs. Kelly. The two women then argued furiously.

Just as the Kellys were about to sit down to the corned beef and cabbage, the door opened, and Dennis, the sailor husband, appeared, unexpectedly home from his voyage, with presents for everybody, and all his back pay. Mrs. Kelly determined to give a party to all the neighbors, even the Carlottis.

The night of the celebration came, and the Irish and the Italians of the quarter were there in full force. There was a good deal of rivalry. Black-eyed Giulia did a tarantella, receiving vociferous applause from the Italians.

"Sure you're not going to let her get away with it, Ma," whispered Mary Ann in her mother's ear. The challenge was accepted, and Mrs. Kelly tucked up her skirts and began a real Irish jig, to the delight of her countrymen and women. Then Mary Ann and Tony did a foxtrot. The Irish boys were resentful that the hostess' daughter had chosen an Italian for the first dance, and as soon as it was over, they surrounded him. A fight was soon in progress. While Mary Ann, mounted on a chair, cheered the combatants to the echo.

STAR FEATURETTE.

A PRINCE FOR A DAY (Two Parts—Rel. Week of October 9).—The cast: Rose Marie and Prince Paul (Lena Baskette); The King (Fred Montague); The Princess (Martha Maddox); The Wicked Duke (Al. MacQuarrie); Dancing Master (Nigel Debrullier). Scenario by Nan Blair. Produced by Marshall Steadman.

His Royal Highness, Prince Paul, has never known the real joys of childhood, and is ignored by his father, the King. He is hated by his uncle, the Duke, for Paul stands between him and the throne, but his aunt, the Princess, is kind to him. One day when the Prince is riding with the Princess, they stop near the stand of a little flower girl, to have the shoe of one of the horses fixed. The Princess sees Rose Marie, the flower girl, and is startled by the resemblance of the little girl to Prince Paul. Paul also sees Rose Marie and catches the flower she throws to him. Some days later through the machinations of the Duke, Prince Paul is kidnappped and brought to a gypsy camp.

Upon discovering the Prince's disappearance, the King and the whole court are disturbed. News of the disappearance of Prince Paul reach the populace, and they storm the gates of the palace, demanding that the Prince be found. The Princess remembers the flower girl and tells the King of her. Men are sent to bring Rose Marie. She is dressed in Paul's clothes and taken before the people, who are now satisfied. The King soon comes to care for her as does the Princess, but the Duke is furious.

The King's messenger, returning from a distant city, passes by the gypsies' camp and sees Prince Paul, who is happy in his new environment. The messenger rides to the palace to inform the King of his discovery and men are sent for Paul, who pleads in vain with them to leave him with the gypsies. Rose Marie now feels that she is no longer needed and steals from the palace. The Duke sees that he has lost his chance to become King. Paul sits on the throne, a look of sorrow and longing in his eyes, while Rose Marie returns to her flowers.

THE NURSE OF AN ACHING HEART (Two Parts—Rel. Week of Oct. 9).—The cast: Mr. Winkledinkle (Eddie Barry); Doctor Bones (Bob Mackenzie); Nurse Eva (Eva Novak); The Cop (Chester Ryckman). Directed by Archie Mayo.

The patients of Doctor Bones' hospital are out airing in the park in charge of their nurses. Nurse Eva is in attendance on an old man. Mr. Winkledinkle is resting on the grass when he catches sight of Eva. He begins a flirtation with her. A cop observes their flirtation. Doctor Bones comes out into the park. He also sees the flirtation, and makes straight for the bench. He reprimands the nurse for her action, and threatens Winkledinkle.

Winkledinkle and the doctor start a scrap, in which the old man in the wheeled chair takes an active part, quite against his will. Finally his chair gets a push and starts off down the hill. The doctor steps on his bandage, which begins to unroll, and Winkledinkle, the old man and Doctor Bones all fall into the lake in one heap. Eva and the cop rushes to pull them out. They drag out the patient, and take him to the hospital, the doctor following, while Winkledinkle is left to shift for himself. He sees the nurse go into the hospital, and proceeds to throw a fit in front of the entrance, but the passersby take it for an entertainment and tip him for his efforts.

Then he climbs up the fire escape. The doctor and the cop see him through the window, and the doctor leans out and "beans" him with a large bottle. Winkledinkle falls, but is not hurt. A safe is being hoisted into the building. Winkledinkle goes and stands under it. His patience is rewarded, the rope breaks, and the safe falls on top of him, but his head goes right through it and he is not hurt. He is hit by a machine and injured. He is carried into the hospital, and Eva devotes her entire attention to him.

The doctor sees him, determines on revenge.

Eva protects Winkledinkle, the doctor gets the cop instead, and beans him. Then Winkledinkle steals his uniform, in which to make his escape. The janitor, however, sees and tells on him. He revives the cop with "Feel Good" powder, and he runs out of the ward. He meets Winkledinkle and forces him to change with him. The doctor has been told that the man he wants is wearing the uniform of the cop, so he beans the unfortunate policeman once more.

Winkledinkle rushes into the ward, throws a patient out of his bed, and hides in it. He has chosen the bed of a man who is just about to be taken to the operating room. But he discovers it in time, and seizing Eva, he raises a sail on the operating table and sails off down the hill. The entire hospital force runs after him, all the nurses with their patients in wheeled chairs. Eva and Winkledinkle sail for the docks, and just managed to make a steamer as she is putting out to sea. From the rail they wave farewell to Doctor Bones and his establishment.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE NO. 40 (Released Oct. 12).

The Travels of a Check is the first subject of the Screen Magazine, Issue No. 40. These slips of paper play an important part in our daily economic and domestic life, and sometimes travel through dozens of hands and thousands of miles. Some of these are illustrated.

Making Maple Syrup is a subject which makes our mouths water. The real thing is made from the sap of the hard maple tree. We see the process from the tapping of the tree to the sampling of the syrup by a delighted small boy.

Scenes in the Cincinnati Museum of Art come next. Reproductions of some of the greatest masterpieces of sculpture, from the ancient Greek to the modern Italian, are shown.

American fashions have received a great impetus since the war. Some fashions created in our country are illustrated in the Screen Magazine. Madame Haverstick, one of the foremost dressmakers of the country, creates dresses before our eyes; Mme. Desiree Lubowska, the dancer, posing while morning, afternoon and evening gowns are draped upon her.

A Miracle in Mud by the Screen Magazine's sculptor, Willie Hopkins, completes the reel. It is called "His Pipe Dream."

REEL LIFE NO. 76 (Oct. 11).

A Dam Across the Mississippi: At a cost of more than two million dollars the Government has completed a dam across the upper Mississippi River, which will make Minneapolis the head of navigation. The lock is 80 feet wide and 350 feet long, and a complete lockage can be made in 30 minutes. When the gates, which weigh 150 tons, are closed, a lake nearly five miles long is formed.

The Development of the Watch: The first watch, an evolution of the clock, was made about 1500. From that period the development of the watch was rapid. Many specimens of Swiss, Dutch, French, English, and even German manufacture are shown from the famous private collection of Willard H. Wheeler, of Maiden Lane, New York City. Some of these watches, made during the Empire period, are typical of the extravagance responsible for the French Revolution. One of them has a case embellished with nearly two thousand precious stones; another is in the form of a tulip, with dainty gold lace petals which open to display the time; others have dancers, singing birds, and even playing fountains.

Acrobatic Cyclists: A "turn" from the vaudeville stage, showing two clever bicycle riders.

Cantaloupes of the Imperial Valley: The Imperial Valley of California, below sea level, produces about $3,000,000 worth of cantaloupes yearly. These cantaloupes are created and shipped in iced cars all over the United States.

Coming Home from the Club in 1950: This animated drawing from "Life" tells what will happen to Mr. Clumban when he and his aircar reach the home-roof in the wee small hours years hence.

REEL LIFE NO. 77 (October 18).

A Colonial Church of South Carolina: Surrounded by mammoth oaks covered with trailing moss, Goose Creek Church enjoys the unique distinction of being used only once a year. The coat of arms of George II, which is mounted above the sounding board back of the pulpit, saved this church from destruction during the Revolutionary War.

When Dishwashing is a Pleasure: Not only does this new invention allow the sanitary washing of each dish in separate water, but it enables a woman to perform this most unpleasant of household tasks without injury to the most delicate hands.

The Banana Industry: Two expert photographers were sent to Panama and the Gulf coast to make this picture. Interesting scenes on a 30,000 acre banana plantation in Panama show the planting, cultivation, gathering and shipping of bananas. The great care which must be used in handling bananas is illustrated in the scenes showing the unloading in the United States.

A Primitive Jeweler: All races and tribes, from the most barbaric times, have been lovers of jewelry. This subject pictures the making of a bracelet by a negro.

An Optical Illusion: According to this animated drawing from "Life," it was not really the chorus lady who kicked off the parson's "lid."

(Spottiswoode Aitken); James Morgan (George Periolat); Robert Orme (Lewis J. Cody). Directed by Henry King.

Lucie De Montrond, with her aunt, Tante Jeanne, and her brother, Francois, are the only members of a proud and impoverished Creole family in New Orleans. Francois is in love with an unscrupulous woman, and in order to win favor with her, steals the family jewels, on which money had been lent to Lucie by Gaspar LaRoche, an avaricious old antique dealer.

Robert Orme, of as blue blood as herself and as impoverished, is the favored suitor of Lucie, but her aunt forbids his attention and orders her to receive only the attentions of James Morgan, a wealthy cotton planter.

Lucie is chosen as queen of a fete given by Morgan. Gaspar is present and notes that Lucie does not wear the jewels, and the next day demands their return. When Lucie confesses that she does not know where they are, he proposes that she marry him and retain the jewels.

Corinne, the cook, who has seen Francois take them, tells Lucie, who goes to Francois' sweetheart and demands their return. The vampire contemptuously returns them, and Lucie hurries home, shadowed by Gaspar, who has followed her and who insultingly insinuates that she has earned the money to get back the jewels by dubious ways.

Lucie resents the insult, Francois enters, an altercation ensues and Gaspar is killed by an accidental discharge of a revolver with which he had tried to kill Francois. The affair is hushed up, and Francois, sobered by the tragedy, assumes the responsibilities of the family. Through the good offices of Father Moret, Lucie and Robert's difficulties are smoothed away.

JERRY AND THE BULLY (Oct. 11).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Farmer Snaggs (Harry DeRoy); The Farmer's Daughter (Claire Alexander); The Bully (George Odell); Fatty (Lincoln Stedman). Written and produced by Milton H. Fahrney.

After a general mix-up with the cops Jerry makes his getaway in the back of an automobile and lands in the country. After impersonating the proprietor of a gasoline station, and nearly blowing the place up, Jerry sees a sign advertising for a school teacher, and meeting the "main squeeze" of the local board of education, he applies for the position.

Being accepted, he is taken to the farmer's home, where he meets the local bully, who is in love with the daughter. A bitter rivalry springs up between Jerry and the bully, and things grow lively. They grow livelier still when Jerry assumes his position as teacher of the country school, and Jerry certainly has his troubles.

Later, matters reach a climax when Jerry is forced into a mix-up with the bully and a fat boy, and is driven to cover in the farmer's house, where he invades the bedroom of a female member of the household. It ends by Jerry beating a hasty and successful retreat from the concentrated attack of all parties concerned.

THE LOST EXPRESS (Episode No. 5.—"In Deep Water"—Two Parts—Oct. 18).—The oil train demolished the building in which "Harelip" and Helen Thurston have had their struggle for possession of the blue print. Helen recovers consciousness and attempts to make her way from the wreckage, but is too weak to walk and collapses, protruding her hand through the window of her prison. Gypsies, passing at this moment, are attracted by the chance of salvage and they make an investigation. One of the women takes the rings from Helen's fingers and the gypsy band moves on.

The syndicate members plan to tap the Thurston oil fields.

Bonner, office assistant, attentive to the interests of his idol, Helen, and Murphy, the railroad detective, arrive at the Landport railroad station in their search for Helen. Finding no trace of her there, they go on. On the road they dash into the gypsy van and overturn it. In the explanations which follow, Bonner discovers Helen's rings on the hands of a gypsy girl. With her as a guide, the two searchers race their motor to the rescue of Helen.

Coincident with this dash to the Valquez grounds, the syndicate crooks are speeding to the Thurston property. When the rescuers find Helen, "The Baron" and his party are giving orders for tapping the forbidden trunk line of the neighboring oil fields.

At the Thurston residence, physicians are giving the injured General Thurston his final treatment. "Harelip," discarding his disguise, appears as Pitts, the private secretary. The invalid asks for Helen, and receives no satisfaction from Pitts.

Helen is apprised that the Thurston wells are out of commission owing to a leak in the main line. The Thurston men send a diver down into the bay to locate the leak. This inspires "The Baron" to send one of his own men, armed with a knife, to the water's edge, to await the immersion of the Thurston diver. When the diver goes below, the pipes supplying him with air are cut and he is left to his fate.

THE HEART OF EZRA GREER (Thanhouser—5 Parts—Oct. 7). The cast: Ezra Greer (Frederick Warde); Ezra's Daughter, Mary (Leila Frost); John Denbeigh (Geo. Forth); Amy Le Vere (Lillian Mueller). Directed by Emile Chautard.

Ezra Greer worked hard ever since his boyhood days, and now in middle age had a well paid position as valet, some money saved up, and a motherless daughter to whom he poured out all his love. Mary Greer was a student in a co-educational college.

At the annual commencement, Ezra was unable to attend, but he purchased a beautiful bracelet and sent it to Mary. He waited for her arrival home, but was disappointed, as romance stepped into Mary's life, and she left college with Jack Denbeigh, with the expectations of being married. However, Denbeigh did not fulfill his promise. He would be wealthy when he was of age, but in the meantime was dependent for support upon the money doled out by his guardian.

Ezra, not hearing from his daughter, made inquiries at the school, where he learned the truth. He resigned his position, and went to the city determined to find his child. In his wanderings, which were unsuccessful, Ezra found a poor, motherless child. His money exhausted, Ezra was forced to seek employment. In his hunt for work, fate led him to Denbeigh, who was seeking a valet. Ezra called to see Denbeigh, accompanied by Marie, the child he befriended, and the old man and the child won the sympathy of Denbeigh.

Some time later, Mary reads of the engagement of Denbeigh to some cabaret flyer known as "The Baby Vamp." She also read of Jack's wealth, which filled her heart with bitterness. The thought of her baby doomed to grow up a hungry dweller of the tenements, while his father lived in luxury, caused Mary to take the child to Jack's home during his absence. She leaves a note explaining her motive and demands that the child be taken care of. Jack found and concealed the note, but ordered Ezra to take the baby to a foundling asylum. Marie saw the baby and begged Ezra to keep him. Thus the kindly old man befriended his own grand-child.

Continually seeing the child, filled Jack's soul with remorse. Unable to bear it any longer, he confides in Ezra. Ezra freely gave Jack the advice he asked, not knowing he was pleading the case of his own daughter. Listening to Ezra, Jack devoted all his time searching for Mary, forgetting all about the Baby Vamp. Unable to understand his actions, she calls for an explanation. Instead of Jack, she met Ezra. Pleading with her, Ezra finally won the heart of the Baby Vamp, who promised him that she would relinquish all claims upon Jack.

Later, Jack's son was injured in a street accident. Notified, Jack and Ezra rush to the hospital. Entering the room they found a nurse crying over the child. It was Mary. Ezra realized that it was his own daughter Jack wronged. He moved forward threateningly, but Mary stepped between them, and Jack said, "Remember your words!" "Let me marry Mary, and after that you can kill me if you like." Realizing that Jack's repentance was sincere, Ezra yielded to the tears of Mary. Married, Ezra never regretted once that the ceremony was performed.

THE FATAL RING (Episode No. 15—"The Dagger Duel"—Two Parts—Oct. 14).

Tom Carleton rescues Pearl, who is lying unconscious in a motor car as it hangs over a cliff just before a boulder dislodged by Carslake and his henchmen crashes into the car. Tom revives Pearl and tries to make her promise to give up her search for the Violet Diamond. He proposes to her, and while she accepts, she will not give up the search and persuades him to postpone the marriage until after they recover the Violet Diamond.

To announce their engagement, a masquerade ball is given, and Carslake manages to be present. Cicely Lloyd, a friend of Carslake's also attends the ball. She is jealous of him, and by chance wears a Juliet costume the same as Pearl's. Carslake, dressed as a Chinese mandarin, receives a note from Pearl's maid, telling him that the setting of the Violet Diamond is on the hilt of a scimitar in the armory room. The High Priestess and her followers of the sacred order of the Violet God attend the masquerade ball, trailing Carslake, who they know has the Violet Diamond, and is seeking to recover the setting from Pearl. They follow him into the room in which the setting is hidden.

Carslake secures the setting and is attacked by the Priestess and her followers. Pearl hears the fracas, and calls to Tom, who dressed as Romeo, has been making love to her from beneath the balcony. After a fight, Carslake breaks away with his adherents. As they look back at the house, they see the figure of Pearl rushing out of the side entrance. Carslake's adherents shoot, and the figure falls. The High Priestess investigating, turns the face of the figure to the light, and it proves to be that of Cicley. As Carslake with the setting is about to pay the adherents who helped him, Pearl holds them up at the point of her gun and demands the setting. The High Priestess takes from Cicely's body the Violet Diamond which Carslake had given her earlier. Pearl reaches out her hand for the setting from Carslake. Instead of handing it to her, he grabs her gun. As he does so, his adherents jump forward to seize Pearl.

STRANDED IN ARCADY (Five Parts—Astra —Oct. 14).—The cast: Lucy Millington (Mrs. Vernon Castle); Donald Prime (Elliott Dexter). Directed by Frank Crane.

Lucy Millington, a well-known dancing instructress, hears a noise, wakes up and sees a man concealed in the bushes. He comes over to her and asks how she got there. Rubbing her head in an effort to think, she finally answers that she does not know. All that she remembered was that a Mrs. Wells called to see her in the city, and begged her to attend a big reception which she was giving. Outside of that she could not recall anything.

Donald Prime, the man to whom Lucy was speaking, was a writer. He had left his home with the intention of taking an automobile trip with a friend of his, named Mr. Girder. Like Lucy, he woke, and instead of being on a trip, found himself in a thick woods. He mentioned that perhaps his friend was playing a trick on him, because in his latest novel he wrote that ninety-eight percent of the woman today are brainless. Then he recalled that Girder said he should be marooned with one for a few days in some isolated spot, and then he might change his opinion.

In New York, Girder calls at Prime's apartment. Learning that Prime went to Quebec, he and Prime's valet leave for Quebec. While Prime locates a camping ground, Lucy manages to catch some fish. While investigating, Prime discovers a camp and finds two men lying dead. Alongside the men Prime finds a bunch of money and judges that death was caused by an argument.

The next day Lucy discovered that they were watched by a gang. Searching for means in which to escape from the woods, they soon found a canoe. By steady paddling they manage to leave the lake, but unfortunately found themselves in a river rushing down a narrow gorge. There was no way out. They must take their chance. Over went the canoe. Prime being unable to swim had to be helped ashore by Lucy. They found their upturned canoe on the bank lower down the river. As they were turning away they found themselves looking into rifles and were captives of the gang. Lucy, being wet to the skin, was given an old pair of trousers to wear, and soon appeared dressed as a man.

That night she saw her chance to escape. In the morning the gang was close behind them and, looking around, they discovered that there was only one means of escape. They must jump from a ninety-foot cliff. Over the edge they went, but when they reached shore again they were recaptured. Girder at this point showed up in his attempt to find Prime. Then began a race between them and the gang to reach Quebec. What was it all about? Reaching Quebec they rushed, dressed as they were, to the lawyer's office. There they found the gang leader and Mrs. Wells. The two were trying to impersonate Lucy and Prime as the heirs to a will. Their purpose was defeated and Prime was forced to change his ideas about one woman at least.

THE SEVEN PEARLS (Episode 5—"Between Fire and Water"—Two Parts—Oct. 14).—Having fallen into a lake from the balloon Harry and Ilma conceal themselves from the villain in his hydroplane by hiding under the stern of a fisherman's boat. The dirigible has sunk to the earth and has been smashed. As Perry glides away in his hydroplane, Harry and Ilma attract the attention of the fishermen and are taken aboard the boat and reach the shore. The executioner, Kismet, returns to Ilma's apartment in time to separate Harry and Ilma, as the impetuous youth is about to declare his love to her.

Undaunted by their dangers, Harry and Ilma decide to return to search the Mason house for the pearls. They search in vain and then decide to terrify Perry's negro servant into opening a safe for them. As they are about to secure the pearls, Perry returns and traps them in a water-tight cellar, which he constructed for experiments on models of submarines. Perry turns on the water and leaves Harry and Ilma to drown. To cover his crime he decides to burn down the house. The episode closes with the conflagration raging above their heads, while they are about to sink in the water which almost touches the roof of the cellar.

MARRIED IN NAME ONLY (Six Parts).—Madeline Francis' wedding day has arrived. The last touches to the wedding dress are being made and the usual excitement pervades the house. Suddenly Robert Worthing, the bridegroom, arrives and with great perturbation depicted upon his face, demands a private interview with his wife-to-be. Alarmed, she rushes to his side, and all present are discharged from the room. Robert announces to Madeline that the wedding cannot take place. As his reason he gives the fact that he has just learned that inherent insanity for several generations has been the curse of his mother's people, and he feels it incumbent upon him to save the woman he loves from becoming the wife, possibly the mother, of those tainted with lunacy.

Just then the first guests arrive. Madeline pleads with Worthing to spare her from the scandal and disgrace of a cancelled wedding at the eleventh hour, and convinces Worthing that it is his duty to abide by the arrangements as made, yet recognizing the justice of Robert's view from the eugenic standpoint. They vow to live as brother and sister. The wedding takes place as scheduled.

Little did they figure the tremendous struggle they engaged in. A great mutual love flaming in their hearts, a love sanctified in the eyes of God and man; yet, like a stern black wall, the terrific ogre of fear separates them. The situation grows unbearable and Robert Worthing considers suicide as the only solution of the problem.

Just then Dr. West, a friend of the Worthing family, who has returned from an extended travel abroad, comes upon the scene. It does not take him long to sense the sinister trouble enveloping Madeline and her husband. He is in the position to shed light into the darkened souls. The curse resting upon the two loving hearts is lifted by the unraveling of an intense secret.

The wall of separation crumbles into dust. The ogre of fear is vanquished, and at last Madeline and Robert are in each other's arms with no clouds upon the horizon to throw shadows on a blissful happiness.

CAMILLE (Six Parts).—Camille (Helen Hesperia).

The incomparable drama of Camille, the woman who loved, opens at the Paris opera, where Armand Duval sees the reigning beauty, Camille, in an opposite box and falls in love at first sight. Armand is a brilliant son of a provincial family, having just completed his law studies, and is to begin the practice of his profession in Paris, but in his infatuation for Camille he drops his work. He secures an introduction and lives openly with Camille until their affair becomes the scandal of Paris and reaches the ears of his father. The latter, in a dramatic interview with Camille, obtains from her a promise to renounce all claims on his son.

Armand, who has gone to meet his father, tires of waiting and hurries to Camille's apartment. She has gone, but has left a note in which she tells him she has found another love and must give him up. Stunned, Armand returns home with his father, who arranges a hunting party as a means of diverting Armand. However, Armand broods over Camille's rejection and deserts the party, hurrying back to Paris, where he is met by his friend, Gustave. The latter tells him of Camille's return to her old admirer, DeVaville.

That evening he meets her at a brilliant social function and offers her his winnings in the card game as the wealth for lack of which he believed Camille has thrown him over. She declines to return to him and Armand, enraged, throws the money at her face, earning thereby a challenge from DeVaville. They meet the next morning and DeVaville falls. Grief-stricken and weary of Paris, Armand turns to travel as relief from the tragedy of his love. Camille becomes ill. Armand's father, hearing the cause of her illness, writes Armand, urging him to return. He hurries back to Paris and finds Camille lying in a stupor on her couch. She revives on seeing her lover and in another powerful display of emotional love-making falls dead at his feet.

tions. Cheyenne Harry escapes from the Florence Penitentiary. He climbs into a train, stopping at the station, and goes into an empty stateroom. An open bag lies on the seat. He picks up a letter and photograph, and sees that it is from some one who signs herself, "Your distracted wife, Molly." Then the owner of the stateroom comes back from dinner.

The men talk together, and the stranger, Henry Beaufort, gives Harry some clothes, and allows him to spend the night in the stateroom. In the morning, before it is quite light, Beaufort suddenly pulls the emergency cord, and in the confusion, Cheyenne makes his escape. He gets a job on a ranch. All went well until the sheriff, meeting the outfit, looked a little too hard in Cheyenne's direction. That night the man beat it, and took to the wilds again.

Beaufort, arrived at his ranch, sends his foreman to Pedro, who has the custody of his and Molly's child, telling him that he is to take the little girl to another town. Pedro, who is drinking heavily on Molly's money, drives off with her, loses control of the team, and is thrown out and killed. The child lies unconscious among the debris of the wagon. Molly is told that her child is dead, and her mind, weakened by the long strain of waiting for the recognition of her secret marriage to Beaufort, leaves her.

Cheyenne happens to come upon the wreck of the wagon, and finds a living child under the broken mass. She is hungry, and he promises her food the next day. He sets out at dawn, but catches sight of the posse on his track. They see him and shoot his horse. Harry and the child fall together down the side of a steep cliff, and Elizabeth is hurt. Harry picks himself up and looks for water for the child. He wanders all day, and, at last, seeing the posse in the distance, fires three shoes to attract their attention. He surrenders in order that the injured child might receive medical attention.

With Cheyenne behind the bars, Elizabeth finds herself the idol of the town. There is a church bazaar, and it is decided to raffle her off to the highest bidder, as every one wants her. Chuck has persuaded Molly to attend with him, and Elizabeth recognizes her mother. Molly will give no explanation, and Bill determines to get the man he thinks has ruined his sister. Molly's first idea, when restored to herself, is gratitude to Cheyenne, whom she visits in prison. He at once recognizes the woman of the photograph. Molly tells Cheyenne that her brother has learned of her plight and has decided to get Henry.

"If I could only get out, I'd see what I could do," answers Cheyenne. Molly determines to enlist the aid of Chuck, the deputy, and persuades him to arrange Harry's escape. Cheyenne goes straight to the Beaufort ranch and is just in time to prevent Bill's shooting Beaufort. Molly arrives, and Beaufort explains that their marriage had to be kept a secret on account of the will of his uncle. He has just received a message telling of the old man's death. Molly forgives her husband, and Elizabeth is accepted as a niece by Bill.

THE GIRL WHO WON OUT (Five Parts—Oct. 8).—The cast: Nancy Grimm (Violet MacMillan); Ellen (Barbara Conley); Chester Noble (P. L. Pembroke); Mrs. Harvey (A. E. Witting); Mr. Wicks (Charles Hill Mailes); Mrs. Walsh (Gertrude Aster); Mr. Noble (L. H. Wells); Jake Beal (Sherman Bainbridge). Story by Judge Willis Brown. Produced by Eugene Moore.

"But you can't support the baby. It's absurd to think that you can. I must send both of you to the home. There is nothing else to be done, so there is no use in your crying about it."

Protests on Nancy's part did not change the decision of the representative of the Children's Aid Society to send the two forlorn little orphans to the home, where Nancy was separated from her baby sister, and life looked bitter.

One day the baby is adopted by a wealthy Mrs. Walsh, who soon tires of the child, but her husband comes to love Ellen. The matron refuses to tell Nancy where the baby is.

When the judge of the Children's Court says she cannot see her sister unless those adopting the child give permission, Nancy throws herself onto a bench and Chester Noble, a law student, sympathizes with her.

Later Nancy is adopted by Mrs. Wicks, a slovenly, ill-tempered woman, the mother of several children. While looking through some old magazines, Nancy sees a picture of Mrs. Walsh and Ellen. That night Nancy cuts off her hair and, clothed in a boy's ragged suit, slips away.

The matron is immediately notified of Nancy's disappearance; her description is given in the newspaper advertisement. Nancy finds her way to the Walsh home, takes Ellen and hurries down the road in a wagon. Stopping near a stream, she sees the camp of Bill Harley. The baby cries; Nancy staggers into the camp where Mrs. Harley cares for the child. The next day Harley's son and Nancy go fishing and see some hoboes steal an auto. While the boy rushes to tell the owners Nancy punctures the tire. The rescuers receive ten dollars as a reward, but the boy gives his money to Nancy.

Near the city, Nancy leaves her friends and rents a room, saying their sister is coming. To avert suspicion, Nancy fixes up a dummy in boy's clothes, and dresses in her own girl's clothes. The landlady becomes suspicious when she reads of the kidnapping of Millionaire Walsh's adopted child and informs the matron. Nancy gets a glimpse of the matron and her agent; she rushes wildly to the room, and, changing into the boy's garb again, escapes through the window. The baby is taken to the Home. Mrs. Walsh refuses to adopt her again and another couple takes her; the woman is a timid creature and her husband a great bully; they are very poor.

Nancy runs into Chester Noble, who takes her to the office of his uncle, a prominent lawyer, and there they plan to help her and Ellen. The case is taken to court after Nancy has been sent to the home of Chester's parents in the South, where she wins her way into their hearts. Later she returns to the city with them. Chester has borrowed a thousand dollars, and in order to find Ellen sends for Jake Beal, whom he instructs to tell the court that a thousand-dollar legacy has been left to Mrs. Grimm.

Mrs. Noble adopts Nancy, but the bully refuses to give Ellen up. But when Ellen holds out her arms to Nancy and cries, the timid wife insists that the baby be given up. So the children are reunited.

FIGHTING ODDS (6 Parts—Oct. 7).—The cast: Mrs. Copley (Maxine Elliott); Mr. Copley (Henry Clive); John W. Blake (Charles Dalton); Egan (George Odell); Jewett (Regan Hughston); District Attorney (William T. Carleton); Detective Butler (Eric Hudson).

James Copley is a young and successful automobile manufacturer in a middle western city. He believes with Henry Ford that well-paid labor is productive labor and strives to keep his men contented. His splendid success, which he owes in a large measure to his wife, excites the greedy envy of the unscrupulous John W. Blake, a crooked financier of Wall Street.

Blake persuades Copley to become head of a fake motor merger, and, then by a switching of figures in important account books, wrecks the company and has Copley sent to Sing Sing.

Mrs. Copley, left alone to fight to redeem her husband's honor, pretends she is a wealthy English widow, and manages to get an introduction to Blake. He, unsuspecting, becomes enamored of her. Working with the district attorney, she learns that the documents she needs to clear her husband are in a vault in Blake's home. She is on the verge of getting them when Blake discovers her identity, locks her in the vault and prepares to flee. He is interrupted by his butler, who is really a detective, and eventually goes off to prison to take the place of the man he unjustly accused.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

JUST WHAT BOBBY WANTED (One Reel).—The cast: Bobby (Bobby Connelly); His Mother (Mabel Ballin); His Playmate (Helen Connelly); His Adopted Sister (Aida Horton).

Bobby hasn't any regular playmate until the woman next door adopts a girl about seven years old, and then she and Bobby become pals. They are fishing one day in a brook where there isn't enough water to keep a fish alive, when they come across an old shack, and seated in the door is a mite of a girl, who is hungry and ragged. She is the motherless child of Jim, the village drunkard, but Bobby doesn't know that, but is sorry and brings food to the child.

Then Bobby and his palymate have a great scheme. They take the child to his father's barn and fix up a "home" there for her, with a bed, tables, chairs and everything. Bobby's playmate is to be its mother and he the father, and nobody is to know.

A night or two later, Jim comes home drunk and sets his shack afire. He is rescued badly burned and the shack is destroyed. Of course the child is safe in Bobby's father's barn but nobody knows that and the village believes the girl perished in the fire.

The home in the barn is getting along finely when Bobby's playmate tells her foster-mother all about it as a great secret. Jim is sobered by the supposed death of his child and has a good job and he lets Bobby's parents adopt the little girl as Bobby's own sister; so, you see, Bobby got just what he wanted.

BOBBY'S SECRET (One Reel).—The cast: Bobby (Bobby Connelly); Gladys, His Cousin (Helen Connelly); Bunny (Aida Horton).

Bobby's parents go out a great deal in society and he is left in the care of servants, who won't let him play with other boys and girls. Bobby does not like this and is cross and irritable, so they put him on a "diet." His father and mother go away on a visit and Bobby's nurse, who has a sweetheart, does not pay much attention to Bobby.

It isn't very long before Bobby gets a chance to run away from the nurse and he meets "Ginger Cake," who is a "regular fellow." Bobby has a few pennies which they spend, and then Ginger takes Bobby to his own home where he meets his little sister, Bunny, who cannot run or play because she has infantile paralysis.

Bobby is sorry for Bunny and takes her everywhere he and Ginger go in a rude little push-cart they make. He learns she can be cured if only Mrs. Ginger had $120. Now, Bobby has just that amount in bright $10 gold pieces, his various relatives have given him. He gets this money and he and Ginger take Bunny to a hospital where she is cured.

Meanwhile Bobby's parents return home and miss Bobby's $120 from his toy bank. They learn about the nurse being away so much of the time and accuse her of taking the money. Bobby says the nurse did not take it; that it was his money and he spent it and it is all a secret. So, there is a mystery in Bobby's home until his little cousin Gladys comes to visit him and his mother overhears him telling her all about Bunny.

Bobby's father and mother visit the Gingers and are very proud of Bobby when they find out what he has done, and Ginger Cakes says Bobby is a real "regular fellow."

WHEN BOBBY BROKE HIS ARM (One Reel).—The cast: Bobby (Bobby Connelly); His Mother (Mabel Ballin); Little Jones Girl (Helen Connelly).

Bobby falls off the front porch and breaks his arm a day or two before his mother is to leave to visit relatives, so he is packed away to stay with his grandmother in the country. He has a fine time for a few days until grandma makes him do lots of chores, which Bobby doesn't like.

He forms the acquaintance of Stutts, the grocer boy, who takes him about on his wagon and lets him drive. Passing the Jones' farm, Bobby sees a calf, with which he makes friends. He also makes a playmate of the little Jones girl and they drag the calf along wherever they go in the woods or along the country road.

One day the calf is missing from the Jones' barn and Bobby and the girl find it tied to the butcher's wagon in front of the shop. They know the calf is going to be slaughtered, so, when nobody is looking, they untie the animal and hurry away from the village. They walk until it becomes dark and then all three curl up by the roadside and fall asleep.

Bobby's mother reaches grandma's that same afternoon and there is consternation when Bobby is not there. Mrs. Jones also misses her daughter and the butcher is looking for the persons who stole his calf, for he had bought the animal from Mrs. Jones, who had to have the money to pay the rent.

Bobby, the girl and the calf finally are found asleep by the two mothers and everything is all right. Bobby's mother pays the butcher, so Bobby can keep the calf and Mrs. Jones does not lose her home.

BOBBY AND THE HELPING HAND (One Reel).—Bobby is in the woods with a sleepy nurse when he runs across Bill, the tramp. He leaves the nurse asleep and induces Bill to tell him fairy tales until found by the nurse who recognizes in Bill her sister's vagabond husband. A few days later, Bobby finds the tramp locked in the village jail for begging. He pleads with the judge, assuring him the tramp has six children, and finally obtains his release, the judge saying he will investigate Bobby's story.

Bobby and the tramp hunt up a shack which the tramp sets about fixing up as a temporary home. Bobby realizes the judge is likely to come any time and investigate and that Bill is supposed to have six children. So he gets three of his boy playmates and two little girls to play they are Bill's children and to make up the six he picks up the judge's baby.

The youngsters hardly reach the shack before the judge arrives. He counts five children and demands the sixth. The baby has got his face all smeared with blacking which Bobby is vainly trying to rub off when the judge's wife, having missed the baby, rushes up, also Bill's wife and her sister.

By this time Bill's "children" have tired of the game, which is apparent to the judge. He gets very angry, but no more so than his wife, who has found her baby all blackened up. Things look dark for Bobby and the tramp, but the former wins the judge by a manly little confession of it all, asking that he be given all the blame. Bill's wife forgives him and everything ends happily, as they always do where Bobby is concerned.

THE PRINCESS OF PARK ROW (Five Parts—Oct. 1).—The cast: Margot (Mildred Manning); Tom Kearney (Wallace MacDonald); Kronski (William Dunn); Nicols (John Costello); Berta (Anne Brody). Diretced by Ashley Miller.

The opening scenes of the picture are laid in the palace grounds of the king of Bellaria where is revealed a plot in which the baron has succeeded in stealing from the people mining properties of a vast value. The accomplice of the baron has fled to America and is hiding in New York City. The king determines to restore the lands to his subjects, and believing the baron lost his fortune in the deal, an innocent victim of the accomplice, sends Prince Nicols to New York to raise gold on his personal collateral. The prince is accompanied by Count Kronski, who is in league with the baron, and by his daughter, Princess Margot, and maid, Berta.

Settled safely in New York, the Prince negotiates the loan without trouble, while the count secretly meets the exiled accomplice and the princess falls in love with a reporter "covering" the hotel. The count and the baron, balked in their effort to delay the consummation of the loan, kidnap the prince in a taxicab and make him a prisoner in a deserted house on the outskirts of the city. Alarmed by his absence, the princess goes alone to another rendezvous of the conspirators, whose address she accidentally learned. Her suspicions that harm has befallen her father are confirmed by seeing Count Kronski there, and she forces her way into the place.

The reporter, also on the trail of the count, enters the place but is seized by the conspirators as he tries to go to the rescue of the princess, whom he has met at the hotel and with whom he is in love. He is made a prisoner and the count, realizing the game is up, rushes away to the desterted house to extort money from the prince to kill him.

Escaping from the house, the princess summons the police, who release and capture the baron. He tells where the prince is held prisoner, and the police, the princess and the reporter reaches there just in time to prevent the count from killing the prince. There is a pretty ending when the king, apprised by cable of the plot and its defeat, makes the reporter a prince so he may marry the princess, whose love he won at Coney Island, thinking her only a maid.

THE CANDY KID (Two Parts—Oct. 15).—Tony and Hugo are the proprietors of rival candy shops. Hugo's homely wife acts as cashier in his place, while Dolly, a peach, is cashier for Tony. Dolly draws all the trade to Tony's shop and Hugo's shop is deserted. Tony tries to make love to Dolly and she leaves him. Hugo's wife has left and Hugo engages Dolly to work for him. She soon draws all the trade from Tony and Hugo does a rushing business.

Tony swears revenge. He runs a bomb factory in the rear of the candy shop, and has a huge bomb made to destroy his rival. As none of his men have the nerve to throw it, they advertise for a brave man. Among the applicants is Billy, who needs a job badly and who makes Sky High Billy Wardwell and his pal, Duke Kingsbottom, are amused by the town constables when a local magician has unsuccessfully endeavored with them. Sky High manipulates a piece of wire, outwits the cops and the two adventurers make their way out of town on a freight train. They find themselves stranded in the small town of Wentworth.

There Kingsbottom, an inventor of a tremendous amount of Wentworth and the two worthies ride from the depot on a load of goods-boxes, filled with machinery for Kingsbottom's workshop. Sky High, known as Commander Jack Hyde-Chatham, the inventor's daughter, and she informs them he must have breakfast in order of her family's absent guest. Wentworth and Jane have gone to the city and he promises to arrive soon. To that end he secures a job as the local fire-chief.

The presence of warfare on an aeroplane which he discovers will make the progress of aviation absolutely safe, Sky High and Kingsbottom start to the latter's shop, and decide to frame a plan necessary to persuade the government to appropriate funds to New York to interest capitalists, while Sky High promotes the invisible shield the Bradfords of Wentworth.

While awaiting Kingsbottom's return to Jane, Sky High, during the absence of Jane's aunt, who had gone to visit some friends at Chester, has a chance for love-making with Jane. He does so and Sky High's sweet girl confesses that he is a figure to her fancy. When the news spread the townsfolk were greatly alarmed at Sky High's attempt to introduce Kingsbottom's aeroplane. Jane leaves the city and is overjoyed on the mail and has planned to spend "Sunday" returning from New York with a big band of stock subscribers—but the newspaper people is discouraging. Sky High's downcast heart.

Just at the moment when matters look darkest Sky High perfects Kingsbottom that he will succeed test and the capitalists to prove the worthiness of Wentworth will agree to have the concern in the event of "Sky High" making good. In his hurry from an interview it is agreed and "Sky High" makes the ascent and descent with flawless success. Jane Bradford-business manager proud the soundness of such a brave man as Sky High—and expects to be true. Lieut. Hirschbaum is happy in the success of his invention.

THE SILENT SAILOR—(5 Parts—Sept. 24)—The cast: Laura Sutphen, Mae Fulton; Donald Loring (Mahlon Hamilton); Sue Schuyler (Ogden Crane); Von Kolnitz (Charles Eldridge); Walter Schuyler (Miss Mackay); Herr Von Kolnitz (Wyndham Standing); Hartman (Henry Leone); Butler (Edward James). Adapted by Wallace C. Clifton from the story by Blair Hall, in "Snappy Stories." Directed by Burton L. King.

Laura Sutphen, daughter of wealthy John Sutphen, because of her engagement with Donald Loring, the son of her employer, Loring is visited by Reyburt, the district attorney who warns him against Laura.

Laura's friend Sue Schuyler has aroused the comments of the gossips by her flirtation with Von Kolnitz. Previous to Von Kolnitz Laura's attentions were centered in those of the Grandin's home, while the Grandins are away, and a storm forces her to remain overnight. Von Kolnitz calls to see Mr. Grandin. The last train has gone, so Laura is the sole witness for the night. Donald Loring also calls and after explanations, he suggests that he had better escort her home.

At her home next day, Laura is threatened by the newspaper in the subject of the "Tattle Tale," who says a full account of her adventure will be published if she does not meet his terms. As she leaves the office she sees Donald Loring leave by another door, showing that it was he who gave the information. The editor agrees to suppress the story if she will invite Herr Von Kolnitz and Sue Schuyler to her next house party. Laura intends to represent the "Tattle Tale" herself.

Sue Schuyler and Von Kolnitz are unduly friendly at the house party. That evening Laura overhears them, each under the impression that the other is absent, kissing in the summer-house and vowing love at midnight. She sees Donald entering, conceals herself behind the curtains, and to punish him for spying, Laura dons a peignoir and meets Von Kolnitz herself. She begins Von Kolnitz's courtship and soon Laura succeeds in drawing him to her, while he reciprocates her advances. Donald is puzzled, but keeps in hiding and soon retires without being seen. The next morning Von Kolnitz requests an explanation of Von Kolnitz, he replies that since she [illegible] is needed, and begs her to meet him that night. Laura suggests that Donald leave. He is hurt, but refuses [illegible] and will send him. At midnight, Laura is shocked to see Sue in Von Kolnitz's embrace, and Donald prepares to take a flashlight of them. She tries to stop him but too late, and Donald takes the picture. Sue and Von Kolnitz are startled, and Laura, [illegible] motive, urges Von Kolnitz to take the camera away from him.

Donald explains that he is a secret service agent and that he has caught Von Kolnitz about to take a photograph of his compromising position with Sue for the purpose of levying blackmail. Von Kolnitz, quickly regaining his composure, declares that despite all their efforts, Sue's name will be mentioned. Laura [illegible] by saying that Miss Schuyler has been assuming her and Donald will thus use her for the purpose of exposing Von Kolnitz. Donald gives a signal and plain-clothes men seize the distinguished foreigner. After [illegible] Donald makes [illegible] to [illegible] the engagement ring again on Laura's finger, and realizing that her lover has now [illegible] a man of himself she consents.

Mary's widowed mother dies and leaves her penniless at the tender age of eight. Charles Wendel, the kindly old corner grocer, after consultation with Mrs. Wendel, adopts Mary and she soon becomes the dominating spirit in the Wendel household, even inducing rather tough little Ralph Wendel, ten years old, to stop smoking cigarettes.

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

TYPHOON FAN COMPANY 1544 BROADWAY NEW YORK CITY

Wendel opens a new store in honor of his son, Ralph's, return from college. It is his idea to take Ralph into partnership. Mary is delighted with the prospect of Ralph's return, for she loves him, but there is a disappointment in store for the Wendel household, for Ralph has changed from a likable, unassuming boy to a supercilious, high and mighty man.

Wendel shows Ralph his new store and proposes the partnership, which is rejected by Ralph, on the grounds that he would much prefer something more genteel—say a position in a bank. Wendel's pride is hurt, but still loving his son, he takes Ralph to the president of the bank with which he has done business for years and secures a position for him.

Ralph neglects Mary and takes up with Stella, who poses as a society girl, but who in reality is an adventuress. Urged on by Stella, Ralph introduces her and her friend, Oscar Leaming, to his father. Leaming proposes to Wendel that they incorporate his grocery for a big sum and sell the stock around to everyone and make a great profit, but Wendel scents that all is not well and rejects the proposition.

Anxious to retain the good will of Stella, Ralph goes to her and proposes that she let him in on a good proposition, promising to get all the money she wants. Ralph forges his father's name to a check for $100,000 and gets the money, which he gives to Stella, who hands him a bit of paper as a receipt, and she assures him that he will get it back in a few days. Leaming tries to get away with the money without dividing with Stella.

Several days later the bank president calls on Wendel with the forged check and Ralph confesses. At first Wendel is of a mind to let Ralph go to jail, but after listening to the plea of Mrs. Wendel and Mary, he decides to make the check good, thereby being compelled to sell all he owns and start over again with a little push cart carrying a little load of fruit and vegetables from house to house. He tells Ralph he must leave his house and not return until he has redeemed himself.

Wendel suggests to Mary that she leave them and let them shift for themselves, as he does not believe it right that she give them some of her hard earned money, but Mary is firm in her resolve to stay with them in their trouble, as they stood by her in her trouble. The days and months roll by until a year or more pass. Then to the farm where the family make their home Ralph comes on day, bronzed with hard work, his head held high through a consciousness that he was fighting to redeem himself and succeeding.

Ralph's father is glad to see him, and when Ralph asks his father where Mary is, he is told she is out under the trees in the garden. Ralph goes to her, for he has come to a realization of his true love for her. And as the young people kiss, Wendel and his wife, watching them from the cover of nearby bushes, kiss too. And happiness comes to the Wendel family again.

CONSCIENCE (Five Parts—Sept. 30).—The cast: Serama and Ruth Somers (Gladys Brockwell); Madge (Marjorie Daw); Her Mother (Eugenie Forde); Alice Marsh (Eve Southern); Mrs. Marsh (Genevieve Blinn); Cecil Brooke (Douglas Gerrard); Alan Mackay (Edward Cecil); Rupert Cowdray (Harry C. Lonsdale); Ned Langley (Colin Chase); Dr. Norton, The Devil (Bertram Grassby). Directed by Bertram Bracken.

Conscience comes to Ruth Somers after she gets a message from a man whose sweetheart killed herself when Ruth stole the man's love. At the moment of receiving the message, Ruth is in her room preparing for her wedding to another.

Conscience takes Ruth into its court and on the screen Ruth's thoughts of her past evil deeds are shown. In these scenes Ruth sees herself going through those shameful acts of deception, the majority of which take place on board a yacht which had been loaned to Ruth by the man she was engaged to marry.

However, Ruth brushes conscience aside and appears for the marriage ceremony. This is interrupted by the appearance of the man who wrote the message. By her scorn of this man she breaks his heart and he goes into a room and kills himself. Cecil Brooks, the bridegroom, then turns against Ruth and departs. During the entire picture, the devil, personified by Dr. Norton, is at Ruth's side, grinning at her evil. When Cecil leaves her Ruth falls to her knees and asks forgiveness of heaven.

FOX STANDARD PICTURE.

THE CONQUEROR (Ten Parts, September 16).—The cast: Sam Houston (William Farnum); Eliza Allen (Jewel Carmen); Sidney Stokes (Charles Clary); Jumbo (J. A. Marcus); Mammy (Carrie Clarke Ward); Dr. Spencer (William Chisholm); Judge Allen (Robert Dunbar); James Houston (Owen Jones). Written by Henry Christeen Warnack. Directed by R. A. Walsh.

Because Sam Houston had been raised in the mountains he had little or no education. When his father died Sam felt as if he had lost the last friend he had in the world. He still had the Indians, among whom he lived since the earliest dawn of consciousness. The city was not far from where Sam lived. He made frequent trips to it, and that was how he came to meet Eliza Allen. When she discovered that he was so ignorant that he could neither read nor write it meant for her the end of their acquaintanceship. Sam thereupon began his education.

One day soon after Eliza had learned this awful truth Sam went to see her. She could not bear the thought of receiving such a person, so she told her negro mammy to tell Sam that she could not see him because she was "constrainedly unable." The negro mammy did not tell Sam this. She told him that her mistress had said she could not see him until he "strained to be constable."

Sam decided to become constable. He asked a friend how to attain this valued position, and the friend replied, "Drinks and votes." Whiskey was dear in the Tennessee of 1825. When Sam bagged a silver fox and sold its skin for a handful of silver he found that he had money enough for only a few votes. But his despair was short-lived. Teddy, his dog, seemed to sense that his master needed money, so he quietly slipped the fox skin from the shop of the dealer who had bought it, and brought it back to Sam. Sam sold it again. He bought more whiskey and more votes.

When the skin was returned once more in the faithful teeth of Teddy Sam bought more whiskey and more votes. So he kept it up until finally he had sold that one fox skin often enough to elect him constable. Then he went to see Eliza. The mammy answered the door again.

"Tell your mistress I am a constable now," said Sam, "and I am ready to wait upon her."

But Eliza only laughed at mammy, sent down a message that she would not receive Mr. Houston until he was sheriff, and returned to her knitting. When Sam became sheriff he finally gained admittance into the sacred quarters. When he asked Eliza to marry him, she replied, "I will when you become governor."

Sam became governor.

Then Eliza married him. But he had become incensed by her repeated refusals, and when she finally became his wife he threw her aside and joined the settlers in Texas. Eliza followed him and took refuge in a convent.

Sidney Stokes had for many years been an aspirant to the hand of Eliza. There was something about his eyes which the girl did not like, and though she had been kind to him she had steadily refused him. When his insistence became nothing short of insulting and he was forced to defend himself with a pistol, Sidney fled into the night, outlawed. He took with him an undying hatred against Sam Houston, his successful rival.

When Houston was elected governor Sidney was busy inciting the Mexicans against Texas. Soon after Sam came to Texas the invaders crossed the boundary. Houston led the Americans in their resistance to the Mexicans. A great battle took place.

Sam found the Indians to be his allies once more. Stokes and his men were repulsed. The crisis of the border warfare was reached when the Mexicans, incited by Stokes, attacked the convent in which a helpless handful of nuns was living. Sam Houston rushed to the rescue. The Mexicans and Indians battled hand to hand.

In Eliza's room Sam met Stokes. The fight that ensued was terrific. It was not a battle of soldier against soldier, but of man against man for the possession of a girl. Sam won, and took Eliza back to his home.

EXILE (Lasky—Five Parts—Sept. 17).—The cast: Claudie Perez (Madame Petrova); Vincento Perez (Wyndham Standing); Richmond Hervey (Mahlon Hamilton); The Governor of Exile (Warren Cook); Manuel D'Alfrache (Charles Martin); His Wife (Violet Reed). Director, Maurice Tourneur.

In faraway "Exile," a Portugese colony, Richmond Hervey, an American engineer, has made great changes in the desolate colony, making it habitable for the white people by systems of electric lighting and water supply.

Hervey is working for the Government and another servant of the Government is the Lord Chief Justice of the colony, Vincento Perez, who holds the power of life and death over many thousands of Arabs. Perez is unscrupulous and brutal in his dealings with the natives, and at the opening of the story is trying to force the local silk dealers out of business to further his own ends. Several times he has sentenced innocent men to death or imprisonment for this purpose.

As he needs more money to carry out his plans, Perez writes to Hervey, thinking that he will have no more scruples about his dealings with the Arabs than himself, and exposes his whole treacherous dealings with the silk merchants.

Hervey has never quite trusted Perez and has disliked Claudia, Perez's beautiful wife, for her seeming coldness. He realizes then, that with this letter he has the power to ruin Perez and crush Claudia at a single blow, by exposing Perez's infamy. He therefore writes Perez that he is not that sort of a scoundrel and threatens to expose the plot.

The threat completely overwhelms Perez, who sees the end of his office as well as nnancial ruin staring him in the face. Perez creeps back home that night, fearing the vengeance of the natives, and informs Claudia, telling her that she must go to Hervey and offer him anything in her power to get the letter. When Claudia makes the offer to Hervey, he sees that at last his moment of triumph over her has arrived, and tells her that in her gift there lies the only bribe he will accept, giving her twenty-four hours to think it over.

The following day passes and Claudia goes to Hervey's bungalow. A sumptuous dinner is served and Hervey is struck by her entire absence of fear, and believes that she plans to shoot him. At the end of the dinner she goes to her room, but gives him its key.

It is then only that Hervey's eyes are opened to the fact that although the woman was only carrying out her bargain, she was very genuinely in love with him, and he tells her that he will not take advantage of the situation.

He gives her her husband's incriminating letter, which she returns next day to Perez, telling him that of course he has forfeited all right to her respect and that she intends leaving him. The man tries to make her submit by a humiliating scene before the servants, but she makes good her escape.

The next day the Arabs rise against Perez and he is lynched by the furious natives. Hervey arrives only barely in time to save Claudia's life, for at the last moment she has rushed to the help of her husband. The last scene shows them listening together to the diminishing sounds of the Arabs as the angry mob disperses, safe in the knowledge of their further inseparable happiness.

SUNSET TRAIL—Lasky—5 Parts—Sept. 17).—The cast: Bess Aiken (Vivian Martin); Vernon Treloar (Henry A. Barrows); Kirke Levington (Harrison Ford); Judd Aiken (Charles Ogle); Camilla Aiken (Carmen Phillips); Price Lovel (Billy Elmer). Directed by George H. Melford.

Bess Aiken lives in the mountains of California with only her father and mother for company, although she craves young companionship and the normal pleasures of girlhood. Her mother also, is dissatisfied, for she is much younger than her husband, who is of the slow, plodding type, and she yearns for the stage, on which she was a star before her marriage. Vernon Treloar and his nephew, Kirke Levington, are camping near the Aiken homestead. He is a wealthy banker, and has taken a fancy to his young nephew, whom he has decided upon to be his heir.

Treloar meets Bess' mother one day, and the two become friends. Treloar is later seen making love to Mrs. Aiken by Price Lovel, her husband's old friend, who loses no time in reporting the affair to Mr. Aiken. The latter orders his wife out of his house, and she and Treloar go to New York, where they are married. While this affair has been going on, the two young people have become friends, but when his uncle departs for the East, he also leaves.

Living alone with her father and Price grows irksome for the girl, who longs for pretty clothes and good times like the girls she reads about. Camilla, her mother, grows tired of New York, and longing to see her daughter, returns to Treloar's camp. Bess is given permission to spend a month with her, and to her delight she meets Kirke again, and their friendship develops into a love affair.

Camilla, however, wishes to break this up as she has formed a desperate flirtation with another man. In order to accomplish this, she plans to have Bess disgust and repulse Kirke at a masked ball which she plans and for which she designs a brazen costume for the girl, and while Bess is the sensation of the evening, Camilla and the man with whom she is infatuated creep off by themselves.

They are followed by Bess, who has always believed her mother to be a wonderful woman. Bess is heartbroken at her mother's infidelity. Treloar unexpectedly appears and Bess, to save her mother, says that she is the one who came there to meet the other man.

By some mischance, Kirke is also there and hears the confession from her own lips. Bess starts back to her father through the dense woods of the mountains which separate the two houses, and is lost. Searching parties are organized and the woods are scoured.

The anxiety unnerves Camilla, who confesses all to Treloar. Judd Aiken, her former husband, and Kirke, then start out to find the girl and their new love for her leads them straight to her at the old tree, at the foot of which she has fallen, exhausted, and at last are made happy.

GEORGE KLEINE SYSTEM.

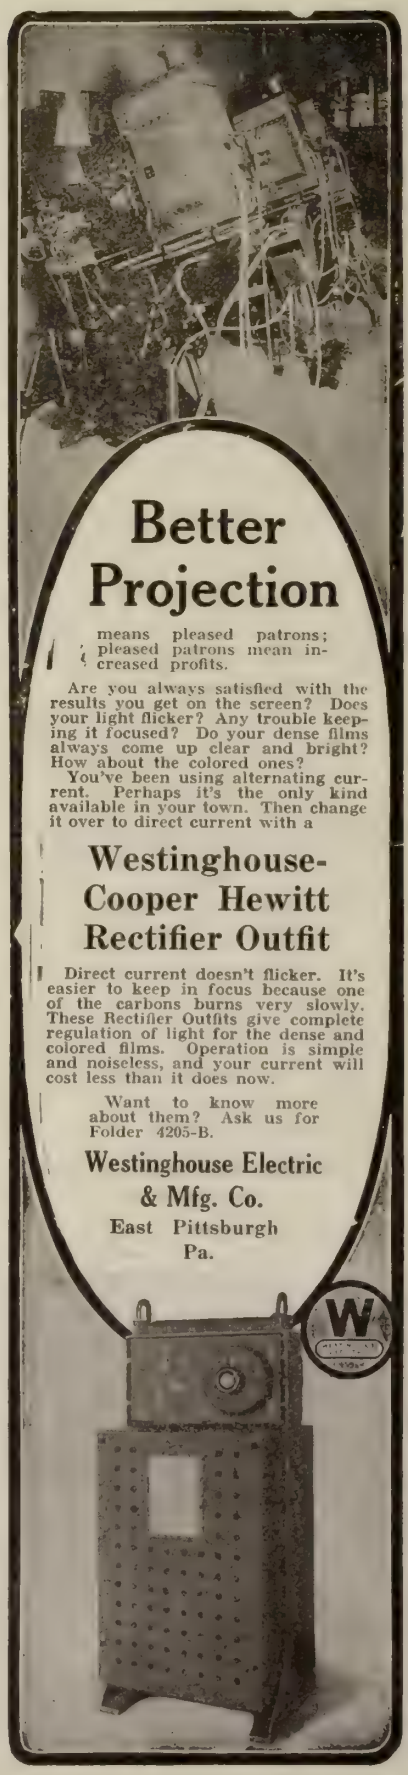
THE FIBBERS (Essanay—Four Parts—Oct. 15).—The cast: Peter Cort (Bryant Washburn); Barbara (Virginia Valli); Phillip Allen (John Cossar).

Kindness to fellow man seldom fails to reap its own reward, as is proven by the strange adventures of Peter Cort and his wife, Barbara. Cort is a young architect whose struggles have netted him a bank-roll of hardly more than $300. His financial straits are rendered more desperate when a hobo, injured in a nearby railroad wreck, is brought to his home for treatment. Despite the doctors' bills, John and Barbara nurse the outcast back to health. In an attempt to raise some money, Barbara decides to try and sell a play she wrote at school. The hobo suggests she send it to Phillip Allen, a big producer. She does and to her amazement it is accepted.

Simultaneously, John gets a commission from Mrs. Stoddard, a wealthy society woman. In attempting to conceal good fortune from each other for the surprise of their glorious fulfillments, many misunderstandings arise between Bab and John. She sees him with Mrs. Stoddard and believes the worst. He sees her with Allen and suspects her perfidy. The breaking point is almost reached when Bab's play comes out a tremendous success. John reads of it and his wife's authorship in the newspapers, then reveals to her his success. The two are brought to a happy reconciliation with the hobo as their fairy god-father, for it develops that it was through his former friendship with Allen that Bab's play was accepted; and also that Mrs. Stoddard, in reality, is his daughter.

TRIANGLE FILM CORPORATION.

THE LAMB (Five Parts—Reissued on Sept. 2).—Gerald, a sprig of an old family, has won a beautiful girl as a fiancee, and everything seems merry as a wedding bell, when the girl, Mary, discovers a yellow streak in her lamb. Mary gives the man the mitten. Later he goes out to Arizona, where the girl and her friends are enjoying a visit at a ranch. The lamb leaves the transcontinental train to buy some Indian trinkets. The train speeds off without him. Crooks offer to take him to the train by a short route, then pack him, and he is left for dead on the desert. Later, both Gerald and an aviator, whom he meets on the desert, are captured by Yaqui Indians, taken across the Mexican border and held prisoners. A thrilling fight ensues between the Yaquis and Mexican soldiers, in which the Indians are victorious. Gerald's sweetheart, in an automobile party that ventures across the line, is captured by the Indians, too. Gerald and Mary are left alone together. Then the real qualities of the lamb assert themselves.



Better Projection
means pleased patrons; pleased patrons mean increased profits.
Are you always satisfied with the results you get on the screen? Does your light flicker? Any trouble keeping it focused? Do your dense films always come up clear and bright? How about the colored ones?
You've been using alternating current. Perhaps it's the only kind available in your town. Then change it over to direct current with a
Westinghouse-Cooper Hewitt Rectifier Outfit
Direct current doesn't flicker. It's easier to keep in focus because one of the carbons burns very slowly. These Rectifier Outfits give complete regulation of light for the dense and colored films. Operation is simple and noiseless, and your current will cost less than it does now.

"Back up your Insurance Policy"

Your house and equipment are covered by insurance, to be sure, but what's insurance? While you're waiting to repair or rebuild, your competitor is drawing your patrons into his theatre—and it's no easy job to get them back.

As an adequate and sure protection for your theatre, your equipment, and your business, you should install Johns-Manville Fire Extinguishers, and plenty of them, throughout your house. They never arrive too late—they're always ready, and deadly to all incipient fires. Discharged by previously stored air pressure—or, if space permits, by pumping. Remember that this "two-way" method is EXCLUSIVE with the Johns-Manville Extinguisher.

You're taking unnecessarily big chances if you haven't a Johns-Manville Fire Extinguisher at every danger point.

HELL'S HINGES (Five Parts—Reissued on Sept. 16).—A lawless tough town of the West is "Hell's Hinges." The Rev. Robert Henley and his sister, Faith Henley, come to this town from the East. A band of tough men and women from the saloon and dance hall kept by Silk Miller disturb the meeting held by the Rev. Henley. Blaze Tracy drives the bunch out, when one of them offers to insult Faith. Silk Miller, with the aid of one of the inmates of his dance hall, gets the minister intoxicated. While Blaze is away they burn the church. On his return he is shocked to find the girl mourning over her dead brother and the destruction of the sacred edifice. He shoots Miller, and sets the saloon and dance hall on fire. The town is wined out by the spreading of the flames by a high wind. Blaze takes the girl away from the town with the hope of a happy future for them.

THE BOND OF FEAR (Five Parts—Sept. 23).—The cast: Cal Nelson (Roy Stewart); Mar Jackson (Belle Bennett); Judge Camden McClure (Melborne McDowell); John McClure (George Webb); Hotel Proprietor (John Lince). Directed by Jack Conway.

Camden McClure, Judge of the Circuit Court, was an advocate of the theory that the law should be enforced to the last letter without regard for sentiment or circumstances. This attitude he maintained in regard to the affair of his brother, for whom he was legal guardian. The brother needed more money than the court allowed. Judge McClure rejected his plea for funds.

A fight followed. The brother drew a revolver. The Judge wrenched it from the boy and, while holding it the trigger was pulled. His brother fell, apparently dead. The Judge became a fugitive. He went back and secured Cal Nelson, a westerner, as a guide through the bad lands. While they were crossing the desert a woman came upon them. She had fled from the shanty where a man lay dead.

Judge McClure became delirious from the heat, and told his secret tragedy to the woman, Mary. When sanity returned he suspected he had confessed. Mary admitted he had. Then she said she, too, was a killer, a woman who had killed her husband. The two decided to marry. They went to a settlement for a minister. The guide was in love with Mary but renounced his love so the woman could be happy.

At the hotel he read in the paper his brother was alive. Instantly he became the strong enforcer of the law. Believing himself safe he denounced Mary as a murderess and notified the authorities. When the sheriff came for her Cal Nelson carried her away into the desert on his horse, outfooting the posse. Mary told Cal she only pretented she was a killer so that the Judge would not feel alone in his guilt.

The Judge learned the newspaper was more than a year old. Again he became a fugitive and started into the desert after Cal and Mary. He was followed by two men. He rode into a sandstorm and there was caught in a landslide resulting in his death. The men following wired his brother their search was fruitless.

Mary and Cal survived the storm. Cal begged her to wed him, but she said her faith was forever broken. They journeyed together to a distant stage terminus. As she was about to board the stage her faith in him returned and she rested in Cal's arm.

THE DEVIL DODGER (Five Parts—Sept. 23).—The cast: Roger Ingraham (Jack Gilbert); Fluffy (Carolyn Wagner); Silent Scott (Roy Stewart); Ricketts (John Lince); Mrs. Ricketts (Apna Dodge); Bowie (George Willis). Directed by Cliff Smith.

Snowstorm, Arizona, was Silent Scott's town, and among the activities of his dance-hall was Fluffy, a little dancer from waifdom, whom he favored and protected. Morals were not discussed in Snowstorm—before the "Devil Dodger" came.

The Rev. Roger Ingraham, an ascetic, sought health in the west, and after a few spiritual observations, decided to check the downward speed of the town. His sign announcing Sunday services was shot down.

But Fluffy was curious, and church was a novelty demanding inspection. Silent Scott resented her interest in religion, broke into the services, and ordered her home. The young minister walked into his glare of hatred and seized his arm. The die was cast.

When Scott warned the people to "Keep away from that devil dodger," the minister realized the odds against him and became reckless in his discouragement. He provoked a quarrel with Scott (noted for his quick gunplay), but as the latter drew, Fluffy stepped between them. A game of cards decided that the "Devil Dodger" should live.

Fluffy took him to her cabin and nursed him back to health. Love grew naturally. Jealous of his treasure, Scott came to kill, but hearing a prayer for Fluffy's salvation, surrendered to his better self and departed. Hearing that his bitterest enemy was in town, looking for trouble, he went after him, true to his reputation. Fluffy was torn by two loves. The minister realized that his claim was secondary, and that she could not stand the test of Scott's death. So he interfered with the feudists and was killed. The man and girl started across the mountains seeking a new and better life.

ASHES OF HOPE (Five Parts—Oct. 7).—The cast: Gonda (Belle Bennett); Jim Gordon (Jack Livingston); "Ace High" Lawton (Jack Richardson); "Flat Foot" (Percy Challenger); Belle (Josie Sedgwick). Directed by Walter Edwards.

The western mining camp numbers among its citizens one Gordon, a mysterious fugitive who proves callous to the wiles of Gonda, queen of the dance-hall. Resenting Gordon's scorn, she wagers with the gambler, Lawton, that she can conquer the stranger.

Gordon defends her one night when one of her dupes, a drunken miner, threatens her, but he resists her cunning efforts to make him drink, knocking the proffered glass from her hand. A fight follows the insult, in which Gordon knocks his man out but is himself struck down from behind with a bottle. Gonda saves his life, and they go to her cabin to live.

With the awakening in her of the motherhood instinct, Gordon receives a letter from his wife, enclosing a baby's shoe and telling him that he had been cleared of the murder charge back east. He leaves Gonda a farewell note and half his gold, is pursued and assaulted by Lawton, robbed while unconscious, and without money, returns to hold up the dance hall to which Gonda had returned. Finding the letter from his wife and the shoe, the fires of her revenge burn to ashes and she tricks his captors and trades herself to Lawton to save Gordon's life.

A PHANTOM HUSBAND (Five Parts—Oct. 7).—The cast: Jessie Wilcox (Ruth Stonehouse); Abel Wilcox (J. P. Wild); Allan Avery (Chas. Gunn); Mrs. Manners (Estelle Lasheur); Marie Manners (Evelyn Driskell); Jimmy (Don Likes); Filing Clerk (Mary McIvor). Scenario by Geo. D. Proctor. Directed by Ferris Hartman.

A timid little girl in a gossipy little Kentucky village reaches the climax of yearning when St. Valentine's Day brings her no tribute of affection. When the young people around the post-office make sarcastic comments, Jessie resolves to produce a beau, even if he must be a mythical one. The daily mail becomes the big thing in her life, and next day a letter from city relatives is held before the post-office group as a missive from her fiance.

She arranges with her cousin to mail letters from the city, and soon the daily "love" letters turn village scorn to envy. When questioned about her engagement ring, she buys herself one, and when the town girls get curious about her wedding day, she rashly names a date. Then she goes to visit her relatives and find a way out of all these complications.

While in the city, Jessie reads of an unclaimed body at the morgue which she claims as her husband, intending to take it home to substantiate her story. Wealthy young Avery identifies the man as his brother, hastens to the funeral, and meets Jessie, who has to confess her deception. They fall in love and marry, much to the chagrin of the mercenary city aunt who had picked Avery for her daughter.

Given a good scenario, a capable cast and a clear picture, the result is bound to be capacity houses.

Our part in your success is the manufacture of film that assures the clearest pictures.

The right film is easily identifiable by the stencil

"EASTMAN"

in the margin.

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Are You Going To Buy a New Projector?

Then to make certain of getting the most out of your investment see that the projector is equipped with a lens which combines the highest perfection of optical corrections with a mechanically perfect focusing construction.

With the Marlux your operator can do justice to the most expensive films, bringing out their full value to the delight of your patrons.

Simplex and other first-class projectors, which are only sold with the highest quality of equipment, are furnished with Marlux lenses when specified.

Ask your Dealer about Marlux merits, or write direct to

CROWN OPTICAL COMPANY
Rochester, N. Y.

No Matter What You Pay for a Film

it cannot be satisfactory to your patrons unless you put it on the screen right. That means the best projection.

Your operator may be an expert but he cannot give the best projection with alternating current or inferior direct current apparatus.

The Wagner WHITE LIGHT Converter

When you have installed a Wagner White Light Converter you have invested in a paying proposition. Projection with a White Light Converter means pleased patrons, building a better business every day.

Send for Bulletin 10923.

A SOLDIER BOY SINGS

"I want tobacco just as much as bandages and socks,
So drop your contribution in my old tobacco box!"

SEND 25 CENTS, and we will forward a "comfort package" of tobacco to some soldier or sailor at the front—enough to keep him in tobacco for a week. Or SEND $1—it keeps a fighting man happy for a month. Tobacco is the only thing that cheers the soldier boy through the dreary hours in the trenches. He'll probably send you a post card in acknowledgment—a war souvenir you will treasure. Send your "Smokes" at once—he needs them badly. Every cent contributed goes for tobacco for our soldiers and sailors abroad.

Semi-Annual Convention of the M.P.E. LEAGUE of KANSAS

MANHATTAN, KAN.

OCT. 15-16 MONDAY TUESDAY

At the business sessions matters of unusual importance to Exhibitors in the State of Kansas will be taken up. Of interest to Exhibitors, Supply Men, and all others connected with the moving picture industry in any part of the country will be addresses to be made by prominent men who have been invited.

The entertainment will include a big "Movie Ball," a trip to Fort Riley and Camp Huston nearby, and an auto trip over Manhattan and vicinity with the Manhattan Motor Club as hosts. Owing to the crowded condition of Manhattan because of the proximity of Camp Huston with its thousands of soldiers in training, it is imperative that hotel reservations be made as soon as possible.

Simplex

Last week we had it the other way, but now we say:

"When You Know the Tree, You Know the Fruit"

When you know a master mind, trained in every detail of a certain art or craft, you're willing to gamble on the product of his brain—

—you know that anything in his line into which he has put his very best, his utmost, is bound to be superlatively good.

Take, for instance, the men who designed and are building the Simplex. Some readers of the Moving Picture World have not (yet) become acquainted with the Machine; but it will help them decide to secure the Permanently Perfect Projection which only the Simplex can give, when they know more of the Experts whose masterpiece it is.

On the other hand, those to whom we spoke last week (who know the machine but not the men), will be glad to make the acquaintance of the men who gave the World of Projection the Machine that is serving them so excellently.

So next week we will begin to tell you something of these men.

However, if you have the slightest desire to learn more of the Simplex, don't wait for that advertisement, but "Obey that impulse," and ask for Catalog "A."

With the Simplex in the Booth, the Screen will take care of itself.

Goldwyn Pictures

We Admit That There Are Reasons—

WHY eighty odd first run exhibitors are playing Goldwyn Pictures from our first release and telegraphing or writing their increasing approval of each new Goldwyn release.

Why each Goldwyn Picture and each of the Goldwyn stars, in their order of public presentation, have registered remarkable successes and attracted capacity audiences in every section of North America.

Why hundreds of smaller exhibitors have followed the lead of the big and successful showmen of the country and booked Goldwyn Pictures for their theatres.

Of course there are reasons for these significant indorsements. First of all, Goldwyn Pictures make money for exhibitors.

And they play at a profit because they have extraordinary and unrivalled stars, with remarkable stories by the ablest brains of our nation, directed and presented by artistic and skilled men who have always made money in tremendous amusement enterprises in which their own fortunes were invested.

Goldwyn's Great National Advertising Campaign

NEXT WEDNESDAY—October 10—Goldwyn Pictures, the Goldwyn stars and the Goldwyn standards of production will be introduced to millions of friends of the screen in the first of a series of advertisements in The Saturday Evening Post.

Goldwyn has booked its pictures all over North America on their merits; on their drawing power; on their novelties and refinements.

In succession we have backed these productions up with a national billboard campaign and unparalleled publicity.

And now Goldwyn places behind its stars and its productions as its greatest step—and without advance promises—the tremendous force of the greatest advertising medium in the world.

Our one comment to exhibitors on this campaign is: Goldwyn considers it much better to give them this co-operation that was never promised than to promise more in advance and give them less afterward.

America's millions are eager to see Goldwyn Pictures. The progressive exhibitor will book them now.

Maxine Elliott's Appeal Is Greater Than Ever Before

IN presenting this star to their audiences exhibitors are offering a personality with an almost unparalleled record.

On the screen Maxine Elliott has the beauty of youth—the beauty that carried her fame around the world. She acts with vigor and distinction and undisputed power.

The fourteen daily newspapers of Greater New York, without a single exception, say of her at her screen debut for Goldwyn: "She is lovelier than ever before. She is still the glorious, popular and irresistible Maxine."

Goldwyn presents:

knowing that her reputation and popularity will bring audiences flocking in to see her, and that these audiences will be delighted over the return of this great favorite from theatrical retirement.

What Goldwyn Tells You About "The Spreading Dawn"

DISCARD all the boasts and the time-worn ways of announcing and exploiting pictures.

Does a picture hold and grip you tight? Will an audience be unable to tell what is going to happen until the very last minute? Is the star not only beautiful, but dramatically powerful?

Has the picture the elements in story value, star value, production value and audience value that will make it a drawing and profitable attraction for the exhibitor who pays the rental for it?

Goldwyn
presents:
JANE COWL
in
The Spreading Dawn
By Basil King

with the affirmative assurance that this unusual and wholly novel production contains all of the elements that audiences everywhere associate with the Goldwyn name and standard.

FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD

THE most brilliant, spine-thrilling patriotic drama ever made into a motion picture—a picture to challenge the pride and the conscience of all humanity.

Thousands of men organizing and drilling to fight the battle of civilization. Thousands of men marching away to the front and into the jaws of death.

Before your very eyes nations banding together in a blood brothership against a common enemy.

Heroes and cowards transformed into supermen of gigantic courage walking and scurrying into a living hell of shells and fumes to bring in the wounded from artillery-raked plains.

Women showing their bravery in the home and at the camps; women living through the Inferno of battle to nurse and stimulate their men to victory; women risking certain death to be near the men they love.

And the arrival of the Stars and Stripes on the battlefront in France in a climax that brings audiences up to their feet with cheers—

Those are the exciting things you see in Captain Edwin Bower Hesser's photo-panorama, "FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD," which will be distributed exclusively throughout all lands by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation under an arrangement made with Ira M. Lowry and his associates, the producers of this great picture.

This completed picture is being made ready for quick release and trade showings are now being arranged for all Goldwyn offices. Write or telegraph at once for bookings and information.

GOLDWYN DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION
16 East 42d Street New York City

HERE are the reasons why exhibitors throughout the world will instantly discover that "FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD" will pack their theatres to the holding capacity of their buildings:

"FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD" is the pictured story of a million American men going or about to go into battle—a story great in its appeal because it is a story of now, of the moment and the hour.

Because it pictures the actual soldiers of the Canadian Foreign Legion and the courageous Americans who rushed over the border with the smoke of battle in their nostrils.

Because throughout its eight remarkable reels you hear the tread of thundering feet marching along the Roads to Glory in defense of their blood brothers' honor and the rights of civilization.

This great screen production will stimulate recruiting and strike at the conscience of all nations as no motion picture has ever done before and the thrill and actuality of it is so great that audiences will feel like standing at attention as the pictured hosts swing by.

Magnificent lithographs, still pictures, photo-gelatin enlargements in colors and splendid publicity aids are fully prepared and ready to enable exhibitors to undertake tremendous exploitation of "FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD" in their cities and towns.

Trade prints available for screening for all interested exhibitors will at once reveal the great money-making possibilities of this production, ready for rental under the policy of wide-open bookings.

Hall Caine's Name Is Your Big Asset with the Public

THE great Manx author "pulls like a star" when his name goes up in your signs and your advertising.

Sixty millions of America's hundred million population know and love all of his works. They bought 2,000,000 copies of "The Bondman." And 1,000,000 copies of "The Deemster." And his "Woman Thou Gavest Me" was a sensation.

You never have to introduce or explain who Hall Caine is. He is popularity plus. His most powerful novel, now made into a screen production, is now ready for release.

AN ARTCRAFT PICTURE

"in BARBARY SHEEP"

Proves one of screens greatest Successes

The photograph above was taken during the week Elsie Ferguson in "Barbary Sheep" was shown at the Rialto, New York —Evening Journal (New York), Oct. 2.

"And then came the beautiful feature film, 'Barbary Sheep,' in which Miss Ferguson acted the leading role.

"As scene after scene of this remarkable photographic spectacle was unreeled murmurs of approbation and frequent bursts of spontaneous applause mingled with the strains of orchestral accompaniment arranged by the 'Aladdin of Vaudeville.'

"There was scarcely a move on the part of the audience until, just before midnight, the big show came to a glorious finale.

"Both sides of One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street were lined with automobiles. It was like a night at Grand Opera, with the great array of evening clothes through the audience."

No other film in the history of the motion picture has evoked such spontaneous, unbiased and glowing reviews as this masterpiece.

It is more than a picture; it is an opportunity, for YOU!

William S. Hart
in

"The Narrow Trail"

A virile drama of the West—stirring in action, new in theme. A "leap in the saddle and away" sort of story, that carries you swiftly from a stage hold-up to a terrific fight in a 'Frisco "honky-tonk"; from a spectacular cowboy race to romance in the wilds of the Nevada mountains. And, incidentally, you see Bill's famous Pinto pony, Fritz, who, cast for an important role in this production, moves faster than the wheels of justice to outwit "Judge Lynch" and help his master win a girl.

"THE SON OF HIS FATHER"

"Watch my smoke!" says the buoyant hero of this story, as he sets out to beat his millionaire dad in a game of bluff. How he swings a big railroad deal, making $100,000 for himself; how he kidnaps the villain and wins the love of the prettiest girl in all the West, proving in every way that he is "the son of his father," is told in thrilling and fascinating detail. A typical Ray picture, bubbling over with youth and high spirits.

IN "THE PRICE MARK"

There is the lazy lure of Egypt, romantic, mysterious, wherein is enacted a tragedy of love. Suddenly, the story shifts to the vivid atmosphere of a New York studio, revealing a young girl's fight for life and happiness. Radiantly beautiful, youthfully appealing, Miss Dalton gives to the role of Paula Lee the rich, rare talents of a gifted actress. A greater picture than "The Flame of the Yukon," in which Miss Dalton achieved such a remarkable triumph.

the most celebrated clown of the day, the man who convulsed the big audiences of New York's celebrated Hippodrome Theatre with his original and inimitable pranks, is announced in under the direction of Hal. E. Roach, president and director general of the Rolin Film Co. There is absolutely no question that Toto's screen triumphs will far exceed those which he gained as a clown. In the comedies already made he proves himself a motion picture comedian of the first rank. The Toto comedies will make a misanthrope laugh. They are a knock-out.

"The Highest Standard In Motion Pictures"

A Perfection Contract

Its Value to You!

EVERY EXHIBITOR holding a Perfection Contract has taken out box-office insurance. It is one kind of insurance that you don't have to die to win. The longer you live and retain your contract the more valuable it becomes.

¶ Perfection Pictures are being exploited by the most gigantic campaign of advertising and publicity ever launched on behalf of a motion picture enterprise. Perfection Pictures are being brought to the attention of every man, woman and child in the United States. All these people are interested in Perfection Pictures. They are looking for the theatres showing them. By securing a Perfection Contract for your territory you are bringing these people to your theatre.

¶ The fact that your theatre is exhibiting Perfection Pictures make the full page advertisements in the Saturday Evening Post and other periodicals of national circulation your advertisements. Without spending a cent of your own you are benefiting by the hundreds of thousands of dollars being invested by the makers of Perfection Pictures.

¶ More and more people every day are looking for the Perfection trade-mark before going into the theatre. If they see it in front of your theatre they will go in. Insure your box-office the biggest run of prosperity it ever enjoyed.

¶ There's a new Perfection Picture released each week. You can secure them all and be sure of big business for fifty-two solid weeks. Arrange to secure a Perfection Contract for your locality. For full details inquire at the nearest Exchange of the George Kleine System.

OTIS SKINNER

in

"KISMET"

by Edward Knoblock

In order that his most famous role of Hajj, the beggar of old Bagdad, may live after him, Otis Skinner has finally consented to make his screen debut. The advent of Mr. Skinner will unquestionably be the supreme motion picture event of the coming year. The opportunity to collaborate with Mr. Brenon caused the star to reconsider his determination never to enter the silent drama.

"THE WOMAN THOU GAVEST ME"

by Hall Caine

with a notable Brenon Cast

"The Woman Thou Gavest Me," which sold so far into the millions that it was termed the world's best seller and which was translated into fourteen languages, will make a tremendous "picture-novel" of today. The story of Mary O'Neill, married in innocence to a dissolute nobleman, is a theme of intense dramatic power. Critics pronounced it the most vital study of the feminine soul in literature. Moreover, Mr. Caine's discussion of religion and divorce caused "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" to attract international comment.

"EMPTY POCKETS"

by Rupert Hughes

In course of preparation

"Empty Pockets" will have all the attributes of Mr. Brenon's visualization of "The Lone Wolf," which was called the most adroit and swiftly moving mystery romance of the screen. "Empty Pockets" has another baffling problem, its action is keyed to top speed, and, moreover, it goes beneath the shell of mere melodrama in its humanness and closeness to life. "Empty Pockets" has a delightful love interest, aside from its thrills and well sustained interest. It is expected to surpass "The Lone Wolf" in swiftness and and power.

"The FALL of the ROMANOFFS" based upon absolute facts furnished the producer by ILIODOR (the Mad Monk) former confidant of Rasputin and confessor to the Czar.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs" is the screen's first big effort to film contemporary history. Mr. Brenon chose the most epoch-making event in the evolution of democracy---the hurling of the Romanoffs from their hereditary throne with the birth of Russian freedom---and told the story with compelling and absorbing force. "The Fall of the Romanoffs" is no mere sequence of historical events---it goes beneath the glamor and tinsil of the Russian court and unfolds the human side of royalty. No picture since the birth of the picture industry has had the publicity of this production.

Gentlemen:-

Permit us to inform you that the Hon. Charles M. Hough, U. S. Circuit Judge, today, granted your application to restrain, pendente lite, Ben.Blumenthal, Isaac E. Chadwick and the Export & Import Film Co., from using the title "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs with Iliodor" and from using, showing etc. any photograph of Iliodor in a costume shown on Iliodor in your copyrighted photo-play "The Fall of the Romanoffs with Iliodor".

Proof by affidavit was made to the Court that in July, 1917, the defendant Blumenthal copyrighted the photoplay now advertised as "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs with Iliodor", as "Ivan the Terrible". Advertisements describing the film as "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs with Iliodor" were printed in the trade journals in September.

Granting the injunction, the Court said, among other things:-

> "Ivan the Terrible was not a Romanoff, and the Sixteenth, was different from the Twentieth Century, even in Russia. This is common knowledge.
>
> "But when a copyrighted play is registered, as the Fall of the Romanoffs, and Iliodor is a prominent character therein, defendants' acts in advertising The Tyranny of the Romanoffs with Iliodor, are nonsense, unless intended to create the belief that the play so named, did or does deal with the same matters naturally suggested by The Fall of the Romanoffs with Iliodor as an actor.
> "I am satisfied that defendants have pirated one of plaintiff's copyrighted photographs of Iliodor."

Faithfully yours,

PHOTOGRAPH THEATRE

This super-production depicting the death of autocracy in Russia—with its vivid glimpse of the hearts that beat beneath the purple—was accorded the most enthusiastic press comments in the history of the silent drama. Critics are united in declaring it the most mighty theme ever successfully handled in motion pictures.

It is a living, throbbing cross-section of history—with its breath of freedom—sweeping from the Siberian marshes to the Petrograd court.

Quality and Price

As a pure business proposition, Mr. Exhibitor, you want good pictures and you want them at prices that will enable you to make money.

Recall any number of TRIANGLE releases — have not nearly all of these pictures been real box office productions? TRIANGLE has always stood for quality first and last — you hardly need be reminded of that fact. Future TRIANGLE productions will not only maintain their past high standard but will be improved.

TRIANGLE prices enable any exhibitor to make money. The production cost of TRIANGLE pictures has been reduced to a minimum. Prices to exhibitors represent the cost of production plus the cost of distribution with a reasonable margin of profit. We appreciate that our success depends on the success of TRIANGLE exhibitors and we are doing business on a basis that promises mutual protection and results.

We want the help and cooperation of every exhibitor who is trying to stabilize and insure the future of his business. We shall do business on a fair, square and equitable basis.

READ THE UNANIMOUS VERDICT

OF NEW YORK'S DRAMATIC AND TRADE REVIEWERS

Harriette Underhill in The Tribune: "It shall merely be stated that we enjoyed it more than anything we have seen this season, because it is filled with delicious, subtle humor, furnished by some totally unconscious, incredibly clever children."

The American: "It is spectacular. It is more exciting than the biggest screen 'thriller," and a thousand per cent. more wholesome. It has more humor to the fifty feet—this being the prescribed way to measure film excellence, according to the shop talk of the audience—than the funniest farce of the season."

The World: "Distinctly repeats the success of 'Jack and the Beanstalk.' The children display very remarkable precocity as film actors:"

The Herald: "The picture has many ingenious effects in the numerous indoor and outdoor scenes, and the sand storm shown in the second part was as stirring and realistic as could be expected of any film representation of the fury of the elements."

The Globe: "The audience smiled, sniggered and cooed its delight. And well they might."

The Evening World: "Was not only beautifully done, but interested the older folks as well as the children who packed the theatre."

The Evening Sun: "The adults will find entertainment in the film version of this popular childhood story, especially because of the beautiful scenes that are unfolded and because there is a certain novelty in the work of the youthful artists employed in the play."

The Evening Telegram: "This latest of feature photoplays has exceeded even the apparently limitless boundaries of the famous Arabian Nights' fable as it was written."

The Evening Post: "It bids fair to be as popular as its predecessor, 'Jack and the Beanstalk,' which was the first of the Fox Kiddie features, as it provides a delightful entertainment for both young and old."

Journal of Commerce "Here is another picture that not only will set children wild with delight, but will please fathers and mothers just as much."

Facts and Comments

IT is in my mind not only to bring the motion picture industry into fullest and most effective contact with the nation's needs, but to give some measure of official recognition to an increasingly important factor in the development of our national life. The film has come to rank as the very high medium for the dissemination of public intelligence, and since it speaks a universal language it lends itself importantly to the presentation of America's plans and purposes.

WOODROW WILSON.

ELSEWHERE in this issue exhibitors and readers will find particulars in regard to the five short picture subjects which will be shown all over this country for the next twenty days in aid of the Second Liberty Loan. Five hundred prints, one hundred prints of each of the five subjects, will be in circulation and shown on the screens everywhere throughout the country. We venture the assertion that for intensive and widespread publicity this campaign of the next few weeks will far surpass anything of the kind ever before attempted. We trust the final result will surpass the expectations of the most optimistic.

PATIENCE and perseverance are excellent watchwords for every loyal citizen of this country at this crisis in the world's history. There have been and there will be many demands on exhibitors for help and co-operation along so many different lines of war activities; for the use of their screens for Liberty Loan, Red Cross books, films, tobacco, comfort kits, Christmas boxes and a hundred other things for our soldier boys and our country. Some may feel that it is being overdone, that the patience of their audiences may become exhausted, etc., but we must remember that these are altogether exceptional times in which we live; times in which millions are giving up more than most of us will.

* * *

MORE power to the ever-increasing number of picture theater owners and managers who are really filling the demand for clean entertainment in their respective localities. Outside of our large cities, where counter-attractions multiply, in our thriving towns and country districts is the place to study the real value of a well conducted picture theater. The lines of automobiles and appearance of the audiences at the majority of these houses show most conclusively that the pictures are by no means only the entertainment of the poor or that they appeal mostly to children. We still have magazine writers posing as leaders in literary circles, who speak and write of the films in this patronizing and utterly false manner. Their knowledge and experience of the actual facts, however, seem to be gained from the studio chatter of their own narrow little coterie.

UNITED we stand, divided we fall, is a motto not applicable to this industry, according to the logic of some would-be leaders. Magnifying differences between retailer and manufacturer, splitting the industry into two irreconcilable camps even to the extent of considering an effort for legislative action regarding matters that concern the industry solely and should be adjusted inside the trade's own circles is surely an illuminating example of pinhead politics, hard to match. It is pernicious leadership of this sort that is doing more than anything else to prevent the industry as a whole from taking its rightful place in the minds of business and professional men everywhere. Simply because a plausible idea may be presented in smooth and ready terms does not necessarily mean that it is either wise or sound advice. Thoughtful consideration may show it is advice good to be avoided.

* * *

THE war tax, adopted at Washington last week, certainly seems to indicate a lack of adequate consideration o fmany of its provisions. We realize that no tax ever enacted will receive the approval of everyone and will likely be unfair to some. After so much consideration and the time given to the question, it surely was to be expected that the completed result would have met with more general approval. Many of the clauses give unmistakable evidence of haste and lack of mature consideration.

Constructive Competition

By Louis Reeves Harrison

BY way of dispelling some of our illusions, let us go back to the time when timid critics pointed out how seriously moving pictures would hurt vaudeville. Solemn steps were actually taken to boycott performers in one branch of entertainment who aided and abetted the other in any manner whatsoever, yet, after all this fuss, vaudeville theaters have multiplied, their form of entertainment has made greater strides than ever, and the standard of performance has been steadily raised to a quality not dreamed of in those days of nervous timidity and false prophecy.

The competition of moving pictures did no harm whatever to live theatrical men. To the contrary, it acted as a stimulus—it became the reverse of destructive. Variety managers of the progressive type simply saw that people were dissatisfied with the old order of things and realized that those same people had a right to demand what suited them in any form of amusement they patronized. An institution both logical and natural thus sprang into existence, the neighborhood theater, which cut down the expense of advertising and acted, in its turn, as constructive competition for exhibitors of moving pictures. Both improved their programs.

All this is not to say that false business methods no longer prevail, for they do. The over-commercialized legitimate stage drove many of the best actors into vaudeville, though there were discards in the overflow, just as when they swarmed to moving pictures, but greed in the legitimate sickened the public with stories which were obviously manufactured, stale stuff, adapted from foreign dramas and comedies, not vital enough at home to rouse live interest, or new material shaped to outworn tradition, in both cases lacking the essential element of popular success.

Vaudeville is bound to suffer a reversal of form—it is already doing so in many cases. Managers accumulate round waistcoats, judge by past performance and fill their programs with has-beens, fearful of anything new because it might involve the risk of experiment. Then, if attendance falls off, they conclude that people are tired of the variety entertainment, and moving pictures are again blamed. The whole truth of the matter is that both motion picture exhibitors and motion picture producers are better gamblers—they go outside of routine and take a chance.

The new art, in spite of all the ridicule heaped upon it, especially in its best examples, has exercised a sort of constructive stimulus to the older ones—it is like a creative critic—it often shows the right way, its judgments of society, its pictured strivings of the human soul, much nearer and dearer to the people than older mediums. It is far more inclined to discard old dictums, set formulae and those rigid rules which have long been deemed indispensable for the drama.

We shall do even better than we have done when we rise to a wide scope of vision as to our opportunities and the possibilities of pictured stories. Take for instance the limitation of our present view that the most intense scenes are those in which a tragedy of death is involved. This idea is as venerable as the oldest art of expression in the world, but it is false to the modern ideal. The greatest tragedies of today are those of living. The great issue of earthly existence as we now see it is not how we are to die, but how we are to live, in some cases how we can earn enough to live on.

In an effort to show what we are and how we live, the stage has had several spasms of "crook drama," amusingly stupid attempts to unfold the dual side of human nature. We may not sympathize with crookedness itself, but we are sick to death of the flawless hero and the colorless ingenue. We are all very good and correct on the surface, but—hush!—this is a dark secret—many of us would break the law if we could get away with it. From the "crook drama," most effective in comedy, the stage is emerging into a glimmering that people like to see both sides of themselves in the characterizations of stage and screen fiction.

We are really concerned about ourselves, conscious that we are faulty, willing to improve, and we like to see some of that same spirit shown by the gentlemen who deal out the drama. We become disgusted with the squabbles of syndicates, the depredations of one organization upon another, the outrageous bidding for flashy comets—they can hardly be called stars—all this is destructive competition. It leaves the field strewn with the wrecks of small fortunes; it bores the public; it forces upon exhibitors poor releases when they must have good ones in order to survive, and it shatters itself in the end.

Luckily for the theater, it has had men of penetration, who could see beneath our rapid growth of population, a growth of enlightenment, the real cause of our prosperity. We have shown widespread and common intelligence in our utilization of natural resources. Our national character has kept pace with our development as a people. Our mass level is higher than that of any European nation. Because men of vision have seen this, American drama is emerging from commercialism into true artistry. Why not apply the same common sense to screen products?

The stage has its advantages, but we have our own, and not the least of them, from a business point of view, is the fact that our distributive systems are administered in a series of local offices, each more or less independent in its own field. Each of these is near the heart of the trade it supplies, and it serves a purpose in determining demand. But we must look beyond the past and present demand into products beyond that test if we are out for better things. The place of what was is always bound to be taken by what is to be. A careful study of the drift of public opinion and taste now becomes necessary.

Instead of alienating and perverting good taste, we must respond to the best of it with telling force, fostering all that is fine in it, stimulating it, just as we have done by our best examples, and draw our inspiration from natural springs instead of dipping it up from stagnant pools. In this way, and in no other, we can compete honorably and successfully with each other, one concern can openly rival another in what is natural to the motion picture art, socially constructive and brilliantly entertaining, at the same time we can constructively compete with the stage.

Whatever is merely imitative, thus reversing our native success; whatever is slavishly servile to older arts and outworn tradition; whatever settles downward, carrying with it the bank balances of small producers; whatever is socially disintegrating and not of our way of thinking should not be visited upon the people, and it will be repudiated by them in the end. It is already a drain upon popular patience and upon exhibitor's profits. Our most urgent need is for men who know the audience and how it can be served to deserve the support of business.

On the War Tax

By Sam Spedon

FOUR or five months ago there was a wild dash made to Washington by exhibitors and producers to avert, if possible, the imposition of a tax on motion picture theaters and films. We say wild, because there was no co-operative or deliberate action on the part of those so vitally interested. Each and every one of the exhibitors who went to Washington at that time had a different idea. Two or three different briefs were presented to the Senate Committee, who intended a tax of ten per cent. on all theaters, excepting those charging five cents. One brief favored a tax on all theaters and eliminating the tax of one-half a cent a foot on raw film and one-half cent a foot on exposed film or positive prints. Another favored the elimination of all taxes on all theaters charging an admission of five and ten cents. The producers were in favor of the brief eliminating the tax on the films, knowing they would have to add the tax to the renting price to the exhibitor. In addition to the several briefs presented to the Senate Committee, each and every exhibitor appealed to his Senator and Congressman, while others were sending telegrams or writing letters, all of them different and some inadvisedly worded, giving an impression that there was no unity, head nor tail to the motion picture industry. It appeared everyone was anxious to secure the credit of accomplishing the defeat of the tax, save the industry from its burdens and pose as the benefactor of motion pictures. All this well intended but misdirected effort was expended for naught as far as the tax on admissions was concerned but resulted in getting a fifty per cent. reduction on the film tax.

Concentrated Effort.

When will those in the industry realize the need, the value of organization and concentration? One year ago the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was organized and it is rapidly being recognized as the representative body of the industry. Why detract from its importance by arrogating to ourselves a greater than thou policy and try to make ourselves greater than the whole organization? Why can't we work together with the National Association and concentrate our action from that center and get down to principles of business organization? When we get down to this basis we can do things that will count, work as a unit and bring a unitized power to bear on the things we wish to accomplish, or know the reason why.

Well Meant Effort.

We do not wish to discredit the efforts of those who tried to do something at Washington, but we do maintain that their efforts were disconcerted and scattered. They should have emanated from and been directed, after some deliberation, by the National Association and it should have been on the job long before it was.

Let us hope that in the future we will all recognize the importance of a national association. Let us hope that the officers of the N. A. M. P. I. will make the changes in its by-laws that will remove all possibility of a recurrence of its past mistakes and let us hope that every one will give it the support and attention it deserves, for the good of our industry.

Proper Representation.

We expressed our views before on the petty jealousies existing between exhibitors and producers. With the National Association as the channel through which differences should be adjusted there is no reason for their existence unless it be that the exhibitors are not represented by those who should make these differences known and bring them in the open for full consideration. The National Association has been organized for that purpose and made that point decidedly clear in its formation.

A Mistake.

We claim that the National Association has made a grave mistake in recognizing any body of men as the representatives of any branch of the industry. Every man engaged in any branch of the industry, if his record is good, should be admitted to the Association as a member and no branch of the industry should be given a greater number of votes in the board of directors than any other branch. If it relegates to any one branch the balance of power the association will always savor of politics and we must not discount the opinion of those who say they do not wish to be admitted as a body to membership in the National Association. The National Association must be representative of the whole industry and not favor any one branch of it.

Good May Come.

The war tax on theaters and films has been decided. Let us face the situation as best we can and may we find compensation in some material benefits resulting in the betterment of the industry, the establishment of more harmony and the working out of some safe and sane basis of business operation.

Ideas on Tax by Exhibitors.

After all that has been said and done, the war tax on films and all admissions to the theaters, excepting those charging five cents, is a fact. There is no use of crossing bridges before we come to them. True we have come to this tax bridge, but just how we will cross it has not been made clear by the government. The tax does not become effective until November 1, 1917. In the meantime we will learn just how the tax on admissions is to be put into effect by the exhibitor to enable him to collect it from the public. While we are waiting for this information and to arrive at some decision as to the best way to meet the tax, let us consider these opinions of different exhibitors.

Increase Admission Prices.

In a talk with an exhibitor of prominence on the war tax, he said: "I will increase my ten cent houses to fifteen cents, my fifteen cent admission to twenty and my twenty-five to thirty. In this way I can pay the tax."

It All Depends.

Another exhibitor said: "If the newspapers present the methods by which the public is to pay the tax and educates it to put down its one or two cents extra at the box office to cover the tax, I may not increase my prices."

Slight Difference to Producers.

We asked an exhibitor if he thought the tax of one-fourth of one cent a foot on raw film and one-half of a cent a foot on exposed film would make any great difference in the cost of pictures to the exhibitors. He replied: "I do not see how this tax would affect exhibitors much. The tax on a five-reel feature would amount to about fifty dollars more to the producer on each feature, To cover this additional cost the pro rata charge to each exhibitor would only amount to a few cents on each feature. I cannot see how the producer can make any increase on the price of his product to exhibitors on account of the war tax." He did not count on waste and discard.

Increase Prices and Avoid Bother.

This exhibitor has a calculative mind. He has figured his expenses of overhead and investment to a minimized basis. He said: "It costs me seven and a half cents a day for every one of the seats in my theater, therefore I know just what income it is possible for me to derive from the number of seats I sell each day. To meet the tax on my seat sales I will have to increase the price of admission or collect the tax from the purchasers of seats. I would rather advance my prices and I believe the public would rather have me do it than be bothered with making change."

Let Us Have Your Opinion.

We shall be glad to give space in our columns to those in the industry who wish to express their opinions on how best to meet the war tax.

All Settled Now

By Sam Spedon.

THE motion picture industry is expected to contribute by the tax on admissions and films $67,000,000 towards defraying the excess expenses of the war. The task has been placed before us and there is nothing to do but get down to brass tacks, buckle in and raise it. There is no use sulking and crying about it, the die has been cast and we can't avoid it. "Post mortems" will be a waste of time. The only way we can fight now is by doing our bit and help win the war as soon as possible. The more cheerfully we do it the sooner and better we can do it.

We will have to conserve our expectations, but this may lead to more efficient and broader business methods.

We must not slacken our previous efforts to co-operate with the government, keep up the good work, prove our patriotism and unselfishness by grinning under the burden placed upon us by the war and help lighten the burdens of others as best we can. Our visit to Canada last month revealed to us the same conditions as we are now facing ourselves and yet we never heard a complaint nor saw any display of sorrow caused by loss of friends and relatives, much less the loss and sacrifice of money. If our neighbors and allies can so heroically and patriotically do their bit, we must not be found wanting in doing ours. The Government needs the screen in this hour of need.

Good Will Follow.

While in Washington last week we were informed by one who knows that the United States Government will eventually introduce motion pictures in all its departments for the dissemination of Governmental affairs and the education of the people in things that concern their welfare. Within the next six months we will see a great advance in the uses of the screen and the advancement of the industry, that will surpass the expectations of the most sanguine. The benefit to the industry by the establishment of the motion picture propagandas, brought about by war conditions, will result in greater business possibilities after the war as well as during its progress.

What the Screen Owes to the Stage

By Edward Weitzel.

IF the moving picture had a voice it would undoubtedly cry aloud with great earnestness, "Will some one please save me from my friends?" With the best intentions in the world, every once in a while some supporter of the screen breaks into print and, after the fashion of a Tammany politician, "claims everything in sight" for the art. A favorite pastime of these zealous souls is to try to prove that the moving picture play never has and never will owe anything to the stage—that acting for the screen is a thing apart. Furthermore, when these persons refer to the stage they always exhibit it at its lowest estate, and invariably speak of the screen at its highest. They point to the bulk of the stage drama produced on Broadway as a criterion of the best achievement of the theater, and willfully, or ignorantly, ignore the influence of such writers as Dunsany and Synge. Anyone acquainted with "Riders to the Sea" is aware that during the fifteen years of the moving picture's existence it has never produced a play that excelled in depth of feeling this work of Synge's, or thrown on the screen an episode of more vital meaning than is contained in the scene where news is brought to a widowed mother that the last of her five sons has been drowned. The speech beginning "They're all gone now, and there isn't anything the sea can do to me," is masterly in its word painting and its expression of profound grief. Dunsany's plays, also, are full of wonderful and stirring passages.

Some time ago a writer of scenarios, elated at receiving a record price for a serial, alluded, in print, to "the defunct spoken drama." It is true that the Goddess of Aristophanes and Sophocles has had some harsh treatment since her birth. It is also admitted that she nearly expired from calling for help the week that a stage play by this same scenarioist was produced at a Broadway theater, but has since recovered from the shock. Another screen adherent is responsible for the statement that "The best acting today is being done on the screen." Entirely correct, if the words "some of" begin the sentence. All that the screen knows of acting has come from the traditions of the stage, and the well equipped actor adapts his art to the slight divergencies of the screen in a fraction of time. Tyrone Power is an example of this. His first picture showed him serenely and notably proficient in every demand of his new medium.

Briefly, there is not an excellence to be found in the moving picture that is not offset by an equal advantage in the drama of the stage, and the limitations of both differ in kind, not in number. Many of the screen's best actors and most skillful directors come from the stage, and the rapidity with which they acquired a command of screen technic shows how slight is the difference between the two. The attitude assumed by well-meaning but unwise partisans of the camera toward perfectly obvious facts has helped to strengthen the antagonism of those who profess to see but little good in the photoplay and is no more to be commended than are the published opinions of various high brow dramatic critics that confess to a dense state of mental blindness by trying to belittle screen drama on every possible or impossible occasion.

Nothing that the moving picture now offers, or ever will offer, in the way of acting or visualization will express humanity in its manifold phases more convincingly than has been done on the spoken stage. To accomplish a like result, with a universality hitherto unknown, is the province of the screen.

Manufacturers Dubious About Film Tax

Believe It Will Fall Upon Producers and Distributors—National Association Holds Important Meeting

THE situation in the film industry as a result of the signing by the President of the war tax bill, is one of uncertainty. There seems to be on the part of manufacturers a feeling that the impost of a quarter of a cent on negative and a half cent on positive will have to be shouldered by them, inasmuch as they can discover on a short examination no equitable way of passing it on to the consumer, in this case the exhibitor. One matter that gave much concern to manufacturers during the week was the day on which the bill became operative, but it did not take long to ascertain that it went into effect on October 4. The new regulation regarding a tax on admissions of 10 per cent., due to the fact that it was a part of another section of the bill, will not be effective until November 1.

There is no disguising the fact that there is deep resentment in the trade over the outcome of the large amount of work that has been done in Washington looking to fair treatment by Congress of the motion picture industry. There is a feeling that the motion picture men have been asked to contrbute to the national treasury a sum over and above that which has been levied upon commerce in general; that the tax upon film, for instance, is not offset by any diminution of the income and other taxes which fall upon business men.

One phase of the bill which is subject to criticism more than any other, is the half-cent levy on positive prints. As one large producer of commercial and industrial subjects pointed out, the impost on manufactured film is practically a 20 per cent tax on production cost. In his figuring he included, of course, the quarter-cent on negative. He said a fair price for printing would be 3.75 cents, and, of course, 0.75 cents would be one-fifth. This, he declared, was far in excess of the profits on a printing contract. With the close competition existing in the trade, manufacturers were playing close heed to tenths of a cent.

One of the departments of motion picture production to be hardest hit by the new law is that of the weekly. This, of course, is due to the fact that a large number of prints is necessary to cover the insistent demand of exhibitors for fresh pictures of current events. Singularly enough, the weekly, too, has been one of the most important agencies of war propaganda—it has been one of the greatest aids of the government in bringing the war home to the people.

While undoubtedly it is too early to estimate the effect of the tax on manufacturing in a larger way, one chief of a big producing and distributing concern took a decidedly pessimistic attitude. He said his concern had intended to enter immediately upon a marked expansion in its business, but that from all he could gather as to the situation following the signing of the bill, his firm stood to suffer a direct added cost of manufacture running into six figures. If this proved to be the fact, he declared, retrenchment would follow. It may be worthy of note none of his fellow producers took so black a view of the situation.

One official of a program company, a concern which supplies with film many of the smaller houses in the country, pointed out the inequity of the film tax. "The film that is exhibited in theaters charging 50 cents admission and the negative cost of which may have been $50,000, pays identically the same rate as does one that is exhibted in houses charging 5 cents admission and the negative cost of which may have been $7,500," he said. "In other words, the tax on a hundred feet of a weekly is exactly the same as the tax on a hundred feet of the most expensive feature that may be put out in a year."

It is too early yet to prophecy what will be done by the motion picture men looking to a readjustment of the tax. Already conferences are being held and under consideration is the advisability of preparing amendments to the present measure designed to put the motion picture upon the same basis as other industries, to ask that it be treated not as a trade apart from other lines of legitimate investment. There is no disposition to ask any favors because of work of large importance it has done for the government and in many instances without cost to any party but itself, but there is a feeling the industry has done nothing that should cause it to be singled out for discriminatory and injurious legislation.

During the week a committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry visited Washington to take up matters connected with the various auxiliary war committees. President Willam A. Brady of the association and P. A. Powers and Arthur Friend during the stay in the capital city had a conference with President Wilson regarding the work of the motion picture men in furthering the activites of the government. The talk lasted forty minutes.

National Association Holds Meeting.

On Saturday, October 6, a meeting of the National Association was held at its rooms in the Times Building. Presdent Brady briefly outlined the topics discussed at the conference with the President and said the recent offer of the association to furnish films to the soldiers abroad had been accepted by the administration and that the suggestion had been made that the idea be extended to include the people of Russia and Italy, with particular reference to the soldiers of those countries. Mr. Brady laid great stress upon the importance of the work in Russia, where it was proposed to have the officials of the American Cinema Commission act in co-operation with the Y. M. C. A., already established along the battle front.

He said one of the first things to be done was to agree upon representative men who would undertake to give their time and energy to the pushing of the great work and submit their names for appointment by the President. Mr. Brady pointed out these men would be officials of the United States, that they would be commissioned by the President, and urged that careful consideration be given the subject, so that the recommendations would be of men who could command the confidence and support of all.

It was decided first to agree upon the man upon whom would fall the burden of collecting the film in the United States and supervising its shipment. After much discussion the name of Jules E. Brulatour was suggested by Samuel Goldfish. It was declared Mr. Brulatour would agree to serve. He was unanimously selected as the choice of the meeting. Mr. Brulatour was not present when his name was mentioned. Previously he had informed the gathering that George Eastman had authorized him to offer to the association and the government the full use of all the Eastman properties in France for the work of the commission.

After much discussion, in which several men were mentioned, P. A. Powers was named for commissioner to France. Mr. Powers later arrived at the meeting and was applauded as he entered. For the mission to Russia Walter W. Irwin was tentatively agreed upon, subject to the ratification of the arrangement by Mr. Irwin's family and associates. For the Italian mission J. A. Berst was suggested.

The meeting adjourned to 3 o'clock on the following Monday, at which time there was received the acceptances of Messrs. Brulatour, Powers and Irwin. Mr. Berst was obliged through business reasons to decline the Italian mission. Frank J. Marion was chosen in his stead.

The members of the commission met on Tuesday morning at the offices of the association to meet John R. Mott, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. In the afternoon at 5 o'clock there was a general meeting of the association, which was addressed by George Creel, chairman of the committee on public information.

Zukor Sees Danger to Industry.

Adolph Zukor, President of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has followed every development of the war situation so far as it concerns the motion picture industry, in the following statement points out to Congress some of the results that are certain to follow the agreement of the Congressional Conference Committee on the war tax bill, which contemplates raising three instead of two billion dollars, and concerning which a decision was reached September 29.

"From the moment that the motion picture industry was recognized as a factor in the preparation for war, and its value in aiding the Government in the prosecution of its plans therefor fully appreciated, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has taken a leading part in the various activities in that direction and has demonstrated its patriotic prnciples and eagerness to assist in every way possible," said Mr. Zukor. "It has co-operated with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to the fullest possible extent in devising ways and means of bringing before the people the innumerable necessities of the stressful times. In this latest tax development, however, I see a grave danger to the film industry and cannot refrain from pointing it out so that those who are in a position to do so may use their utmost endeavors to prevent it now.

"As applied to the motion picture industry, the new bill alters the exemption clause for those theatres which charge 25 cents or less admission to 5 cents and imposes a tax on the gross receipts from all theatre admissions.

"Those in the industry recognize that there are thousands of small theatres throughout the country which do not make a profit on their entire investment commensurate with the tax on their intake which the conferees now propose. The result will certainly be that most of these small theatres will be forced to close their doors. They could not continue to exist and operate at a loss or with no profit. The result of this in turn will reflect directly upon the Government, because it will entail a loss of income and surplus profit tax from the theaters and from the great producing and distributing organizations whose profits will thus decline.

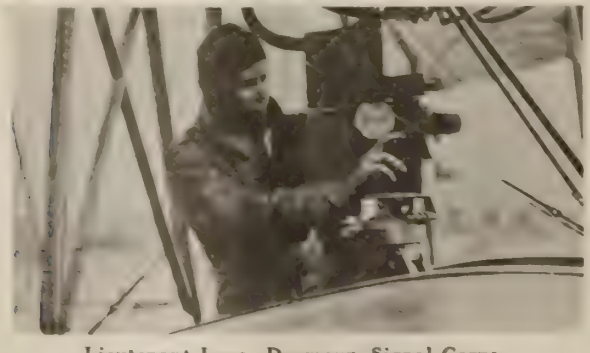
"It is true that the tax will not so materially affect the larger theaters because some may continue to operate at a sacrifice on their admission receipts. It is the small man who will suffer and unfortunately he has already been called upon to face local and other taxes in many instances which have rendered his position precarious. I do not make this statement from any lack of loyalty to the Government, because I believe it to be the absolute duty of every man in this country to assist to the last degree in the prosecution of the war. I am thinking solely of the fact that the Government, in the end, will lost more than it will gain from this tax levy.

"The tax on films means literally a 20 per cent. tax on completed positive, i. e., completed product, which is larger than that imposed upon any other industry engaged in production of any character of goods. The result of this will necessarily be reduced footage—less pictures—and again the net return to the Government from the taxation of corporations will be reduced, because of the lessening of returns as a result of decreased output and more expensive production."

The Roll of Honor

IT IS now First Lieutenant Lawrence J. Darmour of the signal section of the Officers' Reserve Corps. Larry has long been assistant editor of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly and has a multitude of friends in the motion picture industry who will be glad to learn of his commission. He accompanied the Ford Peace Expedition when it went to Europe, but admits his next trip abroad will be more to his fancy.

Larry has been assigned to duty on the staff of General



Lieutenant Larry Darmour, Signal Corps.

Pershing. Because of his experience with the motion picture camera it is expected a part of his duties will be the photographing of enemy positions from aeroplanes. To perfect himself in this work he has been practicing for some time with the aviators who are quietly pursuing their air studies on Long Island.

Charles Wallach, who has acted as assistant to Jack Cohn in the management of the Universal Animated Weekly since its inception, left for Washington last week to take up his studies in the signal corps. On the evening prior to his departure the staffs of the Animated Weekly, Current Events and Screen Magazine gave Wallach a farewell dinner, following a party at the Morosco Theater.

W. S. Clime, Washington representative of the Hearst-Pathe News, has been commissioned lieutenant in the signal corps. Mr. Clime was one of the best known motion picture men in Washington, and is on intimate terms with all the heads of the various departments. Whenever official news pictures were to be made Mr. Clime was always selected as the representative of the news weeklies.

Few film men there are who have been around town any number of years but know "Willie"—Willie Moore. He has been on the job in film offices ever since he was four feet high, or at least not much taller. But, disclaiming any intention of prepetrating a pun, he is not Willie any more. A World man this week collided in the Paramount office with a stalwart youngster garbed in infantry uniform, with a sergeant's chevrons on his arm. Sergeant William J. Moore, Company A, 165th Infantry, is his description now. He is hooked up with the Rainbow division, and if all that is printed is true will not be long in the United States. Sergeant Moore has been employed in the offices of the Atlas, the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company, Exclusive Supply Company, All Star, the Itala, the Raver and the Paramount. There's a reminiscent sound about some of these concerns, indicative of the time Sergeant Moore has been in the film business. He has been a member of the Sixty-ninth (now 165th) for two years. Here's good luck to the Sergeant!

Charles Barnard, recently manager of the Vancouver branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has enlisted in the Royal Flying Corps for active service. He is popular and is widely known as "Charlie."

Willard Van der Veer, expert cameraman, who has but recently returned from a trip through the West Indies for Gaumont Company's magazine, "Reel Life," is the latest to enlist. He is now sergeant in the cinematographic section of the signal corps. "Van" had reached Trinidad when war was declared. As soon as possible he returned to the United States, closed up his affairs, volunteered, and is now ready for the other side.

If his photographic work abroad is only a fraction as good as what he has done for the Gaumont Company it is safe to predict that he will not remain a sergeant very long. When he was in the West Indies he struck all kinds of light conditions, but his negatives came through as clear as though made in the studio. He will be remembered for the "scoop" which enabled the Gaumont Company to release the picture of our new islands in the West Indies on the day their purchase from Denmark was ratified.

PICTURE MEN CALLED IN DRAFT.

MARSHALL NEILAN, director for Mary Pickford and producer of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," has been drafted. He has received word to report for departure to the concentration camp. The new picture, "The Little Princess," is now being staged by Mr. Neilan, and a short extension of time has been granted him in order to finish his work. Mr. Neilan has had a remarkable career in the motion picture field, and although still under thirty, as the draft call indicates, he has achieved an enviable record for cinema successes. Several months ago he was selected by Miss Pickford to produce her photoplays, and his work in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" bears out the many laudatory mentions concerning his abilities given him during the past six months.

Victor Fleming, head of the photoplay department of the Douglas Fairbanks company, has been drafted and left Los Angeles for American Lake, in Washington. During Fleming's absence Sam Landers will be in charge of the camera work for Fairbanks' productions.

POPPE BACK ON JOB.

To the surprise of his many friends throughout the profession, Harry Poppe, dapper and untiringly ambitious for work as ever, returned to his desk in the Yorke-Metro offices Friday morning October 5. After Joe Lee, Reilly, Miss Priest and the rest of the associates who share the same office had recovered from their astonishment, Harry explained the fact that the medical authorities at Camp Upton, Yaphank, Long Island, where he had been ordered to report the Sunday previous, rejected him from service inasmuch as he was much under weight for army requirements. On Thursday he was presented his honorable exemption, and made a bee-line for his home in Brooklyn and the Metro sanctum.

Activities of War Committees

OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

How to Get Liberty Loan Picture

Ten Companies to Handle Distribution of Great All Star Production—Pictures Furnished Free.

COMPLETE plans for the distribution of the all-star feature production, which has been made for the purpose of boosting the second Liberty Loan, have been perfected by the committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, appointed to co-operate with the Secretary of the Treasury in this important work. The production consists of five distinct episodes, each five hundred feet in length and of each of which there will be one hundred prints. Many national celebrities, including the President of the United States, appear in the picture, together with more than forty of the greatest artists of stage and screen. Every one of the stars who appear in this picture donated his or her services free of charge as a patriotic undertaking, and the companies at whose studios the pictures were taken and in whose laboratories they were prepared for distribution have given their services without thought of compensation.

Distribution of the finished product is placed in the hands of a committee of which Adolph Zukor is chairman. The other members are Marcus Loew, J. E. Brulatour, W. W. Irwin and George K. Spoor. This committee has arranged for ten of the largest distributing companies, all of which are members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, to handle the actual distribution of the pictures through their various exchanges. In order to avoid any possibility of confusion each episode has been assigned exclusively to two of the ten companies, as follows: The first episode will be handled by Universal and Vitagraph, the second by Metro and Paramount, the third by Fox and Goldwyn, the fourth by Pathe and Triangle, and the fifth by World and Select. Each of these ten companies will have fifty prints of the particular episode which it has been designated to handle.

Under this arrangement it will be necesary for any exhibitor who desires to run all five episodes to get into immediate contact with either concern in the respective five groups which are handling the distribution. It is pointed out by the committee that there is no order or sequence in these five episodes and that they have been numbered consecutively only for a matter of record and in order to facilitate their distribution and identity. The fifth can be shown first just as well as that which has been designated No. 1, and any exhibitor who finds it impossible to show all five reels can show any one of the five.

Exhibitors are earnestly requested to facilitate the handling of these pictures to the greatest possible extent, and it is particularly called to their attention that the pictures are distributed to them absolutely without any cost to themselves, inasmuch as there is no rental charge and the express charges are borne by the respective exchanges.

In view of the fact that the campaign will close on October 28 it would be a very serious matter for any exhibitor unnecessarily to delay the forwarding of the print from his house to the next one in which it is to be shown, and the committee is very anxious to impress upon all exhibitors the great importance of handling the entire campaign with the greatest speed possible.

Inasmuch as there is absolutely no cost to the exhibitor, either for rentals or express charges, the committee takes upon itself the liberty of urging that every exhibitor advertise this production to the greatest possible extent, both for its patriotic value and because of the undoubted prestige which such an action will give his theatre.

It has been pointed out that the production itself is one of the greatest drawing cards that has ever been issued for the screen and that the artistic talent which it presents has no parallel in screen history. It is therefore in itself a tremendous attraction, and the patriotic impulse which prompted its advent upon the screen makes it unquestionably one of the most remarkable opportunities which has ever been afforded the exhibitor for increasing his local standing.

The picture itself was produced under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and the sanction of that department has been obtained in connection with every episode depicted in the production with every detail of the handling of its distribution. Herbert C. Rawll directed the actual staging of the production.

The campaign will open immediately and exhibitors are urged to get into touch with the exchanges of any one of the ten companies listed above which are handling the production. For any information which cannot be obtained from these exchanges apply to Al Lichtman, sales manager of Paramount Pictures Corporation, who is in direct charge of the distribution of the Second Liberty Loan picture, on behalf of the Liberty Loan Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

KALEM USES ANIMATED LIBERTY TRAILER.

WHEN the Kalem Company saw the leading artists of the country were providing striking posters, urging subscriptions to the Government's second issue of Liberty Bonds, it determined to make an appeal through its films which would impress particularly the mass of humanity daily attending the picture theatres. Kalem had been early in the field with a trailer on its films, bidding the public "stand by the flag" and subscribe to the first Liberty Loan. This time it planned to outdo its former effort and the new film, shown simultaneously with the opening of the subscription campaign on October 1, will be run until the new Liberty Bonds are fully subscribed.

Kalem's new trailer is a beautifully lighted and tinted scene of a gray-haired mother, bidding good-bye to her sons, a marine and a color sergeant. Imposed on the film is the text: "She Lends Her Sons. Lend Your Dollars for a Liberty Bond—and Victory!"

In view of the care and energy expended on this short strip of film, which was designed by Phil Lang and produced by Storm V. Boyd, it undoubtedly sets a new record in an industry which is replete with unique records. The mother is enacted by Helen Lindroth, noted in many Kalem and Famous Players productions; the marine by Otto Kruger, the popular leading man in "Here Comes the Bride," now running on Broadway and the color sergeant by George Clarke, an actor now in the Plattsburg training camp.

Kalem has turned over to the Government an enlargement from the film to be used in general publicity.

Friend Explains Food Control

Chairman of Motion Picture Auxiliary Committee Makes Clear the Situation As It Affects This and Other Countries.

HERBERT HOOVER, Food Administrator of the Government, has been highly elated over the manner in which the thousands of exhibitors have come forth and offered their co-operation in spreading the propaganda of the food administration in the campaign to have people waste less and to have one meatless and wheatless day each week.

One question that has come from many exhibitors in answer to the request to co-operate is "What does food control really mean?" Arthur S. Friend, who is chairman of the Motion Picture Division of the Food Administration, is answering this question by telling exhibitors what Mr. Hoover hmself had to say on the subject recently at a meeting of the State Food Administrators and his personal staff, when he gave a striking explanation of the part that food control plays in war.

He said European nations went into the war giving little thought to the subject of food. Even Germany, with its preparations, had not foreseen the significance of this factor. With millions of men taken from production, and thousands of square miles of fertile fields laid waste by armies, the world's cupboard quickly began developing a bareness like that of Mother Hubbard. Country after country went to the cupboard to get a bone, and found a diminished supply.

This made it necessary to organize food supply and distribution, and the various countries tried various methods. They fixed maximum prices and minimum prices, regulated the production and distributing trades, and put their people on rations. Those countries which established the earliest and best methods of food control secured the greatest efficiency in war. The best system, on the whole, is still that of Germany, and she has been able to maintain efficiency with a food supply which in some of her enemy countries might be most embarrassing. Russia, with perhaps the greatest possibilities of food production in Europe, did nothing at all, and out of Russia's food situation grew her revolution.

Mr. Hoover said that whether we like it or not we must deal with the food problem of war in one of two ways. There is not enough food to go around if we stick to the lavish methods of peace times. Rising prices, coupled with depreciation of money, due to issues of war bonds in every country, which make the purchasing power of money shrink, compel us to adjust the food supply to the world's appetite, either by controlling that supply in ways that lead to economy and make it suffice, or by letting wages rise as prices rise, to keep pace roughly with fluctuations.

Even an amateur economist can see at a glance that food control is better than wage increase, because wage increase is a crude force operating slowly, unevenly and with great injustice and suffering to millions of workers. The wages of many workers do not rise—the professional men, clerical workers, public employees, and so forth. Russia tried the experiment of letting wages adjust themselves to the diminishing food supply, and it did not work. Russia was brought to a state bordering on anarchy by the intolerable pressure of the food situation on the ordinary peaceful citizen.

Therefore, whether we like it or not—this is a favorite phrase of the Food Administrator, and typifies the impersonal attitude he takes toward these great economic problems—whether we like it or not, we must meet the food situation in one way or the other, and food control seems to be the lesser of two evils.

This viewpoint explains most of the work thus far done by the United States Food Administration. From August 10, when President Wilson signed the food law, until today, much of the work of the Food Administraton has centered upon the organization of food control machinery. The farmer, the grain man, the miller, the baker, the packer, the grocer, the wholesaler and retailer, the traveling salesman and the canned goods broker, have gone to Washington in bodies, representing the best men and the best minds in their respective trades, and have conferred there, not only with the Food Administrator himself, but with leading men in their own lines who are acting as volunteers on the Food Administration. Sometimes they have gone with fear in their hearts or resentment at the prospect of government interference in their business affairs. But there is something in Washington which quickly dissipates fear and resentment, and leads these men to offer their unanimous support to food control measures.

"Whether we like it or not," they are told, "this is the situation. Business cannot go on as usual in war times, because the law of supply and demand is thrown out of operation. These are the conditions and here is the only remedy that has been found in countries with greater experience in war than we have yet had. What do you think about it, gentlemen?"

What the business men think is shown in every case by their action in recognizing the necessity for food control. They have promised their patriotic co-operation and are readjusting their trade organization and methods for loyal support of food administration policies.

With sensible food control it is possible to handle the other two outstanding problems of food supply in war. One is increased production and the other is economical use of food. With stable prices, absence of speculation, and the temporary surrender of individual trade advantages, the farmer can have no assurance of prices ample enough to encourage larger planting and live stock raising. And by these same safeguards thrown round the food supply the consumer is made willing to economize in food, and is also able to purchase the necessities of life at prices which are at least reasonable, and what is more important, do not suffer wild fluctuations.

This is food control in a nutshell. Whatever fear or hostility there may be in the country over food control arises entirely from misunderstanding of what food control really means, why it is necessary and how it is being carried out. In no case does this feeling persist after real food control has been explained.

TO RAISE SOLDIERS' TOBACCO FUND.

At a meeting of the War Council of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held on Friday (September 28), comprising the chairman of the various sub-committees which are acting in conjunction with the Federal Departments, Captain Edward C. Kavanauh, U. S. A., addressed the committee, soliciting the support of the industry, as represented by the National Association, in raising a fund to supply tobacco to the soldiers as they embark on the transports. The request was granted immediately, and a committee was appointed consisting of S. L. Rothapfel, J. A. Berst and Lee A. Ochs, to co-operate with the Quartermaster's Department of the army.

THREE AUTHORS ADDED TO UNIVERSAL FORCES.

During the past fortnight, Universal has added three authors of considerable note to the scenario department on the coast. They are Charles Kenyon, J. Edward Hungerford, and Captain Leslie T. Peacocke.

Charles Kenyon, who has recently completed several photoplays of note for Paramount, is the author of "Kindling," the play in which Margaret Illington created a furore on Broadway some seasons ago. He is a native of San Francisco, and worked on newspapers in that city before winning success in the dramatic field. Mr. Kenyon is now engaged upon a story which will run to five or more reels.

For the past ten years J. Edward Hungerford has been one of the best known magazine writers in the country, and has also had books published and feature photoplays produced during that time. He has been assigned to the creative branch of the scenario department, under Col. Jasper Ewing Brady, and it is safe to predict that he will furnish many striking new ideas during the months to come.

Captain Leslie T. Peacocke is already well known to Universal patrons, having been connected with the organization twice in the past. He is probably best known as the author of "Neptune's Daughter," the first great Annette Kellermann spectacle. Captain Peacocke is said to have completed the outline of another big marine story which has been O. K.'d. for early production.

ROBERT WALKER PLAYS ROLE IN "BLUE JEANS."

Robert Walker, nephew of Robert Hilliard, plays the part of Perry Bascom in "Blue Jeans," a forthcoming Metro wonderplay, starring Viola Dana, under the direction of John Collins, a role which his uncle originated in the stage production. The play was produced at the old Fourteenth Street Theater more than twenty-five years ago, with Robert Hilliard and Jennie Yeamans in the leading roles of Perry Bascom and June. When Walker was cast for his role in the screen production he telegraphed to his uncle for data concerning the costumes and settings. Many valuable suggestions were received from Mr. Hilliard, and his nephew's costume was copied from that used in the original stage production.

Associating Directors at Indianapolis

Directors of the Indiana District Confer on Matters of Importance.

THE directors of the American Exhibitors' Association, district of Indiana, held a meeting Friday afternoon, September 28, at the Hotel Severin in Indianapolis and discussed various questions of interest to the association and its members. All the directors were present at the meeting.

Although the meeting was private—no one being admitted except the directors—Frank J. Rembusch, head of the Indiana branch of the association, made public some of the details of the proceedings to the effect that the directors discussed the numerous complaints that have been received from exhibitors over the state in reference to the unfair methods of some of the film manufacturers, and talked over proposed plans with which to protect the exhibitors in these matters. These plans will be announced at a later date, he said.

Mr. Rembusch said the State Council of Defense had asked the Association to assist it in furthering the food conservation and other patriotic movements, and added that he was pleased to report that the Indiana exhibitors are co-operating with the state council in every way possible. The numerous slides that have been sent out by the Association, Mr. Rembusch said, have been run by all the exhibitors and great good has resulted.

Mr. Rembusch says Indiana has the strongest organization and has the best organized branch of the association in the United States. All the Indiana exhibitors, he said, are unanimously and wholeheartedly in favor of the national organization of the American Exhibitors' Association and have withdrawn all affiliations with the old league. There have been no quarrels or dissension in the ranks of the Hoosier organization.

Mr. Rembusch and Charles C. Pettijohn, the general manager of the national organization, were chosen to represent the Indiana district at the Chicago meeting of the American Exhibitors' Association, held in Fraternity hall, Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 2 and 3.

Although no definite announcement was made by them, Mr. Pettiiohn and Mr. Rembusch intimated that the American Exhibitors' Association, district of Indianapolis, is preparing to spring something big in the next few weeks.

Call for New England Convention

Under Auspices of League Exhibitors Will Meet at Boston on October 23—Dinner in Evening.

A JOINT meeting of and convention of the motion picture exhibitors of New England, under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will be held at the Copley Plaza Hotel, Boston, on Tuesday afternoon and evening, October 23, 1917.

The object of the convention is to formulate a get-together spirit and to discuss the different propositions and problems which are daily confronting our industry. Individual meetings of the six states will be held in the State Suite during the afternoon to which every exhibitor in New England is cordially invited to attend. A joint open meeting and informal dinner will be held in the grill room of the Hotel in the evening, to which any one connected with the industry will be welcome.

At the dinner addresses will be made by James M. Curley, mayor of Boston; William A. Brady, president N. A. M. P. I.; Lee A. Ochs, president M. P. E. L. of A.; Ex-Governor David I. Walsh, Granville S. MacFarland, W. Stephen Bush, Louis Blumenthal, A. S. Black, C. H. Bean, E. H. Horstmann and others.

The New England convention committee is E. R. Gregory, chairman, Dorchester Theatre, Boston; E. H. Horstmann, national treasurer and president Massachusetts M. P. E. L., Boston; A. S. Black, president Maine M. P. E. L., Rockland, Me.; C. H. Bean, president New Hampshire M. P E L, Franklin, N H.; E. R. Hutchinson, president Vermont M. P. E. L., Burlington, Vt.; S. Spragg, Gordon's Olympia Theatre, New Haven, Conn.

The tickets for the dinner, which will be held at 7:30, will be $3. Please notify E. H. Horstmann, 174 Pleasant street, Boston, at once if you desire to attend the dinner.

Manhattan Exhibitors Meet

Operators' Strike Discussed—Sydney Asher Appointed Secretary Pro Tem—Arrangements for Ball December 7.

MANHATTAN LOCAL NO. 1, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, held its monthly meeting at its rooms, 218 E. 42nd street, New York City, on Wednesday, Oct. 4. The main topic of discussion was the operators' union, which declared a strike on Monday, Oct I, on those theatres employing non-union operators. Representatives of the union tried to persuade the managers of fifteen theatres to sign a contract agreeing to employ none but union operators, which they refused to do.

In every case where union operators quit work in the booths, the exhibitors were prepared to fill their places, and had no trouble in doing it. The league, as such, had resolved in favor of an open shop policy, and the members maintained its position.

M. J. Gerdson handed in his resignation as Secretary of Manhattan Local and No. 1. It was accepted with regret, Mr. Gerdson said he had organized a local in the Borough of Queens of seventeen exhibitors and he was obliged to

A committee was appointed from different districts to make a canvass for new members and look after present delinquent members. D. Weinstein of the City Hall Theatre on Park Row, was made chairman of the committee.

Arrangements were made to hold the League's annual ball on Dec. 7 at Terrace Garden. Chas. F. Haring is chairman of the committee of arrangements.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION TO FIGHT THIEVES.

At a meeting of the committee appointed to investigate film thefts, held at the office of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry on Friday, Sept. 29, definite plans were agreed upon with a view to putting a stop to the thieving and selling of films which has been constantly increasing during the past year through an elaborate system which is international in its scope and has cost the industry upward of a million dollars.

A sub-committee, consisting of P. A. Powers, treasurer of Universal, and W. W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V.L.S.E., was appointed to complete the necessary arrangements and with full power to act on behalf of the producer and distributor branch as of the National Association.

It is confidently expected the activities of the alleged gang of film thieves will be seriously interrupted just as soon as the National Association committee's plan is put into effect. It is also proposed to secure the co-operation of the Federal authorities in checking up all film export shipments for the purpose of investigating the shipments and to put a stop to any stolen prints being sent out of this country.

PLANNING ASSOCIATION MEETING IN MICHIGAN.

Another monster meeting is planned for the near future by the newly organized Michigan branch of the American Exhibitors' Association. S. A. Moran of Ann Arbor, president, and Claud Cady of Lansing, secretary, have been in communication with each other endeavoring to set a date for the proposed meeting to be held in Detroit—either in October or early in November. In view of the fact that every exhibitor in the state has received a copy of the address of Frank Rembusch delivered at the last state meeting, Messrs. Cady and Moran feel that "while the iron is hot" is a good time to hold a get-together meeting and work out a permanent association as well as a definite policy. First of all what is needed is action to make it generally known that Michigan has a state organization affiliated with the American Exhibitors' Association, and then a drive for members should be started. There isn't any reason why 100 per cent. of the Michigan exhibitors should not belong to such an organization—and no doubt they will be if the proposition is properly presented to them.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION DIRECTORS MEET.

A business meeting of the directors of the American Exhibitors' Association was held at their offices in the Times Building, New York City, Thursday, October 4. Many matters of importance of "doing something" for the exhibitor prevailed at the session. Among those who attended were I. M. Mosher, Buffalo, N. Y.; William Fait, Jr., Utica, N. Y.; W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis, Minn.; Guy Wonders, Baltimore, Md; Peter Jeup, Detroit; M Levy, Norfolk, Va., and Charles C. Pettijohn, who held proxies for the other directors, who were prevented from attending because of previous business engagements.

President Jake Wells, of Richmond, Va., who is opening a new theater at Atlanta, Ga., and was unable to be present, kept in touch with the matter by long distance telephone. The meeting was adjourned until Thursday, October 11, to conclude business.

Leo Dennison, branch manager in Cleveland for the Hoffman-Foursquare exchange, has been drafted.

We are not the official organ of any single organization or branch of the industry. BUT we are read by more members of the league than are any two other moving picture trade publications combined and by ten times more exhibitors than belong to the league.

BLACKWELL CELEBRATES RECORD OF 400 PLAYS

Carlye Blackwell, popular star of World-Pictures, Brady-Made, is at work upon his 400th screen play, in each of which he has acted the principal male personage. To commemorate the occasion, which is entirely unique in cinema history, th World Film Corporation has adopted measures to provide a souvenir for every feminine member of each assemblage that witnesses this particular picture in all theaters where it is shown.

The publicity department of World-Pictures rises to remark that theatrical managers consider a 400th performance of a play a milestone worthy of very special mark, so why should not the coming of a 400th screen play, with the same star at its head, be of even greater interest to the public? It is a sure thing, adds the publicity man, that no other actor of the stage or screen has been the star of anything like this number of plays.

Mr. Blackwell has been a screen player for seven years, and is entering his eighth. The first film drama in which he appeared was the Vitagraph version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," a feature production considered altogether immense at that early period. He remained with Vitagraph for nine months, appearing in pictures of one and two reels apiece.

The actor then joined Kalem for a term, and afterward had a long engagement with Paramount-Lasky-Famous Players, spending a part of his time in New York and the rest in California. In December he will have been for two years with World-Pictures, Brady-Made, which confines itself to the production of features, each of five reels or more.

DIRECTOR NEED NOT GUARANTEE.

There came before Judge Murray and a jury in the Third Municipal Court on Monday last a question of importance to motion picture directors and to film companies. It was brought up in the suit of Will E. Davis, a director, against the Van Dyke Film Production Company. It appeared that the company engaged Mr. Davis to produce a picture for them and when the National Board of Censors ordered some cuts made in it, refused him any payment for his services, alleging that he had guaranteed that the picture would pass the censors. Robert Spear, of the Chandler Building, was counsel for the plaintiff. He argued that no director nor any other human being could predict what a Board of Censors would do in regard to any picture. Judge Murray in charging the jury sustained Mr. Spear's contention. He also said that the mere fact that a picture dealt with the subject of vice does not of itself mean that the picture itself is vicious, as it may point to a moral lesson. In any case, he said, the director could not be held responsible if the censors disapproved of a picture the company had engaged him to produce.

The jury awarded a verdict to the plaintiff for $500.

BRENON OFFICES ON HUDSON HEIGHTS, N. J.

Herbert Brenon has transferred his business offices to his studio on Hudson Heights, where he has had a special building erected for the purpose on the studio grounds. Since breaking off his relations with Lewis J. Selznick Mr. Brenon has given up his office in the Godfrey Building, and with the entire staff of the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation he has transferred his offices to these new headquarters. At the present time they include the private offices for Mr. Brenon, for his general manager, secretary, publicity department, and for the auditor's and account departments.

Mr. Brenon's idea in transferring his offices across the river is to have his business end of the corporation run in absolute connection with his workshop, and to provide light and airy accommodations for his staff.

A stucco garage to match the office and studio building has also been built for the studio's cars.

CLARINE SEYMOUR IN TOTO COMEDIES.

Rolin has signed for Pathe's "Toto" comedies Clarine Seymour. She has already started work in these comedies as Toto's leading woman and Director General Hal E. Roach is confident that in her he has found a girl who will make her mark. The "Toto" comedies will be so important on the Pathe program of the near future that much attention was paid to the question as to who should be the leading woman. That Mr. Roach, who is admittedly one of the very greatest comedy directors in the country, should have selected little Miss Seymour for such an important role speaks volumes for her beauty and talent.

Brenon Secures Injunction

Judge Hough Says Unfairness Has Been Practiced by the Export and Import Film Company.

JUDGE HOUGH, in the United States District Court, on October 2, issued an injunction, pendente lite, enjoining The Export and Import Film Company, Inc., Ben Blumenthal and Chadwick from using the title, "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs, with Iliodor," in connection with the release of the photoplay depicting Ivan, the Terrible, and life in Russia in the sixteenth century.

"I assume that the defendant, Export and Import Film Company, Inc.'s, photoplay deals with entirely different scenes, times and surroundings from those employed by plaintiff," said Judge Hough. "Ivan, the Terrible was not a Romanoff, and the sixteenth century was different from the twentieth century, even in Russia. This is common knowledge.

"But when a copyrighted play is registered, as 'The Fall of the Romanoffs,' and Iliodor is a prominent character therein, defendant's acts in advertising 'The Tyranny of the Romanoffs, with Iliodor,' are nonsense unless intended to create the belief that the play so named did or does deal with the matters naturally suggested by 'The Fall of the Romanoffs,' with Iliodor as an actor."

Judge Hough pointed out that it is frequently extremely difficult to draw the dividing line between copyright or trade-mark infringement and unfair competition, and that when the title of a play is descriptive it may be protected by copyright.

"Here there is plainly such unfairness, but there is a threat of infringement also by the appropriation of name; and actual infringement in the simultation of Iliodor's costume in advertising matter.

"Injunction, pendente lite, will continue against Blumenthal, Export and Import Film Company, Inc., and Chadwick, preventing their use of the title, 'The Tyranny of the Romaoffs, with Iliodor,' and from using, showing, etc., any photograph of Iliodor in a costume shown on that person in plaintiff's copyrighted photoplay. I am satisfied that defendants have pirated one of the plaintiff's copyrighted photographs of Iliodor, hence this last direction," decreed Judge Hough.

"To avoid further motions it may be said that I should not consider 'The Tyranny of the Romanoffs' a copying or infringement of 'The Fall of the Romanoffs,'" continued Judge Hough. "It is the phrase, 'with Iliodor,' which under the circumstances substitutes the actionable threat of infringement; a threat not the less actionable because a story concerning Ivan, the Terrible would not and could not make the threat good."

Judge Hough directed the Iliodor Pictures Corporation, which instituted the suit against the various defendants to protect the rights to the current production, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," to file a bond of $5,000 to secure the defendants against loss in the event the suit is eventually decided in their favor. BRING SUIT TO ENJOIN INFRINGEMENT OF "THE ITALIAN BATTLEFRONT."

The Italian Government, represented by the Italio-North American Commercial Union, in conjunction with the Fort Pitt Theater Company of Pittsburgh, on Saturday began action in the Southern New York District of the United States District Court to restrain Jack Goldberg and Alexander Stathopoulo from exhibiting or causing to be exhibited a motion picture production entitled, "On the Italian Battlefront."

The plaintiffs, in asking for $50,000 damages, declare that the use of the latter title is an infringement on their copyrighted title, and that the release of a production purporting to be the official pictures of the Italian army is a violation of their property rights and unfair competition.

METRO PICTURES OPEN HARLEM'S STRAND.

Metro pictures "turned them away" at the opening of the new Harlem Strand theater, 115-125 East 125th street, New York, and for the first three days of the theater's existence. The Harlem Strand is a beautiful new picture house with a seating capacity of 1,500. It opened Friday, September 28, with "Their Compact," a seven-act Metro, with Bushman and Bayne as co-stars. The picture was continued Saturday, with packed houses at each performance, and for Sunday another Metro attraction, Harold Lockwood in the seven-act Metro-Yorke screen version of Jackson Gregory's popular novel, was used.

Music Publishers Sue Exhibitors

Several Actions Brought Against New York Picture Men for Playing Copyright Music.

A NUMBER of motion picture exhibitors are named as defendants in actions on file in the United States District Court, in which publishers of music allege the proprietors of moving picture theaters are permitting musical compositions to be played without the consent of the publishers.

The plaintiffs demand injunctive relief, and ask that the motion picture exhibitors be compelled to pay them $10 for each time the musical compositions were rendered in their theaters without the consent of the publishers of the copyrighted works. The following suits were filed by Nathan Burkan on October 4:

Watson, Berlin & Snyder & Company against Thomas Cassese, proprietor of the Roma Theater at 178 First avenue, for alleged infringement of the song, "From Here to Shanghai."

Watson, Berlin & Snyder Company against the Schuyler Amusement Company, operators of the Schuyler Theater at Broadway and 82d street, for alleged infringement of "Let's All Be Americans Now."

Watson, Berlin & Snyder Company against the Varieties Photoplay Company, Inc., operators of the Varieties Theater at 112 Second avenue, for alleged infringement of "Let's All Be Americans Now."

M. Witmark & Sons against the Second Avenue Amusement Company, operators of the Majestic Theater at 15 Second avenue, for alleged infringement of "Suki San" (Where the Cherry Blossoms Fall).

Watson, Berlin & Snyder Company against Frank Ascoli, proprietor of the Novelty Theater at 214 Bowery, for alleged infringement of "For Me and My Gal."

G. Ricordi & Company, Inc., against the National City Amusement Enterprises, operators of the Palace Theater at 1326 St. Nicholas avenue, for alleged infringement of "Navanola" (Have Another).

M. Witmark & Sons against Max Grund, proprietor of the Model Theater at 940 Freeman street, for alleged infringement of "Turn Back the Universe and Give Me Yesterday."

T. B. Harms & Francis, Day & Hunter, against Israel Suckman, proprietor of the Golden Rule Theater at 125 Rivington street, for alleged infringement of "Hello, I've Been Looking for You."

BENJAMIN CHAPIN SEES PICTURES AS A REGULAR JOB.

Before coming to the films, Benjamin Chapin was an attraction on the dramatic stage, a lyceum star and a vaudeville headliner. When he commenced the first picture of the Lincoln Cycle, he expected to be free for his old lines of effort in a year, and so notified the various managers. The result was that they checked him in their books as "available" for that time the following year.

"But I had miscalculated time as applied to picture producing," said Mr. Chapin. "I soon saw that to do a good job, a year is nothing. I altered my plans, of course, and decided to give one, two, three or five years to this work—or as many as might be necessary.

"The managers didn't alter their plans, however. A year passed and I was reminded of my announcement in no uncertain way. First the vaudeville agent, then the lyceum bureau, and eventually my theatrical managers. And, of course, I wasn't ready. I had a year, the year was up and they couldn't understand.

"My explanation didn't explain. A year on a picture and not finished with it—how could that be?

"Their knowledge of film producing was amazingly like my own before I had gotten into it. Good films could be turned out in a short space, we had all thought. Not until I got right into my subject did I find that if anything took time it was the making of a good motion picture, especially the sort I wanted the Cycle to be.

"So the studio still has me. But in the interval lots of people have become better acquainted with the motion picture on the production side. They understand my stand better now, and even congratulate me upon it."

OLGA GREY RETURNS TO TRIANGLE.

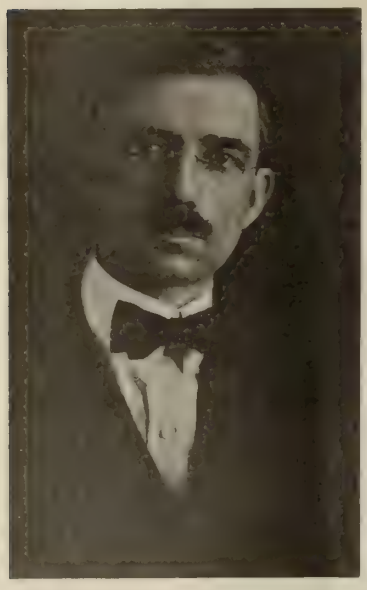
Olga Grey, who was once well known to Triangle patrons and has been seen to advantage in many striking vampire parts, is back with Triangle and has been cast for the role of the adventuress in Director Raymond Wells' new story, "Fanatics."

Yearsley Comes to First National

New Publicity Man Brings to the Circuit an Experience Gained by Five Years with Australasian Films.

BRINGING to New York a new perspective on the subject of motion picture publicity, Clarence L. Yearsley took up, on October 1, his new duties in the headquarters of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Mr. Yearsley has had much experience in film exploitation in Australia. His first work there was early in 1912 with the Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Company. When later the concern was amalgamated with seven others under the name of Australasian Films and Union Theaters he continued at the head of the publicity service and there remained until he left the island continent last April.

With the Williams company Mr. Yearsley was spending a hundred thousand dollars annually in publicity. General Manager Williams of the First National, who had introduced his new advertising man to a World representative, said so far as he knew Mr. Yearsley was the first man to write a full newspaper page advertisement for a motion picture. This was five years gao in Australia.



Clarence L. Yearsley.

Mr. Yearsley handled the publicity for the forty-two houses in Australia directly under the control of the Australasian, as well as those theaters in New Zealand, that were supplied film by the company—approximately 60 or 75 per cent of the shows in the country. Then by way of added duties there were the company's affiliations in Queensland.

The newcomer to New York told an interesting story of how Charles Chaplin was first featured in Australia. Just by the way, one of Mr. Yearsley's major duties now will be the preparation of publicity for Mr Chaplin, owing to the comedian's just starting in to fulfill his contract for eight pictures with the First National. It developed toward the end of a week, in the early part of 1914, that the company had no feature film for the coming seven days, and Harry Lauder was in town and undoubtedly would collect all the loose amusement change in the big city.

Mr. Yearsley learned upon inquiry there was a two-reel Keystone that had just arrived. He said he would look at it. It was the first Sennett picture of that length to reach Australia. "Caught in the Cabaret" was its title. The publicity man saw real advertising possibilities in the work of Chaplin, and he prepared his announcements accordingly. He spread quarter pages through the newspapers. On Monday night he went to hear Lauder. On Tuesday evening he dropped in at the theater where the Chaplin was being shown. He had heard the public laughing at Lauder, but at the antics of Chaplin the men and women out front were shrieking. The significance of the contrast was not lost on Mr. Yearsely. The work of an unknown screen player was more than topping the hilarity engendered by the physical presence of the greatest comedian on the English vaudeville stage. That "engagement" marked the begining of Chaplin's popularity in Australia, which has continued to this day; and Mr. Yearsley is authority for the statement that Chaplin has remained the most popular screen player in that country.

There was a clean-up in Australia with Billie Burke in "Gloria's Romance." The forty thousand feet were reduced by four thousand, and the serial cut into six features of equal length. With the six thousand feet in "Tillie's Punctured Romance" the same scheme was followed, except that the latter was divided into three periods of about two thousand feet length—a treatment to which it just happened the story was easily amenable. These episodes were run on alternating weeks.

Mr. Yearsley has been in the United States all summer, much of his time having been spent in a motor trip looking into motion picture conditions on the Pacific Coast and—fishing. He has enjoyed his rest and looks fit. He says his work here will not be new to him, as the First National is organized largely on the lines of the successful concern with which he recently has been connected. He said that not only will he prepare such advertising as may be required by the First National—which it is believed will become increasingly important—but also he will write publicity for exhibitor use on all the pictures to be issued by the company, "consumer advertising," as it were. This publicity later will be available by all houses showing these pictures.

Tom Mix in Features

WILLIAM FOX announces as the latest star of the Fox exclusive feature series Tom Mix, most famous motion picture cowboy. For the last ten months Mr. Mix has been starring in comedies on the Fox program. His entry into the five and six reel class of subjects will be greeted with approval by his admirers.

Tom Mix's fame as a cowboy assures for him success in this newest move. The type of drama in which he will appear will be largely western, and will afford him ample opportunity to display the dare-devil "stunts" which have gained him the title of most fearless of screen players.

Tom Mix.

Tom's picture work is merely a chapter from the adventurous story of his life. Born on the Texan plains of a family noted for its daring and bravery, Tom early manifested his roving spirit. He enlisted when the Spanish-American war began, and served for some time as chief of scouts in Cuba. Thereafter he worked in a similar capacity in the Philippines, and carried on the difficult task of organizing the natives there into American army units.

At the time of the Boxer uprising in China Tom was there, attached to the Ninth Infantry. He was wounded at the Battle of Tien-Tsin so severely that, upon his return to the United States a few months later, he had to spend several months in a hospital.

Well again, Tom joined the Texas Rangers. He was leader of the band which hunted down and captured the notorious Shont brothers, a group of men engaged in running horses across the Mexican border.

After that Mix became deputy marshal in Texas. Then he heard of a meeting of cowboys who contemplated going into motion picture work. Tom joined them, and immediatly became their leader.

That was nine years ago. Since then Mix's work has been of such a character as to win him the distinction of being a great portrayer of western types on the screen.

ROTHAPFEL'S NEW THEATER NAMED "THE RIVOLI."

The pretentious playhouse at the corner of Broadway and Forty-ninth street, scheduled to open in December, under the direction of S. L. Rothapfel, will be known as The Rivoli. Hugo Reisenfeld, conductor of the Rialto orchestra, suggested the name, and it was selected as the best among the hundreds which had been under consideration. Around The Rialto there is a general feeling of satisfaction that the name of the new theatre begins with the "lucky R," which has been so prominent in Mr. Rothapfel's success. Mr. Rothapfel's first theatre in New York was The Regent. His shows there paved the way to the style of entertainment which has built up the popularity of The Rialto.

Kaplan Returning to Moscow

Russian Producer to Install American Laboratory Methods in His Studios.

WITH plans completed for the release in the United States of the screen productions of the Moscow Art Theatre, N. S. Kaplan, president of the Russian Art Film Corporation, has engaged passage from Vancouver for October 25, and will return to Moscow to continue the production of film features for the American market. Unless government obstacles intervene, he will have in his party a combination studio and laboratory manager and a cameraman, thereby assuring the continuation of the Russian repertory under the best possible auspices. The launching of the repertory in America has been a tremendous task because of the handicap of cutting and titling the pictures in New York, thousands of miles from the base of production. This handicap will be eliminated under the new programme, and the features will arrive in America ready for release.

Mme. Sophie Kaplan.

As intimated last week, Mr. Kaplan has obtained the co-operation of one of the most important distributing organizations in this country to market his productions. With a year's supply of features on hand before any release is made it is the intention of Mr. Kaplan and his associates in America to institute a program of one release a week. In addition to this program, later there will be a series of special features under the sole direction of Mme. Sophie Kaplan.

Mme. Kaplan was directing a chain of superior motion picture theatres in Russia when Mr. Kaplan began to market there the productions of the Moscow Art Theatre. Their marriage followed, and soon afterward, when the government accepted her offer to use her theatres as barracks for soldiers, they came to America. During the months that they have been here Mme. Kaplan has spent the greater part of her time in study of the American film industry, from production to distribution and presentation. She has read dozens of scenarios, but of one thing she is determined, she will stick to Russian stories.

"After reading many, many scenarios written by American authors," said Mme. Kaplan, "I am convinced that best results will be obtained by adhering to our previous policy of Russian stories for Russian stars. After all, the fundamental emotions are international and I believe that American playgoers will welcome the tense, dramatic plots and the quiet but effective methods of our stars. But I am also convinced that the best results can be obtained by a combination of our resources and yours. To achieve this result Mr. Kaplan and I have decided to install American laboratory methods in our studios. An American cameraman and laboratory manager to superintend the photography and the cutting and titling of our features should result in 100 per cent. efficiency.

"While Mr. Kaplan devotes his attention to the production of one five or six reel picture a week, I intend to produce one extraordinary feature a month. Both series will be released in America by the same distributing organization.

To this Mr. Kaplan adds that he expects to do for his American associates in Russia what they are going to do for him in this country. There will be an exchange of features and the first-hand knowledge of each individual will be utilized in the production of such features as will have a consistent appeal in both the oldest and the newest republics. Mr. Kaplan has maintained ever since he arrived in New York last spring that there was a splendid opportunity in Russia for the marketing of the right kind of American films.

"The time is not far distant when America and Russia will be working side by side for the achievement and advancement of the most popular expression of art—the motion picture."

Mahlon Hamilton

MAHLON HAMILTON, who has made an eviable reputation for himself in the legitimate drama and in the motion picture world, is adding to his laurels by his excellent work as Jack Ramsey, the secret-service operative, who is the hero of "The Hidden Hand," the Pathe serial which will be released in the early winter.

"The Hidden Hand" is known as Pathe's four-star serial in which Miss Doris Kenyon is the bright particular star, while Sheldon Lewis, Miss Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton are the featured members of the cast.

Mahlon Hamilton.

Mr. Hamilton has been on the stage for ten years and is known throughout the country as one of the most polished of the younger actors. He began his stage career in "At Yale," where he put over the "college hero stuff," as he himself describes it. Then he played with Jessie Bonstelle in "The Great Question." After that he was in the cast of "The Chaperon," the play with which Maxine Elliott opened her playhouse.

After playing in Charles Frohman's production of "Israel," he spent a season in vaudeville with William H. Thompson in a sketch called "For Love's Sweet Sake." He next played an important part in "Over Night," after which he made his debut in pictures with the Kinemacolor company in California. He was then selected by Blanche Ring for a leading part in "Claudia Smiles."

Motion picture fans who were struck with the part of Paul in "Three Weeks," will have the chance of seeing their idol as Jack Ramsey, as Mr. Hamilton enacted that role for the camera. He also played in "The Heart of a Painter," with Olga Petrova, and in "Final Judgment," with Ethel Barrymore. He played the lead in pictures opposite Gail Kane in New Mexico and later did a picture with Marguerite Clarke, called "Mollie-Make-Believe."

After the picture with Miss Clarke, he signed to play opposite Madam Olga Petrova, and played the lead with her in the following pictures: "The Eternal Question," "Extravagance," "Bridges Burned," "Black Butterfly," "Silence Sellers," "Unto the Death," "The Fall of Magdalene," and other successful pictures. After his engagement with Madam Petrova he played in several Lasky features, among them "An Undying Flame," "Law of the Land" and "Exiled."

He is well and favorably known for his work in stock throughout the United States, having been a member of stock companies in Washington, D. C.; Albany, N. Y.; Schenectady, N. Y.; Troy, N. Y., and Dayton, Ohio.

This is the first serial in which Hamilton has appeared, and he says it is more interesting than ordinary pictures. He says there is always something doing and time never hangs heavy on his hands.

SHIFT IN FOX RELEASES.

A change just made in the monthly schedule of William Fox's special features results in setting back one week each of the pictures originally scheduled for October. The revised order of releases places "A Rich Man's Plaything" for the week of September 30, instead of "Conscience." Following is the new schedule:

October 7, Gladys Brockwell in "Conscience"; October 14, Virginia Pearson in "Thou Shalt Not Steal"; October 21, George Walsh in "This Is the Life"; October 28, June Caprice in "Miss U. S. A."

Two Standard Pictures will be issued. These are "When a Man Sees Red" (October 7), William Farnum's superb melodramatic vehicle, and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," the second of the Fox Kiddies productions, which opened so successfully at the Globe theater, on Broadway

Interesting Educationals

Two Military Subjects, One Zoological, One Hunting, Two Economic, One Travel and One Horticultural and One Tropical Subject.

"Dogs of War" (Mutual-Gaumont).

THE training of dogs for use in the great war is an interesting subject contained in No. 75 of Reel Life. Here we see these intelligent animals taught to rescue wounded soldiers, carry messages, and do the various necessary things that can be done with fleetness and safety by canine aid. They leap all kind of obstacles with ease, are remarkably keen of scent, and are adept at discovering lost articles. The picture is enlightening and attractive.

"Making Army Rifles" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In Reel Life No. 75 will be found a well-detailed account of how rifles for the United States Army are made. A huge armory somewhere in America is shown, and within it the laborers at work making the barrels, stocks, butts and so forth, of the rifles. We discover by carefully watching the picture that there are minute details connected with the making of a rifle, such as aligning the sight, which require unusual attention, and competent handling. The museum of the armory, where old models are kept, is also interesting.

"Seals and Pelicans in Their Native Haunts" (Educational).

In this picture the seals as they congregate at Magail Island, off the coast of California, are given first place. Here we are given some fine views of the seals lying on the rocks and swimming about in the water. Closeups of a straggler, which poses unabashed before the camera and then hobbies off to join its comrades in the water, are interesting. We learn that they congregate at this island in July and shortly afterward move away in schools to their feeding grounds off the coast of Japan. The views of these animals starting out on their long journey in massive groups that bob up and down with the surf, are unusual sights.

Then come the pelicans at one of their favorite resorts, Anacapa Island. Here they make their nests and hatch their young, and move about in their grotesque fashion. A closeup of a pair of young pelicans restlessly awaiting the return of their parent with food, is interesting. Attractive photographs of the island at a little disance have also been included in the picture, showing swarms of birds flying about it.

"A Southland Deer Hunt" (Paramount-Bray).

In following the fortunes of Eltinge F. Warner, of "Field and Stream," on one of his dear-hunting expeditions to the Carolinas, the Bray cameraman succeeded in obtaining some excellent pictures for use in Pictograph No. 88. These scenes show the party starting out on horseback, accompanied by the hunting dogs. Finally, they come in shooting distance of some deer, when the actual shooting of a fine specimen is snapped by the cameraman. The closing scenes show the dogs fighting over the division of the spoil, and "The End of a Perfect Deer," as the sub-title reads, with the party partaking of venison steak, proves distressing to a hungry spectator.

"Soap Making at Home" (Paramount-Bray).

We may argue that bacon is much too dear to use for soap fat, and that dripping may be put to better use; but the fact remains that demonstration of the making of soap at home, which will be found in Pictograph No. 88, does seem to be a good argument on the side of economy. In the making of soap by the housewife the fat is boiled with water and then strained through cheescloth. Any impurities remaining will settle to the bottom of the dish in which the fat is set to cool, while any burnt color can be eliminated by reboiling the fat with pieces of raw potatoe in it. Lye is an important ingredient of soap, and with one part lye, two parts water and seven parts fat stirred to the consistency of a thin batter, with the addition of a few drops of perfume, a very nice toilet soap can be made.

"Drying Surplus Fruits and Vegetables" (Universal).

No. 42 of the Screen Magazine contains some useful hints on the drying of fruits and vegetables. It shows how the home-made drying rack constructed of lath and wire netting can be made, which is then fitted in a base of perforated galvanized sheet iron. The vegetables are then selected with care; varieties having large, woody cores being avoided. After blanching for six minutes, they are scraped and sliced, and when the surface moisture is removed, they are placed on the rack, where they are left from two and a half to three hours. The temperature beginning with 110 degrees, is raised gradually to 150 degrees. When thoroughly dried, they are packed away carefully in proper receptacles for future use.

"A Flying Trip Through Hawaii" (Educational).

One of the most attractive of scenic productions of recent date is found in the Lyman Howe pictures of Hawaii. These are in two reels and cover some of its most interesting features. The pictures are tinted and open with beautiful views of wooded hills, waterfalls and glimpses of sea coast. Then we are shown the natives fishing in the surf with throw-nets, a method which in spite of the exhilarating exercise obtained thereby, seems a rather slow method of getting big results. Then the surf riding takes our attention; and here we may say truthfully that such remarkable pictures of surf riding have never been seen before. They are delightful, and have been photographed at the Waikiki beach. There are also shown some interesting Hawaiian types, including a really beautiful young girl and an aged man of 107 years.

"Japanese Dwarf Plants" (Mutual-Gaumont).

An unusual picture, showing the various kinds of Jananese dwarf plants, will be found in Reel Life No. 75. In it is demonstrated the artistry of the Japanese in reproducing in miniature the famous gardens of Japan. Junipers, cedars and other kinds of plants and evergreens, some of them 150 years old, tiny fac-similes of the great trees of the forest. The picture is a novelty and is enjoyable especially to those interested in and appreciative of the wonderful art of the Japanese.

"Feeding An Army" (Pathe-International).

Scenes in this picture, which is being released through the Pathe Exchange, give a clear idea of how our army is being supplied with the food without which no soldier can make a success. This picture is very instructive and interesting and shows every detail, from the collecting of the food stuffs to the cooking of it at the army camps.

Chemists Make Wide Use of Films

Motion Pictures Form Important Part of Daily Programs at Recent National Exposition of Chemical Industries Held in New York.

AT THE RECENT National Exposition of Chemical Industries, held at Grand Central Palace, New York City, the moving picture as a means of demonstration was used to such an extent as to make the fact deserving of more than a passing comment. The fact that the moving picture film has made for itself an established place in the world of science and industry is only another of the many laurels already won for the most powerful of all educators. The following is a list of the films exhibited during the exposition, which ran from September 24 to 29:—

Water Powers of Canada, The—Dominion Water Power Branch—(4 reels).

Hydraulic Power Development—(4 reels).

Making a Giant Steam Turbine Engine—General Electric Company—(1 reel).

Triumph of the Ultramicroscope—Seeing Invisible Colloid Particles—(1 reel).
Milk Industry, The—(2 reels).
Preparation of Condensed Milk—(3 reels).
Sugar Industry, The—(4 reels).
Flour Industry, The—(2 reels).

Information concerning the origin of production or ownership of films in the above list, to which this information is not attached, may be had from the Bureau of Commercial Economics at Washington, which we understand lent its co-operation in the developing of this program.

Burton Holmes Brings Harvest of Films

Many Countries and Subjects Covered in This Season's Tour by Burton Holmes.

BURTON HOLMES has returned from his trip through many countries, to which he has traveled in the interests of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, and has brought with him numerous subjects of special interest.

From New Zealand, Australia, Samoa, Hawaii, China, Manchuria, Korea, Japan and Alaska have been brought back the widest possible variety of the most interesting scenes in the daily life of the people, in the characteristic setting of each country. The motion pictures have been especially taken to visualize the answers to many inquiries, such as "How is the new Government railway coming along in Alaska?"; "Do the Fiji Islanders still practice cannibalism?"; "Are Dawson, Atlin and Fairbanks still producing gold?"; "How do the geysers of New Zealand compare with those of the Yellowstone?" and "Can an American make money in any of these countries in raising rubber, or sugar, or bananas, or coffee?" etc. Motion pictures showing these and many more industries have been brought home, besides a large number of still pictures taken by the natural color photography process. The definite subjects of his coming winter's series will be announced later.

Burton Holmes' personal season of Travelogues begins November 4 in a circuit which includes Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and Pittsburgh. In January and the early part of February he will give his annual courses in New York, Brooklyn, Boston and Worcester.

Strand Exhibits Japanese Gardens

Beautiful Colored Pictures of Japan's Floral Beauty Exhibited in Strand Program.

THE Pathe Exchange, Inc., is responsible for one of the special educational numbers of the Strand theater program for the week of September 23. The scenes in this picture are especially beautiful and open with views along one of Japan's famously beautiful roads. Glimpses of this road through its fringe of cherry blossoms are unusually attractive. Then there are the iris gardens, and the beautiful Shibya Park. There is also present on the screen a type of joyous Japanese childhood picking oranges. The Educational Films Corporation of America was also well represented by one of the wonderful Ditmars pictures, entitled "Kangaroos." This is an exceptionally interesting picture which we have already reviewed in these pages.

Gaumont Gets Banana Industry

Interesting Illustration of the Manner in Which the Banana is Cultivated and Harvested in the Panama Region, Snapped by Gaumont Camerman.

REALIZING the importance of this subject, the Gaumont Company sent two of its most expert cameramen to Panama and points on the Gulf of Mexico to secure "The Banana Industry," which is the feature of Reel Life No. 77, released Thursday, October 18.

The banana is planted every few months, and its cultivation is about the simplest known; pruning away the sprouts being the only work done during the growth. The picture describes how a banana grove is made by felling the trees of a jungle, which rot very quickly on the rich tropical soil, and how the small roots or "eyes", are clipped from the roots of growing trees and planted among the decaying vegetation, and in a very few months the bunches of bananas are picked and the trees felled to make room for a new crop. As bananas must reach the market in perfect condition, great care must be exercised in handling them, and the loading and unloading is done by machinery.

Universal's New Contracts

Contracts Between Universal and U. S. Department of Agriculture and American Museum of Natural History Promise Interesting Things in Film.

THE FIRST official pictures from the U. S. Department of Agriculture to be handled by Universal under the terms of the contract recently entered into by the government, will be released shortly in the Screen Magazine. They will include some of the most interesting and dramatic studies of the work of the forestry bureau in preventing and fighting fires in the big forest reserves under government control. Other timely subjects will show the new methods of preserving vegetables by drying and by utilizing the cold pack.

In addition to the material that will appear in the Screen Magazine, special reels are now being edited and titled for release within an early date.

Universal has also made an exclusive arrangement with the American Museum of Natural History which will make it possible to secure pictures of many unique subjects that the museum alone has in its possession. The first of these will be shown in an issue of the Screen Magazine released about the middle of October. This arrangement was made largely through the co-operation of M. D. C. Crawford, editor of "Women's Wear" and assistant curator of the museum's textile division. Mr. Crawford and Mlle. Sumene, his associate, have already helped the editor of the magazine to secure some fine studies of the designs and color schemes of the ancient fabrics recently secured from the tombs of the aborigines of Peru, who lived a thousand years before the Incas. Artists are shown at work copying these unique and striking designs, which are to furnish the sartorial effects of the smartest dresses to be made during the coming year. New ideas in opera coats are also shown in process of evolution, from the magnificent fur garments of the primitive races of Sibera. Many other equally interesting and up-to-the-minute ideas will find expression in the Screen Magazine as a result of the progressive policy that is being put into effect.

"Bobby Bumps" for the Boys

Earl Hurd of Bray Studios Makes Cartoon Comedy with "Bobby" as Pitcher in "World Serious."

IN LOOKING for a comedy to tickle the fancy of the youngsters, especially the boys, the program-maker will do well to choose the "Bobby Bumps" animated cartoon, entitled "World Serious," from the pen of Earl Hurd of the Bray studios. This is one of the best of the Bray cartoons, and will appeal to any baseball fan, old or young, for Bobby handles his curves exceedingly well; and as for the fights that take place at regular intervals as to whether the verdict should be "safe" or "out," they are wholly realistic.

As the story goes, all summer long Bobby and his gang have been meeting the neighborhood teams on the corner lot, and while the personnel of the team had suffered several important changes, due to the moving of certain families to other climes and scenes, when the wind-up of the rival "Bullet-stoppers" to a match game for the championship. Bobby, of course, was a pitcher.

The great day arrived, and the scene was set for the thrilling combat. The game started, and in fact was well on its way toward a successful conclusion, with the score only twenty-six to thirty-four, in favor of the Bumps' team, when the "ump" pulled one that was hardly to the advantage of the losing side. Just as in regular games, the unfortunate arbiter of strikes and balls proceeds to get his with a vengeance and promptly relinquishes his position and takes refuge in the cellar of his family domicile.

No ball game can proceed without an umpire, and just when it seemed as though the game would have to be indefinitely postponed a brilliant idea struck Bobby. He would speak to the sporting blood of "Goldie," the supreme ruler of the Bumps' kitchen, who was forthwith induced to undertake the job, and the game proceeded. Just what happened to "Goldie," whose knowledge of the game is insufficient to the needs of the occasion, is mercifully veiled in a cloud of dust. A stirring number, of which the Bray studios may be justly proud, and which is included in Pictograph No. 88.

Chinese Telephone Exchange Filmed

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Obtains Familiar Views of Chinese Telephone Exchange in San Francisco.

ONE OF the most unique features of San Francisco's Chinatown is its telephone exchange, which is managed by a Chinaman named Loo Gum Shu, and in which pretty Chinese girls arrayed in all the glory of their native attire, manipulate telephone plugs day in, day out.

The pictures obtained by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., and which is included in a recent issue of the Hearst-Pathe News, take us through the narrow streets of Chinatown, with their gorgeously dressed store windows, to this telephone exchange of eleven hundred subscribers, with its fourteen Oriental maidens busily and politely serving its patrons. The picture gives a brief but clear idea of how the exchange is managed and forms a novel link in the big News Weekly.

Interesting "World Library" Issue

No. 19 of Selig World Library Contains Remarkably Well-Illustrated Subjects.

ONE OF the best issues of the Selig World Library is No. 19. The matter contained therein is interesting, well illustrated and instructive. The first number, entitled "Cabaret Entertainers of Tokio, Japan," is a novelty and also a revelation in the stagecraft of Japan. A couple of dancers do an exhibition dance on a green sward edging a river, after which another clever member of the company impersonates first a beggar, then an old woman, an American Indian and a pirate. Then comes the juggler, and the top spinner, describing feats unusual to our eyes, while we look on admiringly.

The second number is entitled "The Cocoanut Industry," and gives the best description of this industry that we have seen, starting with the planting of the sprouted cocoanut. The picture tells us that when the cocoanut palm is ten years old it commences to bear, and continues to produce for a period of seventy-five years; that the nuts are found among the feathery foliage at the top of the tree, and that a beverage called palm wine is made from the sap of the tree. We see the cocoanuts gathered and hauled to the river in wicker conveyances by single oxen, and then conveyed several miles down the river on rafts to a shipping point.

"Ostrich Farming" forms the third subject, which is briefly but interestingly covered. And lastly we are treated to some views of "Jerusalem, the Holy City," which are well explained in sub-title, and are clearly photographed and interesting. We are shown the old wall, which is pierced by eight gates, and also a modern wall, built at a more recent date; the mosque of Omar, beautifully designed, and the little town of Bethlehem, the birthplace of Jesus. The place on the river Jordan where the Israelites are supposed to have crossed into the Promised Land is shown, and also the spot where Jesus was baptized by John the Baptist. The Church of the Nativity, erected over the spot where Jesus was born and the wailing place of the Jews, are also features of interest.

Rialto Educational Program

Successful Presentation of Bulky Educational Program at Rialto Theater.

THE week of September 23 found an unusual balance of educational matter on the program of the Rialto theater, New York City. These educational offerings were presented in the usual artistic fashion associated with this theater, and covered two extensive subjects, in addition to the shorter bits found in the Rialto magazine. These were "Getting Acquainted with Bees," selected from among the Conquest pictures, and "Man's Triumph Over the Mighty Forest." The pictures are very excellent of their kind, and in each case features of these subjects have been covered that have been omitted from other screen illustrations on the same thing. For instance, the perilous work of the river rats in overcoming jams and guiding the logs down the river; while the bee picture shows the result of the work of the bee moth, which attacks the hives when the bees are allowed to become weakened with the cold, and which ruins whole hives, and other odd and interesting sides of the subject. The Rialto magazine included in its list of subjects some scenes of special interest taken in India.

Italian Letter

By Francesco Manelli.

IN MY previous letter I spoke of Italian literary luminaries who had found a field in cinematographic work for their activity and also a source of income which at first they had greatly despised. Some have arranged to write for certain cinematographic firms, while others have joined together with the object of establishing a society for the picturization of their literary productions. The producers of films have understood that it was necessary to impress the public not only with the name of favorite artists, but also with the importance of the subjects, hence have sprung up productions and adaptations with the consent of the authors and their licensees or without any consent at all the rights have expired.

Recently besides composing directly for the cinematograph, Gabriele D'Annunzio has allowed, in exchange for a large sum, his works to be adapted for cinematographic performances. "The Candle Under the Bushel" and "The Death of the Duke of Ofena" and "Giovanni Episcopo" and "The Gioconda," owing to being but little suited for such work on account of the clumsy way they were reduced, did not fulfill the producer's expectation or meet with public approval.

I hope that "Pleasure" and "The Iron," which are to be launched forth, one by Lombardo Teatro Film, and the other by the Tespi Film, may prove more successful.

The celebrated Neapolitan writer, Matilde Serao, after having authorized the reduction of "Adieu, Love," also authorized the reduction of "Punishment." The novels of Matilde Serao are chiefly of a psychological nature, very little adapted for cinematographic work, but they have lent themselves to the meteur en scene to fill the film with those wonderful Neapolitan views, together with superb surroundings, which the public also appreciates.

The novels of Umberto Notari are more suitable for cinematographic work, and also from a financial standpoint. The cinematographic firm counts upon this in the reduction of "The Train de Luxe" and "The Three Thieves."

Following up the line of reduction of novels, we cannot help pausing to examine the "Fatal Jewel" of Flavia Steno, which has been finished by Alfred De Rosa, the publisher. The "Fatal Jewel" follows, after a short interval, another work of the same publisher, "The Emigrant's Fleet." This production, which has already been launched on the market, met with a good reception notwithstanding the original clumsiness of the drama of Domenico Morello, and has been performed with great success in several Italian theaters. A better reception is in store for the "Fatal Jewel," a film that contains all the elements of success, adventure, psychology, and the novelty of some of the situations.

Giovanni Verga, the immortal author of the "Cavalleria Rusticana," has given his consent for the reduction of a "Story of a Capinera," a poetical and sentimental romance not very rich in dramatic action, but suited to rank as a first-class cinematographic work of art.

The prolific authoress of many popular novels, Carolina Invernizio, has announced the filming of a new group of three of her works: "Rina, the Angel of Alps"; "The Orphan Girl of the Ghetto," and "The Kiss of a Dead Maiden."

With reference to dramatic works, Giuseppe Adami, of whom I spoke in my last letter, and who is one of the most prolific authors of subjects for the cinematograph, and who is one of the strongest partisans of American films in general, and of the Triangle in particular, announces the early production of one of his comedies, entitled "White Hair," which some dramatic companies have already taken on their rounds.

Dario Niccodemi, one of the most popular authors of the Silentium Film, has allowed the production of the "Enemy" and of "The Remnant," which are ready.

We will soon have a production of "Saint John the Baptist" by the popular Sicilian author, Nino Martoglio, in the same interpretation as performed by the famous Angelo Musco with such success all over Italy. With "Saint John the Baptist" Angelo commences a series of his repertoire, and he endeavors to create a unique type of a low Italian comedian, and which hitherto was conspicuous by its absence. The merit is entirely to a new firm in the cinematographic line, the Cinema Drama of Count Alexander Panzuti, a gentleman who takes the greatest interest and is highly competent in cinematographic work.

The Veritas Film, for which A. De Rosa has the concession for the World, has just finished the work entitled "Causes and Effects," a reduction of the drama of the same name by the father of the present generation of dramatic authors, Paul Ferrari.

"Flames in the Shade," a drama by the much mourned dramatist and poet, Henry Butti, will be reduced for the cinematograph by a new firm, the Nida Film, and its principal part will be interpreted by a well-known Italian lyric artiste, Esa Raccanelli.

Of that brilliant writer of comedies and romances, Gerolama Rovetta, the Itala Film of Turin announces that the "Trilogia di Dorina" is ready, with Pina Menichelli as protagonist, while Count Alexander Panzuti has acquired the rights of reproduction for his other works.

Sem Benelli, the great poet and dramatist, who is considered by some as a rival of Gabriele D'Annunzio, is reported to have consented to the reduction of "The Ludicrous Supper," a drama of medieval customs, which is well known and appreciated by the Italian public.

The work, however, that will crown Italian cinematographic art is enti led "Jerusalem Free," the magnificent poem by Torquato Tasso. In connection therewith the artistic Manager Cav. Guazzoni has given up an excellent position in Rome for the specific purpose of initiating his new establishment with the same

It is clear that the tendency of Italian cinematographic art is still fluctuating, and the difficulty of finding subjects accounts for the impossibility of arranging a clear and definite program and renders it necessary to jump from Torquato Tasso to Carolina Invernizio.

The same applies to foreign productions, to which the Italian cineomatograph has frequent recourse. The Kenne Film has reduced "Female Justice," by Daniel Lesueur; Ermete Zacconi, the greatest Italian tragedian, has reduced "The Ghosts" of Henrik Ibsen; the Veritas Film has reduced "The Ass of Buridano," the well-known comedy of De Flers and Caillavet; "Nana" of Zola, "The Mysteries of Paris," by Eugene Sue, and "The Story of Thirteen," by Honore de Balzac, have been reduced for the cineomatgraph for the Caesar Film. Count Alexander Panzuti of the Cinema Drama is taking his subject from a short tale by Edgar Allan Poe, and founds his story of the "Tank," the marvelous English machine, on it; the Exceptional Film, by Baron Francesco Cacace, stages the "Story of a Sin," by Stefano Zeromska; the Tiber of Rome is reducing the "Forsaken Woman," of Balzac, and Armando Vay, the great Milanese publisher, announces "Intemperance," by Leone Tolstoi.

Names of well-known authors and unknown authors, titles of celebrated works and unknown works, pass into the cinematographic Italian papers, such as "Frou-Frou" of Meilhac; "Tosca," by Vittoriano Sardou; "The Heart of Rome," by Crawford; "Martyr," by D'Emery; "The Great Marniere," by George Ohnet; "Fabiola," by Wiseman; "The Roaming Maid," by Nicolette Willy; "Hamlet," by Shakespeare.

Musical operas and operettas follow the same fate if they contain subjects which interest the public, such as "The Duchesse of the Bal Tabarin," "Crispine and the Merry Wife," which quickly follow "The Gipsies" and "The Clowns," of Leoncavallo, and the two editions of "Cavalleria Rusticana," by Mascagni.

Feverish activity, efforts of the Italian cinematographic firms to supersede one another, prevail Every other day new firms and hirers of films spring up like mushrooms. Cinematographic papers appear, like flies around a jampot, in no way intimidated by the exorbitant price of paper and limitation of same as per government decree; monkeys, horses, bears take the part of the first actors; lyric artistes, dramatic artistes, operetta artistes, variety artistes are allured every day to the golden shores of the cinematographic world; even the ladies of the aristocracy do not despise the glories of the screen and its lucre. Three ladies of the Roman nobility have become cinematographic artistes, the Countess Di Frasso Dentice, the Marchioness Clelia Antici Mattei, and the Countess Saffo and the Federici.

In the meantime the American firms are going ahead, notwithstanding the abundant Italian productions. The Triangle occupies the most important cinematographic Halles, the Famous-Players is not forgotten, and Mr. Cazzulino of the Teatro Films announces that his last purchases for Italy are "Intolerance," "Madame Butterfly," and other works of equal importance.

ALMOST simultaneous with the announcement by William Fox, in the States, of the creation of a new department in the Fox service for the distribution of the "Standard" features a similar statement comes from Ernest Reed, the Fox manager in this country. Had they been transmitted by telegraph from one center the two pronouncements could scarcely have been better timed. I mention this because anything like definite concurrence in releasing arrangements between American houses and their English branches is the exception rather than the rule, and because it explodes a common fallacy. This fallacy is the greatest time waster that ever encroached upon the film business. It is the custom of waiting to see if a production is a success or a failure in the States before bringing it over to Europe, and one that explains the belated appearance on our screens of many notable subjects. National temperament is incompatible. I have known instances where acknowledged "frosts" in America have produced successful results in Great Britain. There is much to be said, therefore, in favor of the Fox plan. By it was had "A Daughter of the Gods," "Under Two Flags," and "Romeo and Juliet," on exhibition in London within reasonable time of their appearance in New York. Now ere "Jack and the Beanstalk" opens at the Globe theater we have it available for English exhibitors, followed up closely by "The Honor System," "Cleopatra," and the rest of the standard feature of Fox.

Drury Lane theater was used for a trade show of "The Whip," Maurice Townsend's production, recently. The sensational racing drama, with its railway smash thriller, was originally staged at Old Drury a few years ago, and was succeeded by a similar drama, "The Hope," which, if anything, contains more material for spectacular film production than "The Whip." Jay's Imperial Pictures are responsible for the distribution of "The Whip" on this side.

The Registration of Business Names Act has been extended to include joint stock companies registered in this country. The purpose of the measure, originally drafted to apply only to unregistered undertakings, is to enable a customer to know the firm with whom he is dealing. It is not sufficient now, for example, for the Columbia Film Company, Ltd., to appear simply as such upon its contracts, note paper, and stationery. The names of the directors must follow, and the real names only. Assumed names have been a get-away for enemy aliens long enough.

The six pictures which Chaplin is to make for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will be handled in this country by J. A. Walker. The purchase price of the British rights works out at about £10,000 per subject.

"Intolerance" begins another London season in a week or two, this time at the Prince's theater, Shaftesbury avenue. Something new, both in music and effects, will accompany its reproduction compared with its appearance at Drury Lane last April.

In connection with the Parliamentary Department of Information of the upper house of the English parliament a moving picture committee has been formed. Several important productions, I am informed, are already well under way, the majority being of a propagandist character.

Another important institution to enter the field of motion picture exhibition is the Polytechnic Institue in Regent street, an imposing building just off Oxford Circus. Commencing the first of next month (October) it is to be opened as a London home for big feature productions, giving three shows daily at 3, 5 and 8 p. m. In view of the Polytechnic Association's work in facilitating travel abroad moving pictures of an educational nature will also be specially presented.

Board of Trade returns of the export and import into this country of films from abroad for the past few months show somewhat remarkable fluctuations. The value of our imports in June, for instance, is less than half those for May. The exact figures are: April, £95,000; May, £104,000, and June, £40,000. The value of films imported from abroad during the first six months of the present year is close upon half a million pounds, a slight decrease upon last year's total. The value of our exports over the same period amounts to £45,000, and of re-exports (films imported for re-export from London), £42,000.

Still another censorship. This time of parcels. Happily it is not a sweeping measure and is designed to apply only to parcels consigned from Great Britain to neutral countries in Europe, of which there are only seven. It is in no way intended to impede or affect existing arrangements for the shipment of goods from this country to allied or neutral states outside Europe.

A well known exchange, taking a page from the book of its American associates, is making a determined stand for the introduction of advance deposits upon its film contracts. Although the deposit asked is only a comparatively small percentage of the contract price, the Exhibitors' Association is up in arms against it. As anything like a general practice the principle of cash in advance for films has not been insisted upon by British renting houses except in the case of exhibitors of doubtful credit. On the other hand I know of one famous film which fulfilled 500 engagements in the United Kingdom and cash account had to be settled in full before the copy was delivered. The renter's argument in this case was that as he had to pay cash for his film he did not see why the exhibitor should be entitled to a long credit.

The Ideal Film Renting Co., Ltd., producers of "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" and "[illegible]ks and Faces," announce a superpicture in "God's Children," with a theme that may not coincide with popular views on the subject in the States. It is a multi-reel production concerning the achievements of a mulatto who rises to fame as a politician. But he is denounced by his opponents who discover his origin, and in his attendant downfall wreaks his own revenge. The slogan the producer has picturized is that the shape of one's face or the color of one's skin are unimportant details in estimating the qualities of manliness. It is a novel theme, well developed, brilliantly acted, and specially recommended for Ohio.
